PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS. SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 27, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer

Almighty God, Thou dost teach us the higher unity of interests that we have in the world by the very sacrifices we are called upon to make for the general good. By the bond of sympathy with which Thou hast brought us together in the common interests of mankind, Thou hast drawn us to Thyself. Duty is our highest word. We pray that this day we may fulfill the divine plan of life by accomplishing all that duty calls upon us to do in God's name. We ask Thy blessing upon us in the performance of the duties of this day. For Christ's sake.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS OF BANKING ACT.

Mr. WORKS. I have here a letter from Mr. C. E. Holcomb, president of the First National Bank, of Anaheim, Cal., suggesting some needed amendments to the Federal reserve banking act, which I ask be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK, Anaheim, Cal., January 22, 1917.

Hon. John D. Works, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Hon. John D. Works,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dean Sire: In regard to the Federal reserve bank act, it has occurred to the writer that you might consider some suggestions from the country bankers' view of these changes.

Up to the present time the Federal reserve bank act, although undoubtedly an improvement over the former national-bank act, has not accomplished what was expected of it, nor will it do so until the great majority of State banks and trust companies come under it also.

Up to the present time there have been more national banks liquidated and gone out from the national system than State banks which have joined it. In a recent number of the American Bankers' Magazine there were 135 banks reported organizing in the United States, 123 under State charters and 72 under national charters. There are about 35,000 banks in this country, over 7,000 national, or a little better than an average of 20 per cent, yet not quite 10 per cent of new banks organizing are coming in under national charters.

The management of the twelfth Federal reserve district is at present adopting a peculiar method in regard to the "free-check" collection system. Now, I wish to state that the banks of which I am in charge have never charged exchange on their customers' checks, although this custom is a source of considerable profit, and is a legitimate source of revenue on account of expense connected with the handling of these checks. Take Arizona, for instance. I understand the banks in that State offered to clear customers' checks at a rate of $1 per thousand. This the twelfth reserve bank refused to consider, but is sending checks for clearing on Arizona banks and other places through Wells-Fargo Express, and is paying the express company about $2.75 per thousand for this free collection, and on points not reached by the express company much supplied to the express company much more for the same service. This "free 'clearing of customers' checks is a boon to eastern mall-order houses and a detriment to local m

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a resolution of the Legislature of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIRD STATE LEGISLATURE, SENATE CHAMBER.

Senate memorial 3.

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Third Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents—
That of the 73,000,000 acres of land comprising the State of Arizona, approximately one-half are reserved by the Government of the United States;

That over these reserved lands the State of Arizona exercises no supervision nor jurisdiction;
That 20,000,000 acres of these lands are reserved by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of the Indian peoples in the State of Arizona;
That these Indian reservations are so situate as to prevent a systematic development and extension of county, State, or national highways without the cooperation and assistance of the Government of the United States;
That the Congress of the United States in enacting a most beneficent national road law has wholly failed to make any provision for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon the lands reserved by the Federal Government to the use and benefit of its Indian wards.
Whereas adequate transport the contraction of the property of the contraction of the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon the lands reserved by the Federal Government to the use and benefit of its Indian wards.

Whereas adequate transportation facilities are a vital factor in the prosperity and civilization of any country, and are essential to the development of its agriculture and manufactures, to the working of its forests and mines, and to the spread of education and enlightenment among its citizens; and

Whereas the public roads of Arizona are for a large percentage of her citizens, and especially for the 42,000 Indian wards of the Federal Government, the only avenues of transportation leading from the point of production to the point of consumption or rail shipment, and these avenues are only now in the process of their development; and and

whereas a very large portion of the State of Arizona is held in reserve by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of its Indian wards, and these reservations are so situated as to prevent any economic or systematic road-building activities on the part of the State government, as continuous highways are rendered impracticable; and
Whereas a further inequity results from the fact that traffic in its development takes no account of reservation and State boundaries, and the State government is powerless to provide for the extension of its highway system through the adjoining and intervening reservations; and and the State government is powerless to provide too the extension of its highway system through the adjoining and intervening reservations; and

Whereas the improvement of highways should be commensurate with their importance, and a system of highways upon the Indian reservation in Arizona would form the only avenue by which the Indian nations could transport their products to a market or over which the many thousands of tourists from all parts of the United States could pass to view the marvelous beauties of our natural wonders, the ruins of a civilization old and forgotten before the first prehistoric mound builder raised his primitive altar to an unknown god, and the pastoral and communal tribal life of Indian tribes to-day whose customs and laws antedate the coming of the Spanish conquistadores in search of their fabled city of gold: Therefore be it Resolved by the senate and the house of representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona. That the development of the material resources of the Indian peoples of Arizona can best be furthered, their material prosperity best enhanced, their education and civilization more readily achieved, and that close association with civilization which has proved to be the efficient means of equipping them to share in the responsibilities of life most certainly assured by means of highways constructed and maintained over and upon the lands reserved by the Government of the United States to their use and benefit; and be it further

Government of the United States to their use and benefit; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact any legislation which may be necessary to provide adequate appropriations for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon Indian reservations in Arizona joining to and in conjunction with the system of State highways.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Representatives of Arizona in Congress: and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 8044) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 8045) regulating sale of timber on forest reserves in Montana; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 8046) for a launch basin, quarantine station, Galveston, Tex.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 8047) for rural sanitation under supervision of Public Health Service; to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

A bill (S. 8048) to promote the improvement of rural education: to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A bill (S. 8049) for improvement of San Antonio Arsenal, San Antonio, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 8050) providing for the establishment of a bathing beach at the Tidal Basin, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am somewhat in doubt as to what committee this bill should be referred, though I know the committee to which I think it should be referred is the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes the bill should be referred to that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. My own idea is that it ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, although the place for the location of the bathing beach to which the bill refers is under the control of the War Department. I have no objection to the reference of the bill to any appropriate committee, but it seems to me it should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, although that committee has, as a matter of law, no jurisdiction over the Potomac Park, where the Tidal Basin is located. It will, however, be satisfactory to me to have the bill referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. If there should be any objection to that reference, later on it can be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (S. 8051) granting an increase of pension to Lucretia Whitt; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment providing that no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertising of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, etc., shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment proposing to reduce the appropriation for purchase and distribution of valuable seeds from $243,720 to $50,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the public-buildings bill (H. R. 18994), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20079), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FLOOD CONTROL.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14777) to provide for the control of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Cal., and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If there be none, the morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. The pending amendment is the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, on page 29, line 17, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$2,000; in all, $16.860," and to insert "$4,000; in all, $18.860," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Kickapoo Reservation, Kans., including pay of superintendent, $14,860; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $18,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 29, after line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 7. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $68,800: for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $74,800.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 8. For the support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for purchase of additional land, $8,000; in all, $82,800.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does that amendment propose an increase?

Mr. ASHURST. It does. Mr. SMOOT. I notice that it is an increase of $8,000, and I take it for granted that it is proposed for the purchase of additional land. Will the Senator having the bill in charge advise the Senate as to the necessity of purchasing this land at Mount Pleasant, Mich.?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to be unkind, but I desire to say that it is very difficult to hear anything in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, and it is because there are so many conversations going on in the Chamber that hardly anyone can hear. I stated that the amendment offered by the committee proposes to increase the appropriation for the Indian school at Mount Pleasant, Mich., by $8,000. I take it for granted that the increase is for the purchase of additional land at Mount Pleasant, Mich.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator advise the Senate as to the real necessity of additional land there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; particularly at this time.
Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this item was estimated for by the department. When the question was raised in committee, one of the Senators made strenuous objections to it; this very item was argued for some days. Finally the committee unani-mously agreed to it for the reason and upon the ground that the additional 100 acres are necessary; that the land thereabout has a value of about $100 an acre or more, that it could be purchased for from about $60 to $80 per acre, and that it was necessary for the use of this school. It never could be purchased, in sary for the use of this school. It hever could be purchased, in the judgment of the committee, at any lower price.

Mr. SMOOT. The price proposed to be paid for the hundred acres would be $80 per acre; but what I was trying to ascertain was, if the land is not purchased at this time, will it interfere at all with the school at Mount Pleasant, Mich.?

Mr. ASHURST. If the land is not purchased at this time, the committee force that it may fall into other hands when it the committee fears that it may fall into other hands, when it would be almost impossible to purchase it. At this time the land can be purchased at a more reasonable figure than the committee hope or believe it can be acquired for in the future. For that reason we believe it would be economy at this time to purchase the land, which is needed as pasturage for the dairy cows of the school.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there may be some local conditions to justify the Senator from Arizona in saying that the land can be purchased now cheaper than it could be at any time in the future; but with the conditions existing generally it seems to me that lands are as high to-day as they will be for many years to come, with a likelihood of their being less valuable, rather than more valuable. I will ask the Senator if this matter was not presented to the committee in the other House, and did they not consider this very item?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Mr. SMOOT. And did not the committee of the other House reject it?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true; but before the Senate votes let me be just enough to the committee to read the evidence, or a part of it, that moved the Senate committee in its action. I read from page 272 of the Senate hearings the statement of Mr. Meritt, as follows:

Meritt, as follows:

In our estimates we requested an appropriation for a dormitory, $25,200, and for purchase of additional land, $8,000. I stated to the committee that we would forego the request for the dormitory until next year, if you would allow us the $8,000 for the purchase of the land this year. We have at the Mount Pleasant school 320 acres, of which 25 acres are occupied by buildings and yards; 32 acres are woods, and 16 acres in orchards. The land available for agricultural purposes or pasturage is also used—178 acres are under cultivation and 69 acres are used for pasturage. Eighty acres of land are offered at $100 per acre, and although this land is within the city limits of Mount Pleasant, the price asked is no more than that asked for farm land farther away. The land is located immediately in front of the buildings of the Mount Pleasant school and it is very much needed.

Whet is, the evidence

That is the evidence.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona says that this item has been estimated for. Those of us who are at all familiar with the Indian Service know that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his assistants become selfcentered in their work and naturally ask for everything that they think will in any way help them. We can not therefore follow the estimates of that department. The department asks for anything that it thinks will do any good, and we can not give everything that would be useful. We are obliged to consider the other charges upon the Treasury and to limit our appropriations to a fair distribution of what we have to distribute. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is not an immediate requirement; the matter can go over until next year. The testimony shows that it is proposed to pay $100 per acre for this land, and there are 80 acres intended to be purchased. The school has 320 acres of land now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a splendid farm.

Mr. SMOOT. It does seem to me with only 300 students-that being over an acre apiece—that that quantity of land would be sufficient at least for this year. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the question on the amendment,

Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. Mr. GRONNA. I call for a division on the adoption of the amendment, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 30, after line 4.
Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] at this time. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has requested that the Minnesota items be passed over until he can reach the Chamber.

I will ask if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Minnesota? The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona requests that the Minnesota items be passed over. In the absence of objection, that course will be pursued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as stated by the Secretary, was, on page 30, after line 18, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the application of Richard Daeley to enter lot 8, section 31, township 147 north, of range 30 west of the fifth principal meridian, Cass Lake, Minn., land district, containing 1½ acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof, as assignee of Evaline Gallagher, widow of Edward S. Gallagher, and to issue patent thereon to said Richard Daeley upon proof of his compliance with the requirements of the law and regulations issued thereunder relative to making soldiers' additional homestead entries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that all the Minnesota items are to be passed over?

Mr. ASHURST. That amendment may be agreed to; but I will ask that the remainder of the Minnesota items go over until the junior Senator from Minnesota, who is a member of the committee, is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Let this item go over also. Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, is there any necessity for this amendment going over? Let me explain what the amendment is.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, this amendment can be agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do I understand that the Richard Daeley amendment has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not as yet been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator explain what that amendment is. Mr. McCUMBER. I will do so very briefly, if the Senator will allow me. It affects 11 acres of land, comprising the point of a little peninsula running out into Cass Lake.

When the reservation there was opened up for settlement under the homestead laws, it was presumed that all of the homestead laws would apply to that land, including the laws governing soldiers' homesteads. One Richard Daeley made application to enter this little tract of 11 acres of stony land-I do not suppose it is worth much for agricultural purposes-and built a house thereon at a cost of about $700, as I now remember. The local office accepted his application, but when it came to the General Land Office, that office decided that this land was not subject to the soldiers' additional homestead scrip, and held it open for cancellation. I think their decision was right; but I called at the office of the Secretary of the Interior and asked the Secretary to hold the matter open until I could secure the passage of a special bill for the relief of Mr. Daeley. He did so. That was in 1915. A bill was drawn, which the Secretary recommended, and it was passed by the Senate. It was then reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands in the other House, and it has been there for a year on the calendar, but we do not seem to be able to have it acted upon.

There is no appropriation involved in the amendment. It is simply designed to allow a man who has placed $600 or $70) in the way of improvements on a little tract of 11 acres that is not worth anything to anyone else to complete his application

Mr. SMOOT. Were these Indian lands, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. They were Indian lands, but were thrown open to settlement.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask where the land is located?

Mr. McCUMBER. On Cass Lake.
Mr. NELSON. There is no iron ore in the land, is there? Mr. McCUMBER. No. As I understand, it is just rocks. I did have a photograph of it, but I do not find it in my desk.

Mr. SMOOT. Evidently the entry was not made by Richard Daeley, but by Edward S. Gallagher, as I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. The entry was made on soldiers' additional scrip, which can be assigned, and Mr. Daeley purchased the scrip for the land.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment.
Mr. McCUMBER. The land is worth very little.
Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that this land was acquired by Mr. Daeley for the purpose of building a summer cottage. He has made improvements on it to the amount of about $1,500. The amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and there is no objection to it from any quarter, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as stated by the Secretary, was, on page 35, after line 16, to strike

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000, of which amount not exceeding $4,500 shall be expended for salaries.

And insert:

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000, of which amount not exceeding $1,000 may be expended for the purchase of two automobiles, and not exceeding $4,500 of which shall be expended for salaries."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, what action has been taken in regard to the amendments on pages 32, 33, and 34?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Minnesota items were passed

Mr. NELSON. I wish that they might be proceeded with. I do not care about having them go over. They are amendments suggested by my colleague [Mr. Clapp]. He has no opposition to them, and I am satisfied with them.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, the reason I made the request that the Minnesota items go over was because the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] sent word to the chairman of the committee asking that the Minnesota items go over until he could be in the Chamber. That was the only reason for the request. I am willing, however, to go ahead.

Mr. NELSON. Very well, let them be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment last stated by the Secretary.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before we proceed further with the discussion, there are a number of Senators here who seem to be under the impression that a great deal of the money provided for the conduct of the affairs of the Indians is being They are right to a great extent. Much of it, ninetenths of it, in my opinion, is being wasted.

Mr. THOMAS. Our impression is your conviction.

Mr. LANE. But Senators are not attacking the right items.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then show them to us.

Mr. LANE. I will endeavor to do so. Among them are the items for the support and civilization of the Indians. The Indians are receiving no support, except in cases where they are actually going hungry or starving, and then the relief accorded them is but meager and seemingly rendered grudgingly and to avoid the publicity and criticism which it would bring to the bureaucratic system. They are thrown upon their own resources, under the theory that the Indian must be compelled to do business as the white man does it, and adopt the white man's ways, and after a while become self-supporting, the while he is given no opportunity to do so. He is restricted to the reservations upon which he has been located. He is not given a plow or a harrow or supplied with anything with which to carry on the work of a farmer. He is put to farming. I presume, for the reason—I know of no other—that an Indian can not become a successful farmer. They were never farmers; they are not fitted for that kind of life; and, as I have said, until quite recently they were given nothing with which to farm. So far as the great majority of the Indians are concerned, they have not become civilized. The condition of the Indian, as a rule, is deplorable throughout the country. live under the most wretched circumstances. That condition may not exist in the case of the Indians referred to in the amendment last read, but we found, in checking over matters in regard to schooling, that even the Cherokees in North Carolina, one of the oldest and best known tribes of Indians in the East near here, have no school facilities for quite a number of their children, and so they have not been civilized to the extent of acquiring a common-school education; and as you go west the condition is still worse.

Not one cent of the money appropriated by many of these items goes to the benefit of the Indians, but is devoted to the employment of a large number of white men and women, who are well-meaning, honest, and good people, I think, as a rule, although a great many weaklings are found among them. They are so circumscribed, however, that they are under the penalty of losing their places if they go too far or take the initiative in the effort to change and shape conditions, in order to get them on a proper basis or reorganize them for the better. Under these circumstances the people who really have the interests of the Indians at heart become discouraged and soon leave the service, and the Indians are left to drift along in the old, old way, which has been followed for years with ill results to our helpless wards.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] brought out in some hearings in connection with one tribe of Indians in his State—and after a while I intend to read something from what the Senator said in connection with some general remarks I intend to make on the subject-that the condition of one tribe yes, and he might easily have said, just as truthfully, many others, but at least one great tribe of Indians on a reservation in his State-had deteriorated; their birth rate was dropping off and they had no opportunity whatever to make anything of themselves. With large holdings of land worth millions of dollars, some of it the best land in the State, land that would grow 40 bushels of wheat to the acre, the Indians were without a bushel of wheat for seed and without plows to break the ground or any opportunity to cultivate it. such an extent are the Indians restricted in that State that one Indian living in a district is forbidden to cross into another district on the same reservation without a written permit from the farmer or the superintendent. He is practically "a ticket-of-leave" prisoner and is forbidden to go for groceries or even to go to see his mother if she is sick, or to go to look at the tribal herd of cattle, or to cross the line for any purpose whatever without this written permit; and if he is bold enough to go without it, they can and do jail him. They have assumed the right and power to do it, and they do do it. They thus keep the Indian tied down in his little, narrow, restricted district, without the right to consult with his fellow Indians as to what will be a good course or a bad one to pursue in betterment of the conditions. Councils among them are forbidden. It is a system of petty tyranny, They are said to be discouraged from writing, and I am told are made afraid to write to you or any Senator here about their grievances, or relate the tale of the wrongs that are visited upon them.

These are some of the wrongs which we authorize in this bill. I am going to go through a lot of it after a while. Those are the items that ought to be stricken out. They are all estimated for by the people who expend the money without any restriction, practically without any check. No inspector dares go and tell the exact truth about conditions and put himself upon record-at least, I know one who did, and he lost his place for doing so. So it drifts along and drifts along. It is the most contemptible legislation that comes before us. It would not matter so much if we took the money and spent it for picture shows for the Indians, or threw it away, for that matter; but the effect that it produces upon a lot of ignorant, unfortunate, and helpless people is of incalculable damage.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LANE. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if one of the tribes to which he refers in Montana is not the one where some $980,000 has been expended on an irrigation project?

Mr. LANE. That is one of them.

Mr. CURTIS. And an item of $25,000 is carried in this bill for the continuation of the same project.

Mr. LANE. That is to keep it in repair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to inquire how much land is irrigated as the result of that expenditure of $980,000?

Mr. LANE. Maybe 40 acres, or 100 acres. There might be a couple of hundred acres; I do not know; but it is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. CURTIS. Sixteen hundred acres.

Mr. LANE. I do not know just how many acres it is, but the project covers thousands of acres. The water is running there freely. I have been on those ditches; but the Indian can not use them. It would require on his part sufficient capital to build him a house, barns, and fences, to purchase farming implements, and to have the stock required to farm and cultivate his He has not a 10-cent piece, nor any way to get it.

Why, a year or two ago, after this money had been expended for those Indians, there were 800 little children there without school facilities, not even learning the English language except as they picked it up. They were so close to starvation that they were eating prairie dogs, and had cleaned the reservation pretty well out of them. When they could get it, they were glad to get a skunk to eat. That odoriferous article of diet was considered a luxury by them; and I tell you when you get hungry enough, and if the day should come when you do, you will eat skunk and thank God for skunks; and they were in that condition.

We have been civilizing them for fifty-odd years. Nobody can successfully dispute any statement I make with regard to them. They can dispute it, but I can prove it. it up, and it was reported upon by the special Government inspectors who were operating at about that time, or had been, under our commission of inquiry in regard to the affairs of the Indians; and it was as a member of that commission that I visited this reservation. There has been no improvement. There is no hope for the Indians under this method. The only thing to do, and the thing that it is our duty to do, is to change the system.

I am not here to say that the heads of departments are dishonest or that they are criminals; but under them there has grown up a method of treating the Indian that is criminal, and if it were traced down it would be found that amounts running up into millions of dollars, if you please, have been wasted-criminally wasted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon if he has found that the Indians have protested against expenditures, either out of their own funds or out of the Treasury, where appropriations have been made for school purposes? Is it not true that the protest they are making is a protest against the vast expenditure of money for irrigation purposes, which they claim is of no benefit to them?

Mr. LANE. Yes; that is true. They have protested that. They protest the system itself. They protest the fact that Congress appropriates money for putting over them a lot of little tyrants or tyrannical rulers that make their lives unhappy and lead them nowhere. They have submitted to me a bill asking to be relieved, and I am going to present it after a while as a substitute for this; and if it could be passed you would not have to spend $200,000 to inaugurate the system which they think, and which looks to me reasonable, would do away with this one and give them an opportunity to carry on their own affairs.

I know of one Indian in Oregon who is quite a wealthy stockman, a man who can go to any bank in that part of the country and get all the money he wants or all that he can use, and does it; and everybody knows him and likes him and respects him. He has a fine ranch, and yet he is one of these restricted people. They can at any time take the property which he has made without one particle of help from the Government and put it under their charge, and not let him buy a can of tomatoes, if you please, or a blanket without their permit; and they will do it, too, if he ever rises up and questions the method of administration of these affairs, or if he dares go to them and say, "Here, why don't you let my business alone? I am a better business man than you, and it is proven by the results. Look at your property and then look at mine; and I am going on to do as I please." They will clap him right into jail and put restrictions about him, and break him and his spirit in that way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington? Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is on the Committee on Indian Affairs and has studied this subject for a number of years. I should be very much interested in hearing his suggestions as to the general policy that ought to be pursued toward the Indians. In that connection I should like to ask the Sena-tor if he thinks any harm would be done if we should abolish the entire Indian Service?

Mr. LANE. Why, it would be the greatest godsend in the world to the Indians, and it would save the whites of the country millions and millions of dollars of expenditure every year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator prepared to say what the result would be if we simply quit this business of approprinting money for Indian affairs and just defeated the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. LANE. That would be a good thing to do, and I am working to that end now. I am going to do more.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to hear from the Senator from Washington on that subject. Do I understand that he concurs with the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not prepared to say that I will go at one step to the length which the Senator from Oregon proposes; but I do concur with the Senator from Oregon in the general criticism that there is a vast amount of needless and worse than needless expenditure of money in the administra-tion of Indian affairs. Too large a percentage of the appro-priations of the Government for Indian affairs goes in what is called overhead charges. The expense of administration eats

From contact with certain Indian affairs in my State, and observation of reservations there, I concur in the opinion stated by the Senator from Oregon that little progress is being made toward the betterment of the Indians as a whole. expected to make any formal statement on the question now, but my impression is that the Indian Service, in certain branches of it which I have observed, is not desirous of bringing the Indian to a self-supporting basis. My impression isand it is a fixed opinion, based upon long observation-that in certain branches of the Indian Service the desire and purpose is to keep the Indian perpetually in a state of tutelage.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the purpose of maintaining, I presume, an opportunity to continue to supervise him?
Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the natural inference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say this, Mr. President: Twenty-odd years ago, after giving a good deal of study to this subject, I thought that in less than 10 years we would be able to terminate the Indian Bureau; and there did seem to be some progress made at that time in the direction of putting the Indians in a status where they would be required to be self-dependent and self-supporting. Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this discussion is somewhat general, because, as I understand from the Senator from Oregon, the several appropriations which the bill contains for the support and civilization of Indians are appropriations the moneys of which seldom accomplish the end desired. From what I have been told by one of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it would seem that this criticism can be applied to the appropriations for continuing the construction of irrigation systems, and particularly in the State of Montana. I am told that something like a million dollars have been expended in the construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian This bill carries, on page 37, an added appropriation of $25,000, to be immediately available, and which presumably is designed to operate the system as far as it has been constructed rather than to increase the system itself or add to the system itself.

was informed, much to my surprise, by one of the members of the committee who is not present, that thus far the land re-claimed amounted to about 23 acres. The Senator from Oregon claimed amounted to about 23 acres. informs me that about 600 acres have been placed under water and are susceptible of irrigation. Upon the assumption that a million dollars have been expended for the purpose, we have an aggregate tax per acre of $1,333.33 for placing water upon it. I do not pretend that this is an average

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, at the time I visited the reservation there was about that amount under irrigation. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] informs me that later this year there were about 1,600 acres under

Mr. THOMAS. Sixteen hundred acres. Well, even at 1,600 acres the cost per acre is about $625, and that is prohibitive. It would be far better to buy land somewhere, even as expensive land as the lands of Michigan are, and for which an appropriation is made to acquire an additional quantity, than to squander any more of the people's money upon such schemes as this.

It is true the bill provides that the money shall be reimbursable. I do not think that means anything, however. It can not if the initial cost of making the land cultivable is anything like what seems to be the case.

The bill contemplates that the Government will receive its advances back from profits to be realized upon the reclaimed land under process of cultivation. That furnishes but a poor prospect for any return of the money to the Treasury. remedy may be the abolition of the Indian Bureau, as suggested; and I am quite satisfied that we would lose nothing by abolishing it and starting over again. The new method of administration might not be entirely satisfactory; but assuming the truth of what is charged here with regard to the manner in which these appropriations are applied, we certainly can not be any worse off by making the radical change in Indian administration which is suggested by the Senator from Oregon.

As I stated yesterday, we have expended something like $246,000,000, if I am correctly informed, in the last 15 or 20 years for the support and civilization of the Indian. The Senator from Oregon knows how he has been supported. know how he has been civilized. Query: If it has cost in 20 years $246,000,000 to support and civilize the Indian up to this date, what will be the aggregate cost to the Nation when he is fully supported and completely civilized?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this discussion is rather remote from the particular item under consideration, but I desire to make a brief statement in connection with the Blackfeet project, lest the Senator who has addressed the Senate might have left an erroneous impression concerning it, arising from his unacquaintance with the facts in relation to that project.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I called attention to this particular item because of the fact that both Senators from Montana were in the Chamber. My information may be incorrect, but I stated that I obtained it from members of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I feel, in justice to the Senate, that a brief statement in relation to the matter ought to be made.

The Congress passed an act in the year 1907 which provided for opening the Blackfeet Reservation to settlement. It was contemplated in that act that certain of the lands thus to be opened to settlement, together with lands to be selected by the Iudians as their allotments, would be irrigated; and appropriations were made from time to time and expended until, as stated by the Senator from Colorado, a million dollars, or thereabouts, had been expended upon that project. At the same time, Mr. President, the Flathead Reservation was being opened. No one has ever heard a word by way of criticism from the Indians concerning the appropriateness of the appropriations which have been made concerning the Flatheads; but you will bear in mind that the Blackfeet Reservation has never been opened under the provisions of the act of 1907. It remains Everything has been done except the issuance of the proclamation by the President declaring the lands open to settlement, and that proclamation never has been issued. The department has now changed its idea about the matter, and has concluded that it would not be wise to open the Blackfeet Reservation; and consequently the lands that would be opened to settlement, that it was expected would be irrigated by this project, have never been taken up at all. Consequently there is no one to use the water which would be carried through the project except the Indians.

Now, I need not say to the Senator, because he knows it well, that some 10 or 15 years ago it was assumed and believed that much benefit would be conferred upon the Indians upon the various reservations by utilizing their money for the purpose of carrying out great works of irrigation.

A work of irrigation was projected and carried out on the Crow Reservation and a large amount of money was spent upon it, when it was discovered that the Indians will not cultivate the land. So long as the reservation remains intact there will be no return whatever from the investment and it will continue a profitless investment until the reservation is opened and settled upon by white settlers and the Indians permitted to lease their allotments to white settlers.

That is why, Mr. President, there has been no land put under irrigation under this Blackfeet project. There is nobody to cultivate the land except the Indians, and it is demonstrated that the Indians will not cultivate the lands to any great extent until they are educated in the ways of white men and in the science of agriculture much beyond the point at which they have yet arrived.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator if he thinks the amount of land cultivated by the Indians by irrigation on the Flathead Reservation justifies this large expenditure?

Mr. WALSH. I have explained that matter so often that I feel I ought not to be called upon to do it, but I am very glad

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
Mr. WALSH. Let me say now, Mr. President, that if there never was anybody to use the Flathead irrigation project except the Indians it would be utterly unjustifiable. But, Mr. President, that is not the point at all. The Indians were disposing of their lands. The Government of the United States as trustee for them determined that in their best interest it became necessary to dispose of their lands on the Flathead Reservation. Many thousands of acres of these lands were susceptible of irriga-tion and the Government proposed to irrigate those lands, both the lands open to settlement and the lands allotted to the Indians, and when the settler went upon the reservation under the act of Congress he had an opportunity to take lands that were open to irrigation and subject to irrigation under the project or to take lands above the project, as he saw fit. the lands under the project were appraised at a very much higher price than the lands that were not subject to irrigation. The settlers have been invited upon that project, and they have purchased the lands open to irrigation under the project at the higher price because they were to be irrigated. They have paid their money into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians, and the project now covers those lands and covers the lands of the Indians adjacent.

I answer the Senator from Kansas, if you consider the Indian lands alone you can not justify any such expenditure, but you can not consider the Indian lands alone. You are bound to consider that the Government of the United States is obligated to those settlers whom it had invited to take lands under the project, and who were invited to take them at a figure which meant that the Government would irrigate those lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Montana that an obligation is due to the settlers, and I did not intend by the question I asked the Senator to dispute that. What I wanted the Senator to consider was whether or not the number of acres that were being farmed by the Indians by irriga-tion justified Congress in making a large appropriation or to extend the work fof them.

I asked the question because of the small number of acres now farmed by Indians on that reservation that are susceptible of irrigation. For one I think a plan should be inaugurated by the department of leasing the lands of the Indians that are irrigable or for their sale. The Senator will recall, I think, that there are about 90,000 acres of land owned by the Indians that are subject to irrigation, and yet the Indians were farming only a little over 900 acres last year. It seems to me that some plan could be devised whereby benefit could be derived from that other acreage for the Indian, and that was the idea I intended to convey.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Kansas. The amount of this land that is actually being cultivated by the Indian is distressingly and disappointingly small, but it will be borne in mind that many of their allotments are leased to white men who do actually cultivate them and thus a benefit accrues to the Indian. I wish it were otherwise. I wish that the Indians would more freely make use of the facilities that are thus accorded them. I join in the hope expressed by the Senator from Kansas that we shall be able to devise some system by which the Indians will be more generously encouraged to engage in agriculture.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I did not take any part in the general discussion of the bill, but I think it is hardly fair to the department to state that nothing has been accomplished in the way of education and improvement in the condition of Indian affairs. I can remember, and older Senators here can remember, that some 15 or 20 years ago the Government was expending I might say nearly a million dollars for rations for the Indians. There were some 50,000 Indians receiving rations. Many of the tribes that a few years ago were being supplied with rations are no longer supplied, and most of them are supporting themselves either from their rents or from what they get from their farms. An examination of the report will show that the income of the Indians from their farms and from their stock amounts to millions of dollars every year. The incomes of Indians last year derived from crops raised by them amounted to over $5,000,000; from stock sold, over $2,000,000; from native industries, over $1,000,000; from timber cut, over $1,000,000; from wages earned, over $2,000,000; and from individual leases, over $3,000,000.

I think this criticism of the department is very unfair. I do say this, and I believe it, that in some places there are more people employed than are required, but take the item referred to of $20,000—the department has given a full itemized statement of all the money and how it is expended. Not much of that goes to salaries. I have the report here of the expenditure of the $20,000 referred to. Only $4,200 is expended for salaries and that much in behalf of the department.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in line with what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] has said. I do not believe the Indian Bureau officials are governed by any such base or unworthy motives as have been charged here, or intimated at least, on the floor of the Senate. I do not believe that the present officials of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or any of them are animated by a desire to keep the Indians forever in a state of tutelage or bondage merely to get large appropriations year after year, and in order to have the handling and disbursing of those appropriations and to perpetuate themselves I do not believe the Indian Bureau officials or any of them are animated by any such purpose or motive at all. I deny it. It is an unworthy and unjust insinuation.

I believe, and in fact I know, that the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an honest man of honest convictions, has the best interests of the Indians at heart, although I do not fully agree with all of his ideas in handling the Indian problem. I know, though, he is conscientious and sincere in his convictions, and I believe him to be correct in most of his ideas. I believe the present Indian Commissioner has done very much for the advancement and promotion of the welfare of the Indians in this country, and that he is striving earnestly to better their condition and lead them to a better day and advance their in-terests. In many things he has succeeded admirably. I am not in accord with all the ideas or methods of procedure of the Indian Bureau officials, but I do not impugn their motives in the slightest degree. I believe the officials of the Indian Bureau are doing what they believe to be the best for the Indians and in large measure their efforts are having good results.

We hear complaints made here about appropriations of many millions of dollars having been made for the Indians in past years, and that they are still Indians and in their native condition. Who could expect anything different? It is a hard thing to totally change the nature of a race of people. It is a hard thing to overcome the nature of an entire nationality and metamorphose and transform them into different kinds of people. It is a hard thing to go against nature. It is a hard thing to overcome nature. It takes generations in which to do it. Undoubtedly it takes many millions of dollars and much time and great patience, painstaking, and devotion. The time, patlence, painstaking, and devotion to duty the present Indian Commis-sioner and his assistant commissioner and corps of help are freely giving. There are some striking instances of improvement in the condition of Indians, well known to all, which negative assertions made here to-day. Look at the Indians of Oklahoma! A generation ago, tribal Indians in their primitive condition, roving, hunting, fishing, fighting. To-day, civilized, educated, prosperous; nearly all American citizens; numbered among the leading farmers, business and professional men, public officials of a great State. Have they made no advancement? lic officials of a great State. Have they made no advancement?

I believe that upon the whole the Indians of the country are a great deal better off than they were a generation or two ago. I believe that the progress which is being made among many of them is slow, but nevertheless substantial, and undoubtedly some progress is being made.

As to the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, mention of which has been made here, it is true considerable money has been expended for a reclamation project on that reserva-The reason why that has not resulted in more benefit and has not been productive of more results is because the Blackfeet Indian Reservation has not been thrown open to allotment and settlement, so that a good share of the land under that reclamation project could be sold to white settlers after first allotting the choice lands in sufficient quantities to the Indians, with provision for selling the balance, in order that white settlers might settle on it and utilize the water on the land and make a living for themselves and pay for their lands, the proceeds of the land to go to the Indians with which to buy cattle, horses, teams, implements, in order to farm their own lands. That has not been done. That is the reason the reclamation project has not been more beneficial.

I believe that the solution of the Indian problem and the salvation of the Indian lies in throwing Indian reservations open to allotment and settlement. I am a believer in that. open to allotment and settlement. I am a believer in that. I believe in throwing them all open to allotment and settlement, very soon and as rapidly as circumstances will justify. As long as the Indians are kept in their tribal relation they will remain in that primitive condition, they will be segregated from the rest of humanity, they will be herded within a wall constructed around them, separating them from the world and keeping them in their native primitive condition, and they will not advance very much when they are thus kept. But when a reservation is thrown open to allotment and settlement and the Indians are first allotted their choice of the land, the best land to be picked, in adequate quantities for their support, on which to make homes, probably 320 or 480 acres apiece, or something of that kind, and then the balance of the land thrown open to entry and sold to white settlers who will cultivate it and mingle with the Indians and show them by example how to farm and conduct their affairs, the Indians have a better show to improve. When the white settlers pay for their land the money is put into tribal funds and expended for the benefit of the Indian or put out at interest for them, or it may be invested in live stock and tools and implements of farming for the Indians. Then the Indians advance and become citizens and become self-supporting.

Take the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, for instance. The Indians on that reservation are in a far better condition on the average than are those on the Blackfeet or Crow The Flathead Reservation was thrown open to Reservations. allotment and settlement about eight years ago, I believe, and many of the Indians there are self-supporting, many are successfully farming, having good farms and live stock. Many of them are citizens of the United States, voters who send their children to school. They are making rapid advances in civilization, in the way of becoming useful citizens and taxpayers and contributing to the support of the Government; while the Blackfeet Indians and the Crow Indians, who are kept in their tribal relations on reservations that have not been thrown open to allotment and settlement, are making little or no progress, and I believe they will continue to make little progress until their reservations are thrown open to allotment and settlement.

A bill has passed the Senate for opening a part of the Blackfeet Reservation and is now in the House, and I hope to see a bill for the opening of the Crow Reservation enacted into law at an early date. Then those Indians, the Blackfeet and Crows, will advance as the Flatheads have done.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly; with great pleasure. Mr. JONES. I ask the Senator whether those Indians he referred to as being civilized and progressing very rapidly on a reservation in his State hold their allotments in fee simple or whether they are still restricted from selling and handling them as he and I would handle our real property?

Mr. MYERS. They are under restrictions, I believe, so that they can not alienate the land for 21 years; but if they prove to the satisfaction of the department

Mr. JONES. What I want to ask is whether as a matter of fact they now hold their lands in fee simple.

Mr. MYERS. Many of them do. I am just describing the plan. As fast as they can prove that they are competent they can have title in fee simple to their lands, and many of them have title in fee simple.

Mr. JONES. But do they come and ask the department to have their lands in fee simple?

Mr. MYERS. Many of them do, and many get them and handle them successfully.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator that it would be very interesting to me to know about how many have done that. The reason why I say that is this: I live within 4 miles of an Indian reservation on which the Indians have had their allotments for many years. I know some of the Indians on the reservation who are very intelligent men. They are very the reservation who are very intelligent men. They are very competent business men. They have splendid homes; but they have not asked to have their allotments given them in fee simple, and they show their acumen and their wisdom by not doing it. They have not asked that it be done because they escape taxation by not having it done.

Mr. MYERS. That shows that they are advancing and getting in line with white men.

Mr. JONES. I wondered whether the Indians in Montana were as acute in business matters as some of our Indians in the State of Washington.

Mr. MYERS. Not altogether. Many of them secure their lands in fee simple.

Mr. JONES. What has occurred to me growing out of this situation has been this thought, that unless the department takes affirmative action itself looking to the granting of feesimple titles to Indians who are reasonably competent to manage their own affairs it would be a good thing if we would direct the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the competency of various Indians throughout the country, and to those whom they found to be reasonably competent, whether they ask it or not, to issue fee-simple patents.

Mr. MYERS. That might be a good idea.
Mr. LANE. I should like to say that I did not intend to criticize the personnel-

Mr. MYERS. Just a minute, please. Will the Senator pardon me? I was not referring to anything the Senator from Oregon said. In my remarks I had in mind other Senators who referred to the large amount of money that had been appropriated for the Indians for many years past. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] made the assertion that many millions of dollars had been expended on the Indians of the country by the Indian Bureau, and said it had resulted in no improvement in their condition. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggested-I will not say he charged, but I thought he intimated—that the Indian Bureau was encouraging that state of affairs just to get to keep on handling the money and to perpetuate the jobs. I was not referring to anything the Senator from Oregon said. I was replying to charges, intimations, and assertions of other Senators.

Mr. LANE. All right. Mr. President, I was not criticizing the personnel as much as I was the system. Yet there are individual cases where personnel is deserving of some criticism. I was not referring particularly to the condition in Montana, and did not point it out any more than as an illustration of the condition which exists in other States as well. But the condition does exist. The comparison made by the Senator from Montana himself proves it. In the Flathead Reservation the lands have been allotted and divided, but the tribal relations, I presume, have not been abolished so much. You have superintendents and other employees in charge.

Mr. MYERS. The tribal relation is partially abolished. They have a superintendent there. A large number of the Indians are not competent, while a large number are. The superintendent's duties are in connection with those not yet declared competent.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, there is one illustration of a people living in a rich country, on good lands, the best in Montana, and I am told about as good as we have anywhere in that section of the country, in the Rocky Mountain region. Some of those Indians have done well. They have their periods of support and civilization from the Government and its instruction in the white man's ways, and yet as much or more complaint comes from the destitution of the Indians on that reservation as from those on any other reservation of which I have knowledge. There are many more as badly off, I presume, but a lot of those Indians are said to be living off of the pickings which they can gather from the swill barrels of the white people.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to say that while there are cases of destitution on the Flathead Reservation-of course, you will find Indians, as well as other people, who appear to be incompetent to take care of themselves anywhere—such cases, I think, on the Flathead Reservation are mostly those of old, infirm, and sick Indians.

Mr. LANE. There were some hearings held before the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, on December 6, 1915; on May 2, 6, 13, and 18, 1916; and on June 1 and 7, 1916. From those hearings I will read you a statement made by Senator Walsh in regard to the condition of the Crow Indians, in which he said that those people-and we make an appropriation for the support, maintenance, and civilization of the same Indians in this bill somewhere, or, if we do not now, we formerly did so-have an annual income of $180,000 from their lands which are leased for grazing purposes for, say, 8 to 10 cents an acre. And, by way of parentheses, I might say that is the business management of their affairs which the Government holds to them as an illustration and to teach them how to handle their lands. Formerly they leased those lands, the unallotted lands, and at the same time they made no provision for the exemption of the allotted lands; they leased the unallotted lands to some stockman and allowed him to use the allotted land without paying one cent either to the Indian or to the Government. That went on for years, at a nominal price of from 6 to 10 cents an acre, and the Indian did not get a cent. He was not allowed to lease it himself or sell his crop to any other person, except the lessor of the land. Now, it is said here by the Senator from Montana that they have an income of $180,000 a year from these leases, and the Senator from Montana said, "We want to continue them that way." He further

I will conclude this morning by inviting your attention to how desperate the thing is on the Crow Reservation as the result of the continuance of this policy. In 1885 the population of the Crows was 3,500. That was what the committee reported when they came back.

A certain committee apparently had visited those Indians. In 1914 the population of the Crows was 1,696. There is a 50 per cent loss since 1885. In 1906 there were 1,804. From 1906 to 1914 there is a loss of over 200 population on the reservation. In 1911 there were 120 births and 83 deaths. In 1912 there were 92 births and 54 deaths. In 1913 there were 86 births and 99 deaths. In 1914 there were 69 births and 66 deaths, and in 1915 there were 56 births and 53 deaths. The births have declined since 1911 from 120 annually to 56.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1906, at page 252, will give you a deplorable story about the health of these Indians, practically such as Mr. Grinnell gives you here—85 to 90 per cent of them afflicted with tuberculosis and tracoma. The Senate appointed a special committee to investigate tuberculosis and other infectious diseases among the Indians, and they made special mention of the Crows. The information will be found in Senate Document 1038 of the Sixty-third Congress, and there it is learned that of 995 examined 202 had tuberculosis and 185 had trachoma.

Senator PAGE, Do you think the condition would be improved if they were turned loose and made independent?

Senator WALSH. Well, Senator, it could not have been much worse. When it is as bad as it can possibly be under the existing conditions, we hope it will be a little better.

I may say this is a menace to our entire State.

Later on he said:

The report told you about the success that the Indians are making of agriculture; but $1,278,181 of the funds of the Indians, derived from the sale of the ceded lands in the northeastern portion there, have been applied to the construction of the irrigation systems within the reservation. They have got a magnificent canal there, as shown on the map. The ditch is taken out right at the Big Horn Canyon and it runs down. It will be interesting to see it.

He states further on that-

The system has cost $1,278,300. It covers 77,527 acres. It cost $50,801.82 to maintain it in 1914, and the aggregate product of the Indians on the reservation everywhere, under the ditch and outside of the ditch, was $43,151.

He stated further along that these are the only Indians in the United States, so far as he could learn, who really have become self-supporting and able to take care of themselves. The Senator from Montana proceeded to say that $100,000, or about that sum, of the income of these Indians goes to pay the expense of administration and the other $80,000 goes to the Indians in annuities, which are sometimes withheld.

The only Indians who have made good and gone ahead in a white man's business way, as shrewd, capable men, able to take care of themselves-although not highly civilized in our sense of the word—are the wildest Indians in America, the Indians who have the poorest land. They are the Navajos in Arizona and New Mexico, who raise sheep where it takes 20 acres of land to support one sheep. They were so poor that they did not attract the attention, apparently, of the Bureau of Indian Affairs-it is the system, of course, to which I refer-but they have done well, and they are the only example to which one can point of Indians, so far as I know, who really do take care of themselves, who live in peace with everybody, and who are no cost to the Government, except perhaps for a few schools.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President-

Mr. LANE. Just a moment, and then I will be through.
Mr. FALL. I merely wanted to ask a question, Mr. President, right there.

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. FALL. The Senator was referring to the Navajos of Arizona and New Mexico and to the fact that they were not costing the Government anything.

Mr. LANE. Not in proportion to their number, I should have

Mr. FALL. Not in proportion to their number, the Senator says. There are very large amounts appropriated in this bill which are to be used entirely in the discretion of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. LANE. That may be; I did not know that.

Mr. FALL. In the second place, if the Navajos are not supported by the Government they are supported very largely at the expense of the people of Arizona and New Mexico. The Navajo Indians have over 1,100 acres each set aside for them; but, aside from that, 9,000 of them have been located by the Government, contrary to the treaty with the Navajos, on the public lands of Arizona and New Mexico outside of the reservation.

Further than that, the Congress of the United States two or more years ago provided that no other Navajo Indians should be located upon the public lands of Arizona and New Mexico, but the President of the United States has just reserved in one county of my State some 65,000 or 70,000 acres or more by descriptions of the sections and quarter sections of land for the purpose of placing Navajo Indians upon it, contrary to the spirit and terms of the act of Congress. Of course, the Congress has not prohibited the President setting aside this land, though has not prohibited the location of Navajos upon it; but the President has now, by reservation made within the last day or two, withdrawn thousands of acres of land in McKinley County, Mex., which, if taken up by the white man, would pay taxes and contribute to the support of the Government-withdrawn it for the purpose of turning it over to the Navajos, although Congress has said that no other Navajos should be placed upon the public domain.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have my information largely from what has been stated in the hearings in the past, confirmed by the statement of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that the Navajos are more nearly self-supporting than any other tribe and that they are progressing in a financial way when compared with other Indians throughout the United States. They are Indians who have wandered the mountains with their sheep and have not been restricted to reservation life; and for that reason there is less tuberculosis, less trachoma, and less poverty among those Indians than those in any other tribe. They have learned how to handle an industry of large value, and they are pointed out as marvelous Indians for that reason. I do not know what has been done about this land lately.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the Navajos have always been herders and raisers of sheep. Even prior to the treaty which they made in 1868, they were the greatest shepherds in the United States. They have always owned very large herds, and they not only sell their wool, but, as the Senator knows, they are the manufacturers of what are known as Navajo blankets, which are noted all over the world.

Mr. LANE. I understand that. Mr. President, the Navajo is an Indian who has been allowed to pursue the line of making a livelihood to which he has been accustomed. The other Indians in the Rocky Mountain country in the West were horsemen, and they understood the handling of horses, and were naturally herdsmen of cattle also. They had never farmed, but they were put on restricted areas, and an attempt was made to teach them how to farm, the one thing about which they knew nothing and for which they cared nothing.

I am going to call attention to one habit of the Indians of the Pacific coast. It can be seen how difficult it would be for a man who for generations had bred into him such an idea to turn directly against it and adopt another plan. When an Indian grew rich in furs or dried fish or a large herd of ponies, his greatest ambition was to call a meeting of all the other members of his tribe and of the adjoining friendly tribes, and to hold what they called a "potlatch." At this potlatch the Indian gave away everything he had in the world, all his horses, his blankets, his clothing down to a breechclout, if you please, and went out without anything of value in his possession. He gave everything away, and that action brought the highest honor that an Indian could attain. That has been the custom for ages of the northern Indians, and they hold those potlatches yet. Did you ever see a community of white men holding a potlatch and giving away anything to their neighbors, just for the honor it would bring them? I never have.

Now, to take the Indians living near the Rocky Mountains, who had always held potlatches, and try to teach them to become shrewd, sharp, capable, keen traders and business men is rather a hard task, and I presume we are lucky that we have done as much with them as we have, but we can never make business men out of them until they are given the opportunity.

The Indian Bureau has grown up and become an increasing weight upon the Indians. The reservation system has outlived its usefulness, and some other method should be adopted which will give the Indian a better opportunity. They have property worth millions upon millions; yes, a billion dollars' worth of property; and yet thousands upon thousands of them are without a penny and are living under conditions which could not be printed if I were to dwell upon them. There is something wrong about the system and it should be changed.

In Montana there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of good land in the reservations which is made no use of either by the white man or by the Indian with any benefit to the Indian. They are blocked to white settlement, and are of no benefit to the Indian. That should be changed. The attempt being made now by both Senators from Montana to secure this land for the use of the whites is blocked by the bureau, protests of all kinds are made, and impediments are placed in the way of that land being thrown open to the people, while the tribe on the reservation is being held under the care of men who will not, on account of rules made by the superintendent, allow the Indians to visit with one another. I think a change ought to be made; but the gentlemen who are protesting against the expenditure of money for building schools are, in my opinion, not attacking the items in the bill which are more particularly subject to legitimate criticism, and I think that those items should be criticized first.

If you will read the bill carefully you will ascertain that as to all of these items covering the whole field provision is made that the money is to be expended under the supervision of and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, who necessarily must take the suggestions of the very bureau which is managing these affairs in a way which has resulted in numerous instances in almost the annihilation of the Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in reference to Indian affairs in order to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate in a way, at least, so that we may to some extent comprehend what is before us as affecting the whole Indian question.

We have heard a great deal of discussion for years about making the Indian a self-supporting individual. We have had a great many lectures in the Senate about converting the red man into a white man, and we have been trying to do that for the last hundred years. The sooner the Senate and the country makes up its mind that the Indian problem is going to be an Indian problem, and not a white man's problem, and must be dealt with accordingly, I think the better it will be for us. can not fail to recognize that the general law of evolution and the force of environment, operating for thousands of years upon the aborigines of this country, have created a race that are absolutely incapable at this time of changing their natures so as to be able to compete with the white man in this, now a white man's country.

I do not agree with those who believe that we can ever make of the North American Indian a self-supporting individual and put him in competition with the white race. Everyone who knows anything about the Indian character, as it was described a few moments ago by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane] in his illustration of the Indian characteristic of giving away everything he has, realizes that he is nothing more nor less than a child of nature, absolutely incapable of holding his own against the cunning of the white race.

Now, that being the case, what is our duty? You can not make a white man out of the Indian, educate him just as much as you please. There may be cases of individualism among the Indian tribes where there would be an exception to this rule; but, looking at the question as a whole, the Indian race must be dealt with as an Indian race, and we must appropriate for them just as long as they are Indians.

What can we do to-day? We have robbed them of their lands. We have denuded their forests. We have destroyed the fish in their streams. We have made it impossible for them to gain a livelihood that was common and that was workable with them as Indians. Now, what are we going to do about it? Are we going to say that we can immediately convert them, by some bill which any Senator has in his mind, into a white race?

Mr. President, I do not know how many full-blood Indians there are in the United States. I noticed by a report yesterday that we have about 335,000 Indians altogether, and I do not believe there are more than 100,000 at the most of full-blood Indians. In the case of the rest of them there is more white blood than there is Indian blood in those that we denominate as Indians. That element undoubtedly, through the process of amalgamation, will soon be a negative quantity. They will be merged into the white race, or they will die out, as many of them are dying to-day, through the inability of the children of the mixed race to adapt themselves either to the old Indian condition or to the white man's condition.

What is our appropriation? About $15,000,000 a year. For how many Indians? About $35,000. We are therefore appropriating about $45 per capita for the support of the Indian population of the United States. Whatever support they have beyond that must necessarily be from their own earnings. They are therefore partially self-supporting; and all we can do under the conditions is to assist them in increasing their proportionate part of their own earnings and their own support, if they can possibly do so. But at all times we must appropriate for their support, the same as we would have to take care of an undeveloped child or a minor; and if we do not pay more than $15,000,000 a year for the partial support of the Indians of this country, I think we are paying a mighty meager sum for what we have taken from the Indians. We owe them that duty, we owe them that support, and we ought to give it ungrudgingly; and if we can not make them entirely selfsustaining we ought not to complain because we are paying $15,000,000 a year to assist them in supporting themselves.

I do not expect that we are ever, in our lives at least, going to escape the necessity of appropriating at least $15,000,000 a year for the support of the Indians of this country. What I wish we would get into our minds is that we ought to do it, and we ought to do it freely, we ought to do it thankfully, for what we have taken from the Indians, and not every year grumble and find fault with the $15,000,000 that we are paying for the support of these wards.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. LANE addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hollis in the chair).
Does the Senator from North Dakota yield, and to whom?
Mr. McCUMBER. I think my colleague first rose. I yield to him first.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to my colleague that it is true that we are appropriating about $15,000,000 for the expenses of the Indians, but not one-half of that comes out of the Treasury of the United States. I have not the figures, but I believe I am safe in saying that not one-third of it comes out of the Treasury of the United States, because a great deal more than one-half of that amount is paid by the Indians themselves. It is taken out of their funds.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then we are not really paying more than $7,500,000, which would make about $22.50 per capita, to take care of our Indian population. Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon. Mr. LANE. The amount you pay out for the actual support of the Indian, I think, is a bagatelle. It is really for the support of employees, white employees and some Indian employees, but not for the Indians themselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, undoubtedly there is ensiderable waste. There is in every other arm of the Govconsiderable waste. ernment, and I doubt if there is any more waste in the Indian Service than in any other governmental service. We must expect that. We have found no means of escaping it so far in any bureau or in any branch of the Government. So, on the whole, we ought to be gratified that we own this country, and that we are not paying out more than $15,000,000 a year for the support of the people from whom we took this country.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for a vote on the question.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FALL. No; I did not know that the Senator from Utah had been recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized. Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires to speak upon the ques-

Mr. SMOOT. If the Schatter desires to speak upon the question that has been before the Schate, I will yield to him.

Mr. FALL. I wish to speak only just a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will yield to the Schator, because I am going to refer to the amendment that is pending. I am not going to speak on the general bill.

Mr. FALL. I am going to speak in connection with the general subject. I merely want to say a few words with reference to the method by which we make these appropriations.

The bookkeeping methods of the department cause the greater part of the criticism. Senators can not understand the methods by which the appropriations are made up, because no one else can understand them. They are misleading; and a committee will report, I presume, in a very short time on some of these methods, having been appointed to do certain work in connection with that matter.

For instance, just to illustrate the difficulty, in the very item under consideration now there is a direct appropriation for the support and civilization of the Indians at the Flathead Agency, of which amount not exceeding $1,000 may be expended for the purchase of two automobiles, and not exceeding $4,500 of which shall be expended for salaries.

Now, naturally it would impress any Senator here that the entire amount embraced in this bill applicable for any purpose whatsoever to the Flathead Agency in Montana was the amount of $20,000, as set forth here; certainly that the amount of $1,000 would limit any expenditure upon the Flathead Agency for the purchase or repair of automobiles. That, however, is not true. With reference to this particular appropriation of $20,000, only $1,000 out of it can be used for automobiles; but there is no limit upon the amount which can be used at the Flathead Agency for the purchase of automobiles, except the limit of $300,000, aside from the $1,000; and any portion of that $300,000, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, may be used at the Flathead Agency, because there is a general appropriation in this bill for the purchase of automobiles, repairs, and so forth, of $300,000.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I say a word? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. In just a moment. That $300,000 is to be expended entirely in the discretion of the commissioner. Now I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I will say that the superintendent of the Flathead Agency has informed me that he is very badly in need of two automobiles there. Last year, for some reason or other-I do not know what-by some denial of authority he was not allowed to purchase them, and in order to enable him to purchase them this provision was put in here.

Mr. FALL. That illustrates exactly the point I am making, Mr. President-that possibly the agent at the Flathead Agency did not receive the same consideration that the agent at some other agency received. If the Senator will just refer to page 14 of this appropriation bill, he will see the following provision:

That not to exceed $300,000 of applicable appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service.

Now, the particular item as expressed in this $20,000 appropriation is a limitation only upon the expenditure of the $20,000. Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me to say so, that $300,000 does this agent no good if he is not permitted any part of it.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. I am not saying that the agent is getting any more than he is entitled to. I am not undertaking to say for a moment that the agent is not entitled to his automobile.

Mr. MYERS. I understand that.
Mr. FALL. I am commenting upon the system of bookkeeping and requesting appropriations by the Indian Office in making up their estimates. That is the trouble.

For instance, Mr. President, there has been some talk here about the care of the Indians by the Government. Why, the care is rather excessive at times. For instance, I discovered this state of affairs in my own State, very much to my astonishment, because it is a new condition.

Among the other Indians in New Mexico we have what are commonly known as the Pueblo Indians.

[At this point Mr. Fall yielded to Mr. Sherman and Mr. SHIELDS, and, by unanimous consent, introduced bills which are found under the appropriate heading.] Mr. FALL. I had refrained from further conversation, Mr. President, until some of the other Senators concluded. I am glad that at least I have afforded an opportunity as a clearing house for bills and reports, if my efforts were not of any other

I am simply going to refer to the condition of affairs with reference to what we know as the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico, some of whom also are known as the Hopis, and others of a similar class are found in Arizona. The Pueblo Indians own their own lands. They are agricultural Indians. They were found exactly where they are found now three hundred and odd years ago, when the Spaniards first came to the country, cultivating exactly the same fields, using exactly the same irrigation ditches; and over 100 years ago they had their titles to their lands confirmed to them directly by the Spanish Government.

The United States Government had absolutely nothing to do with the Pueblo Indians, nor with their lands. The United States Government has not made a reservation for the Pueblo Indians. They own their lands by grant from the Crown of Spain. They are citizens of the United States, and have been so declared in several different decisions of the Supreme Court. They are entitled to vote if they choose to do it; but they do not, however, avail themselves of that privilege, and I do not know but that they display a good deal of judgment in the matter. They maintain their own government entirely. They elect what we call a mayor, what the Mexicans call a presidente, and the officer whom the Pueblos themselves designate as a governador, or a governor. They elect their own council. They settle their own law cases. Very seldom do they appeal to the law of the white man at all. Very seldom is there any necessity for such an appeal.

Each of the pueblos in New Mexico-over nine-has its own governor, its own council, and its own judge, the governor acting as judge in the cases that arise. The United States has only interfered within a very short period of time with these Pueblo Indians, in so far as affording them day-school facilities is concerned. A portion of the $1,650,000 appropriated in this bill for Indian day schools, aside from all the other specific appropriations made for school or other purposes, is used for the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico in support of day schools. An agent or a superintendent of day schools for the Pueblo Indians Very recently the Indian Office here in Washington, apparently not understanding a thing under heaven about the history of the Pueblos or their condition, has created of this superintendent an agent for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. They have no appropriation of any kind or character, except that of Indians on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, in-we maintain schools there. This superintendent is now created into an agent for the Pueblo Indians. He has invoked or resur-rected an old law, under the terms of which he as the superintendent of the Pueblo Indians claims authority to appoint a judge for the Indians. He has gone to one of the pueblos and there selected a favorite of his own as a judge, overturning all the traditions and customs of the Indians, interfering unwarrantedly with them, and he takes from one pueblo 250 miles away an Indian to try him before this Pueblo Indian judge.

Each of these pueblos or settlements of Indians is as separate and distinct from the others as is one State of this Union separate from the others as a State. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs here in your city of Washington did not know that the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico did not speak the same language. He did not know that there were nine different languages spoken, and that the Pueblos could not understand one another. His superintendent apparently did not take that matter into consideration when he, overturning all their customs and traditions, as ratified by treaty, as confirmed to them by decisions of the court, himself appointed a judge for the trial of Indian cases, selecting one Indian in one pueblo 250 miles away from other pueblos, and vesting him with the power to try Indian cases arising in the pueble 250 miles away. When I myself asked the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in Washington if he did not understand that this Indian brought from 250 miles away could not understand the language of the Indian before whom he was tried, he did not know; he thought all the Pueblos spoke the same language.

Now, this is the trouble, these are the conditions that we find, those of us who know anything about Indian affairs, when we investigate-absolute colossal ignorance existing in the Indian Office here in Washington; and never until we have some business man in charge of that department who will direct that proper estimates are made here in simple, plain language, so that the Senate committee can understand them, never until such a method of bookkeeping is established, will you meet anything but opposition when you present a hodge-podge of a bill such as this is for the consideration of the Congress of the United States.

Never will you civilize the Indian, never will you raise him very much higher in the scale of humanity, until you have some man in charge of affairs who as a business man will investigate and inform himself, and when informed act. This is the trouble with the Indians generally, and the trouble with your Indian appropriation bill at every session.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the question, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the committee to the provision adopted in the House increases the appropriation $1,000, and that $1,000 is to be expended for the purchase of two automobiles.

Mr. MYERS. No, Mr. President; it does not increase it a cent. It does not increase a cent the appropriation in the bill as it came over from the House.

Mr. SMOOT. It increases it at least to this extent. If you can get along with $19,000, and not exceeding $4,500 which shall be expended for salaries, then there is no need of the $20,000 appropriation being in the bill.

Mr. MYERS. There is no increase, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I know very well that there is.
Mr. MYERS. It is $20,000; and it was $30,000 last year.
Mr. SMOOT. I know there is no increase directly, but if the House provision is absolutely necessary to carry $20,000 for the support and civilization of Indians on the Flathead Reservation in Montana, of which amount not exceeding $4,500 shall be expended for salaries, then you add $1,000 for the purchase of two automobiles, to be taken out of the $20,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, what can be more civilizing than two Fords?

Mr. MYERS. It does not add anything.
Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what I was trying to get the Senate to see is this: If it requires for support and civilization cluding pay of employees, $20,000, of which amount not exceeding $4,500 shall be expended for salaries, then it is evident if we are going to take $1,000 out of the $20,000 for the purchase of two automobiles, $20,000 is not sufficient or else it is $1,000 more than enough.

Will the Senator let me make a brief statement right there?

Mr. SMOOT. I know exactly what the Senator will state.

Mr. MYERS. What does the Senator know?

The Senator will state that the appropriation Mr. SMOOT. is $20,000, and it does not cost the Government any more

Mr. MYERS. No; I am not going to say that. Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. Then I yield.

Mr. MYERS. In just a minute I want to enlighten the Senator on this point. The necessity for the purchase of those two automobiles was fully gone into by the committee. The state-The necessity for the purchase of those two ment from the superintendent of the Indians on the reservation was laid before the committee, and it was approved by the representative of the bureau who was sitting there—the assistant commissioner-who verified the facts. The facts are that the superintendent now has two automobiles, but they are worn out. They have been worn out and are simply useless, and they need to be replaced. The committee passed on it unanimously, I believe, authorizing the insertion of this item. It is all in the hearings. The chairman can read from the

Mr. SMOOT. If the statement made by the Senator is cor-

Mr. MYERS. Certainly it is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Then this amendment ought to be changed authorizing the purchase of the machines so as to use the old machines in exchange. In every appropriation bill that we have, when there is an old automobile worn out, that authorization is given, and unless it is you can not do anything with the old machine.

Mr. MYERS. From the report made, the old machines are not worth exchanging. They are worth nothing. They can not

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator says, there is no necessity to put in the amendment here for the purchase of two automobiles. If the Commissioner of Indian Affairs feels that the purchase of two automobiles is absolutely necessary for the Flathead Indian Reservation, he can purchase them out of the appropriation of $50,000 provided for on page 14 of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. They needed them last year, but had no way of getting them.

Mr. SMOOT. The House provided $30,000 for the purchase of automobiles, and limited the amount for the purchase of the automobiles to $30,000 for the fiscal year 1918, as found on page 14 of the bill. The Senate committee increased the House appropriation of $30,000 to $50,000.

Mr. MYERS. All I know is—
Mr. SMOOT. Now, the Senate committee wants to add $1,000 more for the purchase of two automobiles at the Flathead Indian

Mr. MYERS. All I know is that they did not get them and they needed them.

Mr. SMOOT. The superintendent needed them last year and got along without them, and if he needs them now certainly he can get them out of the $50,000 appropriated for that specific purpose. Authorization is given to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase that many dollars worth of automobiles and place them anywhere in the United States upon Indian The committee of the Senate was not content with authorizing them to spend $30,000 for that purpose, but increased the appropriation $20,000, and now it has a provision here under the head of Montana for $1,000 for the purchase of two automobiles for the Flathead Indian Reservation.

Mr. President, there is no necessity for it. If the Commissioner of Indian Affairs knows and feels that it is necessary to purchase two automobiles for the Flathead Indian Reservation, he has $50,000 at his command to purchase those machines, together with as many other machines for other reservations as the $50,000 will provide.

Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will not be agreed to, because it is provided for in another part of the bill, and there is no necessity for that. Upon that, Mr. President—

Mr. MYERS. When the Senator yields the floor I simply want to say

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays, but I do not wish to do that until the Senator concludes what he has to say.

Mr. MYERS. I want to reply briefly, Mr. President. I only have to say in regard to this matter that it was fully considered by the committee when there was a full attendance, as I said, a large attendance. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs was sitting there consulting the committee. The committee went into the matter thoroughly, and unanimously decided that this provision is necessary and advisable.

It does not increase the appropriation one cent. It does not take one cent more out of the Federal Treasury. It does not raise the amount that came over in the bill from the House a particle. The statement from the superintendent of the agency was read to the committee. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs was sitting there and said he knew something of the facts and thought the change ought to be made. It was discussed by the committee, and the committee gave its approval to the proposition and differed from the Senator from

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question? Mr. MYERS. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is absolutely necessary and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs thought it was necessary, and the committee thought it was necessary, why did not the committee increase the amount for the purchase of automobiles to $51,000 instead of $50,000?

Mr. MYERS. Because they thought it was just as well to put the appropriation of $1,000 in here.

Mr. SMOOT. Why did they not say, then, that all the other appropriations for the purchase of automobiles for Indian reservations should be put under the head of the Indian reservation for which the automobile was to be purchased?

Mr. MYERS. There was no application for that.

In other words, there was no one on the com-Mr. SMOOT mittee from States where other reservations wanted automobiles, and therefore it did not go in under the heading of the same.

Mr. MYERS. I suppose not.

Mr. SMOOT.

I presume that was about the case.
The committee and the Assistant Commissioner Mr MYERS of Indian Affairs decided that the superintendent ought to have these two automobiles, that a thousand dollars was a reasonable sum to be allowed for them, and that this was the proper method to provide for their purchase. That is all I can say. The committee passed on it and gave its approval, and I think it ought to be sustained by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.
Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to substantiate what the Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers] has stated. The matter was very carefully considered and it was shown to the committee that two automobiles are needed on this reservation. While there may be something in the criticism of the Senator from Utah and perhaps we ought to refer it back to the appropriation on page 14, the committee thought it did not make very much difference whether we appropriated $1,000 for two automobiles on page 14 or on page 25. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that these two automobiles are needed, and it was agreed to by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?
Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.
Mr. OVERMAN. We are going to have a yea-and-no We are going to have a yea-and-nay vote and I want some light on the subject. Is it true, as the Senator from Utah says, that these two automobiles can be purchased out of the appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. GRONNA. No; these two automobiles will be taken out of the appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but has not the department authority under the $50,000 appropriation to purchase two automobiles for this purpose?

Mr. GRONNA. I want to answer the Senator from North Carolina. As I understand it, an additional appropriation of $1,000 will be required. It will take more than $50,000 to make the purchases necessary on the various reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that the Senate committee increased the appropriation of the House from $30,000 to $50,000 for this very purpose?

Mr. GRONNA. That is true; but we also provided that only $15,000 should be expended for the purchase of horse-drawn There is really a limitation placed upon the whole vehicles appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no limitation placed upon the appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of automobiles?

. Mr. GRONNA. I do not say that there is a limitation upon the appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I am falking about.

Mr. GRONNA. But we are placing a limitation on the appropriation of $15,000. We provide that only $15,000 worth of horse-drawn vehicles shall be purchased. That is a reduction of the amount formerly expended for horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question arising as to the limitation on the appropriation for horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. GRONNA. We are simply increasing the amount of money that may be expended for vehicles and I am discussing the amount of the appropriation which may be used for horsedrawn vehicles.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole item has been increased in that paragraph from $200,000 to $300,000, and it is provided that of paragraph from $200,000 to $300,000, and it is provided that of the appropriation of $300,000 not to exceed $50,000 shall be ex-pended for automobiles. The House provided in the paragraph an appropriation of $200,000 and that not to exceed $30,000 should be expended for automobiles. The Senate committee immediately increased the appropriation from $200,000 to $300,000, and then increased the amount to be expended for the purchase of automobiles from $30,000 to $50,000. Authority is given to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to expend $50,000 in purchasing automobiles, and he can put them upon any Indian reservation in the United States, but, after increasing the appropriation $20,000, when they come here to the Montana items they put in an appropriation of $1,000 for the purchase of two automobiles for the Flathead Indian Agency in Montana. If $1,000 for the purchase of automobiles is absolutely required, they ought to make the appropriation of $50,000 $51,000, and not put in here a clause for the purchase of two automobiles for the Flathend Agency. The appropriation is made in the paragraph I have referred to, and that is where all the money ought to be appropriated for the purchase of automobiles, and not have the amount that is appropriated come under the head of "Montana," and appropriate for purchasing automobiles outside of the lump sum provided in the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I understand the objection is merely one of bookkeeping or method of procedure, and the Senate committee thought this was the proper method. It seems to me the committee is the best judge of the matter. If the superintendent at this agency were compelled to rely on the appropriation of $50,000, he might not get his automobiles. I notice that he did not get them last year. To say to him here is an appropriation of $50,000 with which to buy automobiles, does not do him any good if he does not get any automobiles. It is like a man having money in a bank that he can not draw out. The committee adopted this method of providing it to make sure that he would get them without question. With this method there is no doubt but that he will get them. I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah demands the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask leave, Mr. President, to return to the item under the head of "Florida," on page 27 of the bill. I was absent yesterday when the matter came up. I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the committee was adopted. It will be seen that the bill as it came from the House carries an appropriation of $8,000 "for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education." The committee saw fit to reduce the appropriation to $5,000.

While it is true that Assistant Commissioner Meritt apparently believes that to be a sufficient sum to carry on this work I should like to say that Mr. Meritt seems to be actuated very largely by the fact that the agent appointed to look after this work in Florida last year did not spend all the money that was appropriated for the purpose, and therefore he assumes that the amount of $8,000 is not needed because $8,000 was not spent last year. The fact is that the condition with reference to these Indians is growing worse instead of better, because the great hunting grounds of the Indians in that portion of the State, and they are all in that portion of the State, are being reduced to cultivation, and to that extent the Indian is unable to obtain the quantity of game he used to get and he can not much longer maintain himself by hunting and fishing. He has to begin something else. There are some 578 Indians of these Seminoles in or in the vicinity of the Everglades of Florida. Senators will recall that they are descendants of the Seminoles who would not go to the Indian Territory years ago. They refused to go. The Government undertook to drive them and the Indians went down into the Everglades and they have remained there. The Everglades are now being reclaimed; canals and ditches are being dug and other similar work is being done; and lands which were formerly under water are at the present time producing magnificent crops, so the hunting grounds of the Indian are being gradually taken away from him. He therefore needs to be taught how to become self-supporting; he needs to be taught something of agriculture. Occasionally the Indians have their troubles in the way of illness; they need the care of physicians; they can not any longer be dependent upon their "medicine men." The Indian children are now going to the public schools.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. FLETCHER.: I do.

Mr. ASHURST. What is the purpose of the Senator from Florida—simply to disagree to the committee amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not ask to increase the provision of the bill as it came from the House, but I simply ask to disagree to the committee amendment, and let the item stand as it passed the other House, at $8,000.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I am concerned, I hope that action will be taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that ought to be done. Of course, if the money is not needed it will not be spent. The amount involved is small. I ask that the committee amendment be disagreed to, Mr. President.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, there must have been some reason for reducing the amount of this provision from $8,000 to $5,000, and on that point I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee, who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The reason is, as I have said, that Mr. Meritt stated he needed but $5,000, or that that would be all that he considered would be necessary. This is shown in the report of the committee, where he says he will be satisfied with $5,000. He feels that that may be sufficient, but the House of Representatives did not think so. The House said, "You are going to need $8,000 for this purpose for the next year." If it is not needed it will not be spent; it was not spent last year; but because it was not spent last year is no reason why it will not be needed for this year. The needs are increasing. The Indian children are now going to the public schools, whereas formerly they were prohibited by the white people from attending the white schools. At one time the penalty of death was imposed by the Indian council upon an Indian who sent his children to a white school; but that has been done away with, and the Indian children are now going to the white schools and are there being taught. The Indians are being relieved in many ways. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states:

If they are not won to the ways of civilization within a comparatively few years they will become dependents. It has not been necessary to expend much money upon these people as yet, but there should be an adequate appropriation available.

Eight thousand dollars for one year for the relief of 578 Indians scattered over that region is certainly not a very generous provision to make for them. Simply because last year that amount was not actually expended is no reason why it will not be needed for this year. The House of Representatives thought it would be needed, and therefore they granted $8,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I fully realize that the House of Representatives allowed $8,000, but the committee reduced that amount to $5,000. I think before we vote on the amendment we should hear from the Senator in charge of the bill as to why that item was reduced from $8,000 to $5,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I have simply called attention to the report of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish, first, to say that that is the only reduction which the committee of the Senate made. All other actions with respect to amounts were increases.

There is a strange view which obtains in the mind of some men regarding departmental work. If a department is economical, it is penalized; and if it fails to spend the full amount that is made available for its purposes, the next year the appropriation for the department is reduced. In this particular case the $8,000 was not all spent. Merely because an appropriation is made does not afford a reason why it should all be expended. The trouble with the committees of Congress is that they penalize a department when it shows any evidence of economy.

I think the statement made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is absolutely commanding. He shows that the Everglades are being reclaimed; that the Indians are driven farther and still farther into the interior of the Everglades; that they are obliged to resort to the killing of alligators and small game, some deer and some birds of plumage that may be killed at some particular time of the year, but that their area of land is being reduced from time to time and that it is a necessity now that they be taught some kind of industrial life-agriculture or something else. I think the Senator from Florida has made a very strong showing in this matter.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I was not present when this item was considered. I am, however, in favor of the motion made by the Senator from Florida. I think his statement is convincing and that his reasons are sound. I am in favor of receding from the Senate committee amendment. As the Senator says, if the amount is put at $8,000 and it is not all needed, it need not be expended. The provision is for only $8,000, "or so not be expended. The provision is for only $8,000, much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this item is the only one as to which a decrease is made in the bill as reported to the Senate by the committee from the amount provided for by the other House, and I was almost paralyzed when I saw that the committee had made a decrease. I do not think, however, that it will stay-

Mr. ASHURST. I hope not. Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that it will stay as the committee reported it. I think the House provision will be restored. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] ought to be here, and he ought to withdraw his commendation, extended so warmly to the committee last night, on the fact that there was one amount that had been decreased. I shall not say anything more about it, Mr. President, for I know if the vote is taken and the chairman of the committee says the amount ought to be increased, it will be increased. Therefore there is no need of taking any further time on it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment of the Senate committee will be agreed to. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and stated that the department only needed $5,000 for this purpose. That sum is all that was estimated for. The report shows that of the sum appropriated last year there was $1,701 remaining unexpended. The department know how much money they need, and I think we should follow the recommendation of the committee

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Kansas say that only $5,000 was estimated for this purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not make any difference so long as it is an increase which is involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted. Does the Senator from Florida move to reconsider that vote?

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the easiest way to get at it is to ask for the yeas and nays, because we are going to vote, anyway, and I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the increase.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum if we are going to have a record vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question as to the priority of the motion to adjourn. Under our rules, no quorum having been developed, that is the only motion that can be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, debate is out of order.

Let us have the question put

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A sufficient number have seconded the demand for the yeas and nays. Those in favor of adjourning will signify it by saying "yea" when their names are called, and those opposed "nay."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, before that motion is put,

I think Senators who have come into the Chamber have a right to be recorded as "present."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call developed the absence of a quorum.

Regular order!

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the regular order is for Senators who are now present, but not recorded, to have an opportunity to answer to their names.

Mr. NORRIS. The regular order is a vote on the motion to adjourn. The announcement was made by the Chair that no quorum was present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order, it seems to the Chair, is the calling of the roll on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate adjourn. The Secretary will

McLean So the Senate refused to adjourn,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It having developed that a quorum have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely desire very briefly to call the attention of those who were not present when this matter was being considered a few moments ago to the facts in the case.

On page 27 the committee have reported an amendment in favor of decreasing the appropriation of $8,000 for the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, as carried in the House bill, to $5,000. The motion is to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to, in order not to increase the House appropriation, but to have it remain in the bill as agreed to by the House, namely, $8,000.

The only objection to the amount being made $8,000 instead of $5,000 is raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], who says that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not really need $8,000 for this purpose. That statement is based upon the proposition that because last year there was an appropriation of $8,000 for the benefit of these Indians and all of it was not used, therefore he believes that for the coming year $8,000 will not be needed. That does not follow at all; that is not good logic, and it is not good judgment, because, whatever may have been the facts and conditions as to the use of the money appropriated last year, the need of the Indians increases rather than diminishes, because their territory is they are becoming more and more dependent. Of course the appropriation of $8,000 need not all be spent if it is not needed—it was not all spent last year; but are we going to say that because we find an economical agent looking after the expenditure of money, a man who is careful not to expend a dollar more than he is obliged to expend, therefore we are not going to allow him the money that we think ought being cleared up, their hunting grounds done away with, and to be used for the purposes of this provision?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will. Mr. GALLINGER, Will the Senator say approximately how many Seminole Indians there are in Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. There are 578, according to the report of the bureau, which had a census taken of the Indians there. Mr. GALLINGER. Are they decreasing, as the Indian population is in other parts of the country?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a difference of opinion about that. I think the majority of those acquainted with the Indians, their location, and their life, would say that they are about holding their own. I doubt if they are decreasing or increasing to any extent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are they to any extent engaging in agricultural or horticultural pursuits?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are just beginning, and that is the main purpose of this appropriation, I will say to the Senator, namely, to train them in agricultural pursuits so that they may take care of themselves, because soon their hunting grounds will be devoted to other uses, and they will be unable to make a living, unless they are taught agriculture and possibly other industrial pursuits. They are beginning to go to school now, which they formerly did not do at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are there schools for them on their reser-

Mr. FLETCHER. They are going to the public schools furnished by the State. I will say, Mr. President, briefly, that this item of $8,000 would amount to less than $14 a head if it were used. If it is not needed and is not used by the agent who is looking after the expenditures down there, then, of course, it will go back to the Treasury, but it would not, as I have said, amount to more than $14 a head if it were used. Following this Florida item in the bill is an item in section 5 for the support and civilization of the Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho, for which an appropriation of $30,000 is made. There are 1,794 of those Indians, for whose care and relief $30,000 are appropriated. Of the Florida Seminoles there are 578, and we only ask $8,000 for their care and relief. According to the statistics furnished us by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], this item, if it were in accordance with the average appropriations in this bill, would be $26,000, and cutting that in half would leave $13,000; in other words, according to his estimate, $22.50 a head is appropriated in this bill for all the Indians in the country; so that this item would be $13,000 under that calculation, or $26,000 under his first estimate, on the basis of the $15,000,000 carried in the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if these Indians have any property of their own?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a reservation of land off to the side of the Everglades, but very little of it is fit for agriculture.

There is some effort being made to acquire land for them from the State and from the Government, but they have a reservation which could be utilized for the purpose of training them in

Mr. VARDAMAN. How much did they use last year?
Mr. FLETCHER. According to this report, there was an unexpended balance of $1,301 last year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the Senator personally familiar with the conditions down there?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes; quite so. I have not visited the camps of the Indians, but I have seen them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator thinks this appropriation ought to be made?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do think that there ought to be $8,000 appropriated for their benefit during the fiscal year from June,

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, I shall vote for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it will be needed. I believe that the need is increasing there, and that the agent will find that he can properly and wisely use that amount of money for the benefit of these Indians, and that they will need it for the next year.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. I suppose my colleague [Mr. Fletcher] has covered pretty fully the conditions so far as this appropriation is concerned. I have gone through the bill, and have noted that not only is the appropriation as it came to the Senate from the House for the Indians in Florida the smallest of all the appropriations, but it is the only one that has been reduced, which seems to me to be rather an unusual condition. I understand in a general way that the reason for that is that the appropriation heretofore made has not been entirely used up. Now, that does not indicate that the money ought not to be used. It rather indicates, perhaps, that the gentleman in charge of it ought to be displaced by somebody else, because there can be no question but that $8,000 can be used many times over for the benefit of those Seminole Indians in Florida.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the Senator if he does not know that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs only estimated for $5,000, and told the committee that $5,000 was all that he needed and all that he could use?

Mr. BRYAN. I understand he said that because the amount appropriated had not been used last year. However, Mr. President, I do not care about that at all. We had better leave it out altogether if the appropriation is simply for paying the salary of somebody who has nothing to do. There are somewhere between 600 and 1,000 Seminole Indians, and the money can be well spent for their benefit. I do not understand why the committee should single out these particular Indians as the only ones for whom they would not appropriate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator know how these Indians maintain themselves now?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, Mr. President; I am quite familiar with that. In fact, I was down in that section of the State 20 years ago, and became acquainted with a good many of the Indians They maintain themselves generally by hunting and themselves. fishing. They use the Everglades for hunting and fishing. They caught otters and alligators, and sold alligator hides and otter skins. Now, that great swamp is being reclaimed, and it is becoming a very serious question as to what will be done with No great progress has ever been made with these Indians. Of course, they were entitled to go to the Indian Territory, and if they had done so they would have shared the lands there. Instead of going they took to the then unexplored territory lying in the lower interior of the State, hid out, and persistently refused to leave their hunting grounds. They have stayed there. Efforts have been made many times to civilize them, and some progress has been made. Churches of various denominations have taken hold of the matter. Missions now exist among the Indians, and they have taken some of them and sent them to college. They have not made much progress, however. Now, the Seminoles seem to gather out of the Everglades around Palm Beach and Miami. They formerly were more independent than they appear to be now. The hunting grounds are disappearing. They flock to these resorts. They are around there, having their pictures taken, and learning to speak English more. and doing less of the work that they formerly did.

I do not know how money could be better spent. amendment will not be agreed to. It may be that the man in charge of this work is taking the amount of money that is appropriated and spending it for his salary and the salary of some-body else. If so, that man ought to be gotten rid of and somebody else put in his place.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the report shows that the salary that was paid last year was only $376.67.

Mr. BRYAN. What was done with the rest of it? Of course, $8,000 is a small amount for the purpose expressed here, for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians and for purposes of their civilization and education.

Mr. CURTIS. The rest was spent for traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. BRYAN. Many times $8,000 could be spent in useful ways among them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether it could be used to educate them in agricultural matters?

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator that practically no progress has been made with them in that direction. They are full-blooded Indians. They are peaceable. They have changed in that respect. Formerly they were very much disposed to fight. The Senator knows that there have been two Indian wars down there—the Seminole Indian War of 1837 and again

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand that this $8,000 is to be used simply to relieve their wants, or is it to educate them?

Mr. BRYAN. According to the appropriation it is for the relief of distress among them and for purposes of civilization and education. Of course, there would be no need of any appropriation for education at all-

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, I will say that those who are taking to education at all are attending the public schools of the State. There are a few in the public schools; but they are beginning now the work of teaching them agriculture, and that is one of the purposes of this appropriation. The appropriation last year was the first step in that direction, and I think now they are giving more attention to that matter. That is the main thing to be accomplished.

Mr. BRYAN. I should dislike very much to see this apparent discrimination against these Indians placed in the bill. I imagine that there are more of them than in many of the States where the appropriations are large.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, by turning to the report on page

16 I find a very plain statement:

Appropriation, $5,000; estimate, $5,000.

My experience on the Indian Affairs Committee leads me to believe that the commissioner is quite apt to ask for whatever he thinks the necessities demand; and so far as I can learn from the statements of the Senators from Florida, they do not present any concrete statement upon which to base an advance here. They present only the general statement that it is perfectly easy to use $5,000 or $25,000 for these Indians.

My recollection is that these Indians are strolling fishermen; that they live as they can all the year long, without any help of any account from the Government. As the Senator has well said, they do not want to be educated. They are full-blooded Indians.

It seems to me that we ought not to increase this appropriation beyond the estimates of the department without some showing that an increase is actually needed, because there is no man so well able to judge about that as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not pretend to be very familiar with this subject or with what has been done in the past. My impression is that the estimate was not made for a larger amount because the amounts heretofore appropriated have not been used up by the man in charge. My proposition is that they ought to have been used up. There is distress among these Indians.

I have been appealed to many times since I have been in the Senate to introduce a bill to have a reservation set aside for the Seminole Indians. Perhaps I have been recreant in my trust not to have done so; but there have been other matters, and, anyway, I have not done it. There are a number of people in the State who are taking an interest in the Seminole Indians. One lady of my acquaintance has become acquainted with a good many of them and she has published an Indian dictionary. I imagine that much more than this amount of money is being spent by well-inclined people, philanthropic people, who go among these Indians. I know there is a church mission established among them. Now, I say that something is the matter when a man is allowed $8,000 to relieve their distress and for their civilization, and has not spent that much money. There can not be any doubt about that proposition.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to suggest to the Senator that fre quently we can judge as to what we need next year by what we spent last year.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. Mr. PAGE. Unless the Senator can show that there has been some neglect, unless he can show that there has been some wrong done, it seems to me that we ought to judge of what we should spend next year by what we were compelled to spend last The fact that we have some good people there who are willing to contribute to the spiritual welfare of those Indians should not change very much the action of the Senate on an appropriation where the estimates and recommendations of the department are clear, and are based upon the fact that we spent less than we appropriated last year.

Mr. President, the House committee and the Mr. BRYAN. House itself did not seem to be under the idea that they would have to accept the estimate. They seem to have been sufficiently familiar with this question to know that an additional amount ought to be given, and they gave it, both in the committee and in the House. I do not subscribe to the doctrine that because somebody in a department says that a certain amount is all that is needed Congress is bound to accept that. The committ the House did not do it, and the House itself did not do it. The committee of

Mr. PAGE. But does the Senator give one single, concrete reason why we should not do it? The Senator speaks generally, and says that there is an opportunity to spend three or four times this amount; but the commissioner, who knows about this matter, says that $5,000 is sufficient.

Mr. BRYAN. Who knows about it?
Mr. PAGE. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs.
Mr. BRYAN. He does not know a thing about it. I know as much about it as he does, and I do not know much about it myself.

Mr. VARDAMAN.

Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER.

Mr. President, there is one thing that I might mention there, if the Senator will pardon me a minute, as a reason why, perhaps, more was not spent of the appropriation last year, namely, because the agent in charge of that expenditure happened to be chaplain in one of the companies that was ordered to the border, and he has been out of the State ever

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the total appropriation of $8,000 is less than $16 per capita, which is proposed to be ex-Mr. President, the total appropriation of pended for the amelioration of the condition of these homeless, helpless, depauperated people. These denizens of the forest are unfamiliar with the ways of civilization, unaccustomed to the habits of the white man, and utterly helpless and would starve in a land of limitless fertility unless the white man should teach them how to care for themselves. During the process of tutelage, there is nothing for the Government to do save to care for and maintain them. Their lands have been taken from them by the white man. The onward march of civilization has driven them to the frontier, and the chilling winds of Anglo-Saxon charity has frozen the genial current of their souls and left them in the bleak desert of life, hopeless They are the wards of the Governmentand helpless. they are recognized as such by the law of the land which has the approval of the better and more humane public sentiment. And it is the duty of the Government to at least supply them with the necessities of life. I can not understand how anything can be done for them to an appreciable extent with the small amount of money asked for in this bill. I do not know what estimate has been made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs but I am going to concede to the commissioner the very best motive in what he has done. But I do know that a man having any interest in the material or spiritual welfare of those people would not expect very much good to come to them where the amount of money expended in their behalf was as small as that carried in this bill. I think when we come to consider the interest of helpless people of this character we ought not to be parsimonious. It is not humane. It is not in keeping with our ideas of duty to the weak, to the helpless and the needy to measure with the Shylock standard the money appropriated for their support. This rich Government has taken everything that the Indian had. His "happy hunting ground" has been converted into the productive farm, and where he hunted the antelope, the deer, and the wild birds of the plains will now be found progressive cities, splendid farms inhabited by prosperous and enterprising white people. It presents a melancholy picture to me, and one that stirs deeply my sense of commiseration. I had rather go beyond that which is actually needed than to fall short of the real necessities of life. If I must err at all, let me err on the side of charity and liberality in dealing with people of this character. We are not so careful when it comes to throwing away $35,000 and spending a couple of hundred thousand or a million dollars to mobilize the Army and the Navy in order to pull off this great show on the 4th of March, with all of its regal tend-encies and display. Oh, Mr. President, it is not pertinent to the question at issue, but I will be pardoned for expressing the hope that I may live to see one great Democrat who will bring to the office of President that sublime democratic simplicity which characterized the conduct of Thomas Jefferson, the greatest President of this unparalleled Republic.

I want to see the President of these United States body forth in his official conduct and life the real relationship between him and the people. I want to see him glorify the function of the servant and avoid everything that even smacks of the assumption of royal authority or ostentatious display in that great office. In so doing the people would be taught the dignity and power of private citizenship and their responsibility for their Government. No; there is no very vigorous protest when it comes to making appropriations out of the depleted Treasury for such regal displays as we are to have on the 4th of March. The employees of the Government may work for starvation wages and these unfortunate Indians may perish for the necessities of life, but the pomp and circumstance of the inaugural parade must be pulled off at any cost. I do not think, however, that the seeming neglect of these unfortunate people is due to the lack of charity on the part of Senators, but I fear we have not tried to put ourselves in their places. Everything is comfortable with us. The meals are regular, our clothing is ample, our homes are warm. We are not exposed to the chilling blasts of winter or the blistering suns of summer. We are in the habit of dealing with our equals and watching the man who is inclined to demand in business transactions the pound of flesh. Probably our failure to comprehend the sufferings of the poor is due to a lack of imagination or a defect in the imagination. We can not feel the pinch of poverty; we can not hear their We do not see the indescribable expression of want, woe, and anxiety upon their stolid faces. The dark, deep tragedy in their lives to us is but a passing inconsequential impression. To my mind, the duty of the United States Government is clear and distinct. There should be no hesitation in the performance of the duty which presses upon us as representatives of the people in dealing with this question. If necessary to raise funds, I shall cheerfully vote to levy a tax to take care of these people as they ought to be cared for; but I do not think it is creditable to the heart of this Nation. In truth, I do not think that we, representing the wishes of the American people, ought to be guided by what some official in Washington may say with reference to a matter so free from doubt as this ques tion appears to me. But if there be a doubt about it, I will give the benefit of the doubt to the Indians. I would rather err on the side of generosity than to be guilty of the crime of parsimony in dealing with these indigent, helpless "stoics of the woods," whose only resource is the charity of their despoilers, the white man.

Mr. PAGE, Mr. President, I do not concede that the Senator ' from Mississippi has a stronger desire than myself to see the Indian properly treated. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I have always been on the side of liberality and justice to the Indians. The Senator says that these lands have been taken away from them. I should like to know if anybody has stated here upon knowledge that any lands that they posassed one year ago are not possessed by them now? Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, neglect a year ago does not justify any sort of neglect of them to-day. Mr. PAGE. If it is neglect, I agree that the Senator is right; but no one has shown to-day that there has been any neglect, so far as I have heard. I should like to have the statement made by some one who knows what he is talking about that there has been neglect. I want to know what that neglect is, because I know of no man better able to judge as to what is needed than the commissioner; and until somebody with better knowledge can tell us that there is neglect and specify what that neglect is, I think we ought to take his statement,

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, it has just been stated and reiterated several times upon the floor of the Chamber that the lands upon which these people hunted and fished are being taken from them. That is their only source of revenue. They have no other means of making a living. We have neglected them and we have not tried to teach them the better industry of agriculture to make them self-sustaining. Now, the Senator knows very well that we can not do very much for them if we only expend about $8 per capita upon them.

Mr. PAGE. But we are not seeking now, if the Senator will permit me, to educate those Indians.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the purpose of this appropriation as it was read a moment ago by the Senator from Florida. If it were not the purpose of the appropriation to educate them and teach them to be self-sustaining, that purpose should be written in the law by the Senate. In other words, haste nor economy should prevent the Congress in doing its full duty to

But the Senator from Florida also said that the Mr. PAGE.

State of Florida was taking care of their education.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; Mr. President. Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, the State of Florida is helping where The Senator from Vermont knows, I dare say, that quite a number of these people do not live where they can take advantage of suitable schools maintained for the white children. True to the instincts of the Indian, they get as far away from the white man's civilization as is possible. But where they are sufficiently advanced in the arts of civilization and live within reach of the State schools, of course, they are permitted to attend them. The purpose of this appropriation is to enable the Indian Commissioner to go out and find the Indian that needs and is willing to accept the white man's civilization and to do something for him.

The Government has not acted with that scrupulous fidelity to the trust that the highest sense of morality demands in dealing with the Indian. There is a very pathetic instance in my own State. There are a thousand or fifteen hundred poor old Choctaws, bereft of their lands, homeless and helpless in the midst of plenty, who are being shamefully neglected by the Government. They are simply flotsams and jetsams on the sea of life. Nobody cares particularly anything about them. They can not vote and are not factors in the upbuilding of society. They were invited to go to Oklahoma and there share the benefaction which the National Government provided for them, but they did not want to leave their home. They did not want to leave the land of their fathers. Now, because they failed to exercise the shrewd and discriminating judgment of the Anglo-Saxon, and to place the estimate upon the dollar that the modern money-worshipping white man does, they are now told they have no claim upon the Government and that they must suffer for their indiscretion. Mr. President, these people do not know how to take advantage of opportunity when it knocks at the doors of their huts, and, not knowing the advantages of opportunities, they should not be punished for their failure to improve the opportunities that have come to them. ured by the standards of our civilization, they are but children, and it is the purpose of this humane appropriation to employ benevolent men and women to go out among these people, make conquests of their hearts, control their minds, inspire them to strive for higher and better things. That is the purpose of it. In the name of justice and humanity, I plead with the Senate not to be parsimonious, stingy, cold, and calculating in dealing with the helpless wards of this rich Republic.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, do not let us believe, either, that we are going to go there and take those full-blooded Indians, who live by fishing and hunting and nothing else, and, without establishing any schools there, educate them. That can not be done, and $5,000 or $8,000 or five times $5,000 can not do it. We do not propose to do it by this appropriation. We simply propose to relieve distress. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that $5,000 is all that can be used, and that all that was appropriated last year was not used; and we are bound to presume that justice was done last year. I do not know that we can presume any other way. If some Senator can say positively that wrong was done them, I should like to have him say so. So far as I know, and so far as appears here, they are being well

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate struck out $8,000 and inserted $5,000 for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education.

On that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on the motion for reconsideration. I am per- Chilton fectly willing to have the vote reconsidered, but then I do want the yeas and nays on the increase itself.

Mr. VARDAMAN. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to withdraw the request for the yeas and

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on the reconsideration of the vote

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that may be done; and without objection, the motion to reconsider will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment striking out "$8,000" and inserting "$5,000."

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Let it be understood that those who vote for raising the appropriation from five to eight thousand dollars will vote " nay those in favor of the Senate amendment will vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; those in favor of striking out "$8,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000" will signify it by saying "yea" when their names are called. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean], who is absent, to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pom-ERENE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. Making the same announcement that I have made before with reference to my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], I withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Brady]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] on public business at another place. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WALSH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt], as announced on an earlier roll call, and vote "nay."

Mr. CATRON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. Works] and

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I feel at liberty to ignore my pair on many of these items, according to an understanding with him, but I doubt it as to this question, and therefore refrain from voting. I simply desire to announce the pair that I may assist in making a quorum.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 27, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee for the profound interest agitating the minds and hearts of men individually and collectively throughout the world with a view of devising ways and means by which the wars now raging may be brought to an end and through which a basis may be reached upon which a world-wide peace may be established; that peace may become stronger than the brutal instincts which lead to war with its unmitigated evils; that liberty, justice, and equal rights for all may be maintained in brotherly love and

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, N. Y.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House Senate bill 7537, authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the town of Allegheny, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y., on the Speaker's table, a bill of like tenor being on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate bill

7537, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co., a rallroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the States of New York and Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, on the location of the existing structure and suitable to the interest of navigation, in the town of Allegheny, county of Cattaraugus, and State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amend-

On line 9, strike out the word "Allegheny" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Allegany."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Allegheny" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Allegany."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to conform to the text.

By unanimous consent, a House bill of similar tenor (H. R. 19298) was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order made yesterday the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] to conclude the pension bill (H. R. 20496).

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned yesterday an amendment was pending, which I ask to have the Clerk again report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cline] yesterday afternoon made a very eloquent appeal on behalf of this pensioner. The case is a pathetic one. is no doubt about that. The committee has many difficulties to meet with in handling these pension claims. Are we to be in-fluenced wholly by pathos? Are we to turn over the Treasury to people merely because they are destitute? Are we to make need the test in granting pensions? If so, this is a worthy case, and I suppose we might as well start with it; but there are thousands of cases of destitution, Mr. Speaker. In no case that is presented to the committee is there anything but destitution. In many cases the destitution is most pitiful, and the person asking for the pension is undoubtedly an object of charity. But the Pension Committee has taken the position that they are not justified in opening up the Treasury merely because their feelings may have been reached.

The case referred to by the gentleman from Indiana is a pathetic case, but I want to assure the House that many cases that come before the committee are just as pathetic. There are hundreds of cases just as pathetic. This man is already getting a pension. The committee resolved every doubt in his favor and gave him an increase, thinking perhaps he was entitled to something additional. But if we are to open up a pension bill every time we bring it in here and allow a plea of pathos to be presented to us, then I want to say there will be no end to the granting of pensions.

There must be some limitations; there must be some rule. Let me read from the report of the committee, and I want to say that this report was not prepared to sustain an adverse decision on this claim, but is prepared by the examiner so as to clearly show the facts. This is the report:

show the facts. This is the report:

Soldier filed and established a claim under the general law and was allowed $10 per month from August 12, 1910, for disease of the bowels and stomach, which he now receives. A claim for increase in rate was rejected recently on the ground the present rate is adequate to cover the disability for which pensioned. The Bureau of Pensions refuses to accept paralysis as result of disease of bowels and stomach for which he is now receiving a pension of $10 per month. A physician testifies, in 1915, that he is totally incapacitated to perform manual labor, as he suffers from gastrointestinal catarrh, intestinal indigestion, and habitual constipation alternating with diarrhea, and atrophied lower limbs, which are paralyzed.

Mr. Speaker if the paralyzis is the result of his service, then

Mr. Speaker, if the paralysis is the result of his service, then $24 is not adequate, but the committee believes that that paralysis is not due to his service, that it is due to some other cause. It is true the pensioner tries to make a showing of fact that might make it possible that the paralysis was due to his service, but we find it is not so. We have sat upon the evidence laid before us as a jury, and have returned a verdict that the paralysis is not due to his service. We thought perhaps his disease of the bowels was sufficient to justify some increase, and we wanted to give the man the benefit of every doubt. We have given him the benefit of every doubt, and have increased his pension from $10 a month, which is all the bureau would allow him, to $17 a month, and now the gentleman wants to give him $7 a month more. There will be no end to this business if it is once started.

Mr. LANGLEY rose.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to ask a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I believe the gentleman's statement, to-gether with what he read from the report, covers what I had in mind. From what the gentleman says the chief portion of this soldier's disability is clearly not due to the service.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is the situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry. I had a plain understanding yesterday that if the consideration of the fortification bill was not pressed and I would permit the pension bill to come up, that this morning immediately after the reading of the Journal we might go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of that bill. Last evening, very late, an agreement was entered into to take up the pension bill this morning as unfinished business. I do not want to seem disagreeable, but I think it is important that the supply bills be passed. I would like to inquire how much time is going to be taken in the consideration of this bill. If there is to be an extension of debate it evidently will take considerable time.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, as the Chair and gentlemen know who were present last night when the agreement was entered into by which the bill was made in order after the read- | gestion to proceed with this matter, and the stenographic report ing of the Journal, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] was anxious to present to the House resolutions upon the death of Mr. FINLEY, and was anxious to have those resolutions messaged to the Senate. We agreed to give way in order that the resolutions might be considered. Because of that the House, by unanimous consent, agreed that the bill should be taken up this morning. I was about to object to any extension of debate, because we are anxious to proceed with the bill, and ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLINE) there were 27 aves and 40 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following as a new section:
"The name of Margaret A. Weed, former widow of Samuel Henry, late of Capt Bacon's Kentucky Militia, War of 1812, and pay her a pension of $20 per month."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were 41 ayes and no noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Keating, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20453.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privi-lege, and I ask that the resolution I send to the desk be read.

House resolution 473.

hereas the report of the colloquy between Messrs. Norton of North Dakota, Fess of Ohio, Heflin of Alabama, and Ragsdale of South Carolina as printed in the Record of January 25, 1917, differs from the official reports of the colloquy, as will be shown by reference to the typewritten reports now on file and the printed report of the Record of January 25, 1917:

Resolved, That the RECORD of January 25, 1917, be amended by printing the colloquies between Messrs, Norton of North Dakota, Fress of Ohio, Heflin of Alabama, and Ragdale of South Carolina as reported by the Official Reporters of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that is not a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a privileged resolution, as it goes to the good order of the House. The Chair investigated that matter yesterday.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to agree on some time with the gentleman from South Carolina to discuss the resolution. I want to be heard on it myself, if we can agree on the time. He can advocate the resolution and I most respectfully ask an opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina want any time on this resolution?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I do not; I do not care to be interrupted by anyone. The facts are the official record does not agree with the printed Record. It is not within my province to determine which is right. I have no objection to the gentleman from Alabama making any statement that he may make, or to show that the report of the Official Reporters is incorrect. All I ask is that the official report made by the reporters of this House be put into the Record. That is all I ask. Surely there can be nothing wrong in that, and nothing that should offend the feelings of the gentleman from Alabama in that request.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did revise my remarks, as every man in this House does who has wisdom enough to say anything that is worth saying. While I did revise my remarks, the points made are the ones stated on the floor of the House, and I stand ready to prove that by Democratic Members who were present. It may be that the reporter was a little more friendly inclined to the Member from South Carolina who was aiding the Republican Party in his assault on the Democratic administration. That may be; and that the reporters failed to note some of the things that were said, as they did on yesterday, when I asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN1 to withdraw his objection to Mr. RAGSDALE'S SUGdoes not show that. I do not wonder that the gentleman from South Carolina objects, for the Democrats in his district—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will confine himself to the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am speaking on the resolution. The SPEAKER. The gentleman may be speaking on it, but he is not speaking about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Speaker of the House will not permit me to discuss and give my reasons for the remarks that I made here, which the gentleman from South Carolina wants to change, then I am at the mercy of the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. Well, it is the business of the Speaker of the House to keep order here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in order and in my own way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not transgress the rules of the House. I was merely stating here that the gentleman's speech day before yesterday to which I replied was applauded by the Republican side. He was attacking-and unwarrantedly-the Democratic Secretary of War, and I replied to that speech. He was applauded by the Republicans of the House. In my speech, according to the stenographer's printed report, there were some Republican interruptions without my consent, designed to aid the gentleman from South Carolina in his attack on the Democratic administration, and I struck them out. [Laughter.]

I had the right to strike them out under the rules of the House; no Member has the right to inject himself into your speech unless you yield to him, and no bunch of Republicans can by their noise cause you to stop your speech and hold you up in order to aid the gentleman from South Carolina. I did not yield to them. Why should I let that boisterous aid to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] appear in the belly of my speech. [Applause.] I did not want it in there. [Ap-plause on the Democratic side.] I did not yield to them, and when I struck that out of my speech I did the greatest kindness that could have been done to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE]. It would have been better, not for him but for somebody else—the Democrats of his district—if I had permitted that Republican applause to remain. It never was injected into my speech until I called attention to the fact that they, the Republicans, were applauding his attack upon a Democratic administration; and all this after he had sought at the White House an indorsement to aid him in his candidacy in the congressional primary in his district and it was refused.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has the right to defend himself; but I think not in this way, it seems

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, then I will confine myself immediately to the matter in hand. The gentleman from South Carolina, before his speech day before yesterday, obtained some data from the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War gave him the information for his personal benefit and requested him not to use it publicly, but just as soon as he got it, or shortly thereafter, he made it public and used it in this House, and the RECORD bears out that statement, and my information from the War Department to-day sustains my statement in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the sole question before the House is whether the stenographers' notes shall be published in the RECORD. These extraneous matters have nothing to do with it.

Mr. HEFLIN. As to that, I wish to say that the stenographic report did not show applause following the points that made, replying to the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina, but I stand ready to prove by the majority leader of the House that he applauded those sentiments, and that Mr. Black of Texas and Mr. Howard of Georgia and others applauded those sentiments. Now, am I to let the gentleman from South Carolina, by the aid of a Republican stenographer who may be in sympathy with him in his attack on the Democratic administration, deprive me of my right to show the I will tell you how to settle this question. Ask for a committee of five to be appointed, three Democrats and two Republicans—true, the Republicans are partisans, but when they assail the Democratic side they are speaking as Republicans, and when a Democrat attacks the administration he ought to go over there on the Republican side with those with whom he consorts and do in the open what he does here in private. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Speaker appoint five members to take testimony about this matter and see whether or not my revised remarks are in fact in substance just what I said on the floor of the House. As I have said, I admit that I revised my remarks, but no handclapping or applause noted in my speech appears except where Democrats applauded, and I stand ready to produce the proof by Democrats. [Applause; and applause on Democratic side.] Is the gentleman willing to let that committee report to this House as to whether or not he in his contention is right or whether I am right? Now, I do not wonder at the gentleman wanting to straighten out this thing, and his district in South Carolina is entitled to have a Democrat here who will support Democratic policies and principles in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine his remarks to this resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am trying my best to confine my remarks to the issue in this case. Now, I suggest that to the Speaker, that he appoint a committee to take testimony and investigate this whole matter. I have witnesses to produce, and let the stenographer testify. I resist the motion to submit the case upon the notes of the Republican stenographer, but I ask for the testimony of loyal Democrats in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I make the motion as a substitute that the Speaker appoint a committee of three Democrats and two Republicans to take this matter in hand and investigate it, to have witnesses come before it, and have the stenographic reports, and to report back to this House as to whether or not I made the speech, in substance, on the floor of the House that appears in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send his substitute up, the Chair will put it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would suggest myself that a committee of three be appointed to look into this matter and report to the House. Of course no man's speech of any length, unless written beforehand, has ever been printed in the Record exactly like the stenographer's notes, because he has the right to revise. Sometimes there are grammatical mistakes. Very frequently Very frequently part of what Members say is omitted from the notes, and I do not think it has ever occurred in the history of the Congress where a man's speech has been required to be put in the Record in exact accordance with the notes

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that nine times out of ten I never revise my speeches.

Mr. MANN. And I have never seen a speech or the notes of speech that I have put in the RECORD for 10 years.

Mr. KITCHIN. You will notice that the speeches of the gentlemen in the RECORD are better than they are when made on the floor sometimes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is less excited when he reads them. Of course I know very well the gentleman's speeches are vastly improved by revision over what they are when they e made. My speeches are not revised.
Mr. KITCHIN. They ought to be. No doubt about that.
Mr. MANN. Perhaps they would be improved if they were, are made.

but the gentleman's certainly are.

Mr. KITCHIN. I really think, Mr. Speaker, we ought not to delay this matter. This is unfortunate. Let a committee of three be appointed to investigate the matter and make the corrections in the speeches or whatever it should be. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] will agree to Mr. RAGSDALE. I can not.

Now, Mr. Speaker

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I move as a substitute for that that committee of three be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] moves as a substitute for the gentleman's resolution that a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to investigate the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I doubt whether substitute is in order. Of course it would be in order to refer the resolution to a committee of three.

Mr. KITCHIN. I make the motion, then, to refer that resolution to a committee of three to make the investigation, and on that I move the previous question. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Now, Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment until the Chair states this thing. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] moves that this controversy, this resolution, and the whole thing be referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the previous question for a moment, so that the gentleman may have

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have five minutes each to discuss this motion of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent that each

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question.

Mr. RAGSDALE. It comes too late, for I have the floor. The SPEAKER. The trouble about that is that the gentleman from South Carolina never had the floor.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The Chair recognized me after the gentleman withdrew his motion, and I was recognized by the Chair and came up here to speak. With all due deference to the

The SPEAKER. I believe the gentleman states the facts as they are.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire that there shall be any feeling in this matter. I shall not attempt at this time to defend my Democracy. I have to account to no man here for the positions that I have taken on this floor. I have never transgressed the action of a Democratic primary, nor have I gone against a Democratic caucus. Further than these limita-tions on my Democracy, I answer to nobody on God's green earth but the people who have put their trust in my hands here and sent me on the floor as their Representative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish the gentleman from South Carolina-

Mr. RAGSDALE. All right, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (continuing). As he did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], to speak to this resolution.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The resolution, Mr. Speaker. All I ask in this, and the reason I oppose the substitute, is, that I do not object to a committee in order that the whole matter, after publication, be referred to a committee and there be determined whether or not it has been improperly reported. All that I ask in fairness to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] and myself is, that the gentleman from Alabama and myself, together with the gentlemen on the Republican side who engaged in the colloquy on the floor of the House, and the Official Reporters of this House who had a report of it-before that could be put in the Record it was corrected; it was corrected in part by myself; it was corrected in part, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] says, by himself-now, all I ask is that there be published in the RECORD the report by the official stenographers of this House, and then let the entire matter, after being printed in the RECORD, be referred to this committee to determine the correctness of this report and the correctness of the corrections made by the gentleman from Alabama. But, Mr. Speaker, is it fair for my colleague, in the course of his remarks, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] well knows, to refer to the "hickory-nut hills of South Carolina" and seek to bring in here by way of ridicule the name of the State that I represent here? Then, when he changed that in the remarks he has in-written there the words "Laughter" and "Laughter and applause on the Democratic side" and stricken out "Applause on the Republican side."

When those things have been done and the RECORD shows it, ought not the whole record to be published, and ought it not to come to all the Democratic Members of the House, so that they would have the whole record, and, having the whole record, refer this to a committee of three and let that committee determine whether or not this is correct? God knows I do not want any unfair advantage. I do not want anything to be done that is improper or unfair. What I want is that the truth be known. God knows every honest man who wants the truth wants to see that this record should be kept straight, and that the official stenographers, who are attacked in this report, should have vindication from the committee, and have it shown that they have written correctly what is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] to refer the resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Rass-DALE] to a committee of three to be appointed by the Speaker.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A division, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-eight gentlemen have risen in the negative. On this question the ayes are 50 and the noes are 68.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HEFLIN. We would like to have a roll call on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-nine gentlemen are present-not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is to refer the Ragsdale resolution to a committee of three to be appointed by the Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 137, answered "present" 23, not voting 126, as follows:

diana, Mr. Allen of Ohio, and Mr. Fess of Ohio.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate joint resolution 202, now on the Speaker's table, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Speaker laid before the House the joint resolution The Speaker laid before the House the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 5, 1917.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the joint resolution reported

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the joint resolution reported.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States, March 5, 1917, in accordance with such program as may be adopted by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives appointed under a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, including the pay for extra police for three days, at $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available; payment to be made upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said joint committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate concurrent resolution 30 and ask unanimous consent for its present

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 14th day of February, 1917, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as tellers on the part of the House Messrs. Rucker of Missouri and Mapes.

On motion of Mr. Rucker of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) was passed and the vote by which the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) was agreed to was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill (H. R. 20453), and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be confined to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and one hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sher-LEY] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that the general debate be not exceeding two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gilet]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Sherley was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifica-tions and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Mr. Houston in the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] desires to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend now to enter upon any discussion of the bill itself. It was framed in the subcommittee, and from our deliberations I think I am in general accord with the gentleman from Kentucky, who is chairman of the subcommittee and who will explain the bill, and I am sure will express my opinion upon it better than I should myself. I only wish to occupy a few moments in some desultory remarks justified under the latitude of general debate.

I have noticed recently in the public press the deliberate statement of two presidents that they did not intend to observe the law—one of those was the President of the United States, and the other was the president of the Federation of Labor. One statement has been very much criticized, but I have not observed any criticism of the other. The President of the United States stated that he did not intend to suggest to Congress, as required by law, how the deficiency in revenue this year should be supplied.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

What provision of the Constitution requires Mr. GORDON. that of the President?

Mr. GILLETT. I will tell the gentleman in a moment. The president of the Federation of Labor said that if a law was passed forbidding strikes he could be counted upon as one who would not obey that law.

Now, I do not mean that these two refusals to obey the law are equally culpable. I do not think they are. I think the refusal of the President of the United States was careless and inconsiderate, rather than defiant and lawless, but I think that the Chief Magistrate of the Nation should be exceedingly scrupulous both in letter and spirit in conforming to every law.

Now, this was not an unnecessary or an unwise or a partisan law. It was passed in 1909 when every branch was Republican. It was passed by a Republican Congress, imposing the duty upon a Republican President, and it was passed, as I remember, with general concurrence, because we had found that there must be cooperation between the executive and the legislative branches in providing for the deficiencies of revenue.

This law provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should report the estimates of appropriation which the different departments asked, and that then he should report the amount of revenue which could be anticipated. Then, if the appropriations needed were greater than the revenue the President should state to Congress his method of supplying that deficiency. The importance of this first step toward a budget system that is now being so much agitated was recognized by Prof. Ford, of Princeton University, who, in speaking of this provision, said:

Congress has taken a step toward connection of the powers, and has thus unwittingly started a movement of profound constitutional importance. The real hope of establishing budget control, and with it a genuine constitutional system, lies in the flow of political force in the channels thus opened.

He adds that the action taken by Congress making it the duty of the President to coordinate income and expenditure, as provided in the Smith amendment, "is the salvation of representative government in the United States.'

To be sure, the Democratic platform adopted in the last convention suggested that the first step toward the budget system was that all the appropriation bills of the House should be consolidated in one committee, but I assume that that plank, like most of the other planks of Democratic platforms, was adopted just to catch votes, and with no intention that it should ever be put in force, and from that day to this not a step has been taken in this House to adopt it, although last summer we sat here for weeks after the platform had been adopted, doing nothing but waiting on the Senate. The President's refusal to conform to the law and suggestion as to how the revenue should be raised was not an accidental one or because he was not aware of the existence of the law. swering the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gor-DON], who asked what constitutional obligation there was on the President, let me quote what the President himself said in his message of December, 1915, when he did come before Congress and suggest to us how we should balance the revenues and expenditures. He said:

It is made my duty by law whenever the estimates of expenditure exceed the estimate of revenue to call the attention of Congress to the fact and suggest any means of meeting the deficiency that it may be wise or possible for me to suggest. I am ready to believe that it would be my duty to do so in any case.

So, whatever the gentleman from Ohio may think, the President of the United States thinks it is his duty either under the law or without the law to make these suggestions. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have any of these suggestions been carried out?

Mr. GILLETT. I was going to suggest something on that Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the law been heretofore observed by his predecessor?

Mr. GILLETT. I think it has. As a matter of fact, under Republican administrations it was not the habit to have a deficiency of revenue, and so there was seldom occasion to observe the law. [Applause on the Republican side.] When that did happen once the President suggested that expenditures should be cut down to conform to the revenue.

Now, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, it may be that the experience of the President with his message of December, 1915, has discouraged him from repeating such suggestions. Because he suggested the revenues should be increased by new taxation on various articles-gasoline, as I remember, and motor vehicles and others—and there was at once such a popular dissatisfaction manifested that, with the usual Democratic desire to avoid unpopularity, that was the last we ever heard of those proposed taxes. The committee, if it ever considered them, never reported on them, and the administration at once abandoned them. In fact, as far as I can see, the guiding star of this administration in looking for taxation has been to levy taxes which will bear on as few persons as possible. [Applause.] Inasmuch as the taxes which the President suggested were of general application, they were very soon abandoned. Unpopularity and not injustice is what this administration has seemed to endeavor to avoid in taxation. Of course, it is hard to find any taxes that are popular.

No rogue e'er felt the halter draw With good opinion of the law.

I suppose the same applies to taxation, and so almost any taxation will create protest from the victims of it; but if the outcry is founded upon injustice then it ought to be remedied. If it is merely founded upon the fact that they have to pay money when they ought to pay their share, it ought properly to be disregarded. But the President this year has declined absolutely to make us any propositions at all, and it seems to me this is the year when it would be singularly appropriate and incumbent upon him to make such suggestions, because the deficiency is so enormous.

The estimates of appropriations, exclusive of deficiency and miscellaneous items, for the fiscal year to begin July 1, 1917, and end June 30, 1918, submitted to Congress by the Executive on December 4 last aggregate $1,654,819,654.03, the largest amount ever requested by any administration. They exceed the estimates similarly submitted at the beginning of the last session of Congress by $368,961,845.87, and exceed the appropriations, exclusive of deficiency and miscellaneous items, for the current fiscal year by $181,936,211.39. Every appropriation bill is increased over the amount carried for the current year with the exception of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask whether these requests include the amount to be expended under the shipping bill, the nitrate plant, the munitions plant, and so forth? Mr. GILLETT. Yes; they include those.

The estimated revenues for the fiscal year 1918, which are to meet the estimated appropriations of $1,654,819,654.03, amount to $1,341,550,000, a sum which is $313,269,654.03 less than the amount of the estimated appropriations. Since the submission of the Book of Estimates in December supplemental or additional estimates for the fiscal year 1918 amounting to $52,500,000 have been forwarded to Congress, including $25,000,000 for purchase of the Danish Islands. This does not constitute the total which such additional estimates will reach, and by the time the session closes the amount will no doubt be very much greater. Estimates have not been submitted for many items which will probably be appropriated for at this session. The proposal to increase by 5 and 10 per cent the salaries of certain grades of employees in the Government service will require about $25,000,-Various bills are pending in either the House or Senate which, if they become laws, will add very large sums to the total of appropriations. Included in this list is the public-buildings bill, the vocational-education bill, the fish-hatcheries bill, the flood-control bill, the bill to increase the pay of employees of the meat-inspection service, and a number of others. It will be seen, therefore, that the estimated appropriations, taking into account the items just mentioned, will exceed the estimated revenues for the next fiscal year by considerably more than

The daily Treasury statement of January 22, 1917, shows a working balance in the general fund of $93,610,344.37. This would be a safe balance if it represented that amount of unpledged money. There has been deposited to that date in this fund the sum of $51,758,311 for the retirement of outstanding national bank and Federal reserve bank notes that have been assumed by the United States. If that sum be deducted, the amount remaining is $41,852,033.37. The sum of $69,998,843.61 has been placed to the credit of disbursing officers and was subject to their checks to the full amount; so that instead of a general fund in the Treasury of $93,610,344,37 on January 22, 1917, there was in reality a deficit of $28,146,810.24. The sum of about $100,000,000 will be necessary, therefore, to restore a working balance in the general fund.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Why do we carry that statement of $93,000,000 balance with that situation as it is?

The gentleman must ask the Secretary of Mr. GILLETT. the Treasury. The gentleman remembers doubtless that order which he issued just before election two or three years ago in September, which suddenly swelled the Treasury balance overnight about $100,000,000-a mere matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It went up from $20,000,000 to something over $100,000,000 overnight.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Is not that equivalent to what would happen to a man if in estimating the amount of his bank balance he simply took the amount of money he had in the bank and neglected to take account of the checks that were outstanding which he had drawn?
Mr. GILLETT. Yes; as though he did not look at his stubs.

[Laughter.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that under our system of collecting income taxes a very large proportion of the revenue does not come in until the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. GILLETT. I will speak of that in a moment. The dis-bursements for the first six months of the fiscal year 1917, which ended on December 31, 1916, exceeded the receipts by approximately $126,000,000. The disbursements will undoubtedly be larger during the last six months of the fiscal year than during the first six months for the reason that many appropriations made in bills for the fiscal year 1918 which will be laws before the session ends will be available for expenditure in the fiscal year 1917, and larger sums will be expended on account of the Army and Navy in the latter period than in the former. The appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year 1917 and prior years will be paid from the receipts re-ceived during the fiscal year 1917. The deficiency estimates received thus far aggregate about $60,000,000, and do not include the larger proportion of estimates for the general deficiency It should be stated that the deficiency estimates thus far include about $36,500,000 on account of Army expenditures on the border. If the troops continue there, the figures stated above will become much larger. It is conservative to say that these estimates will aggregate at least $100,000,000, and the appropriations under them will undoubtedly reach the figure of $90,000,000, which the revenues of 1917 will have to meet. The prospective needs of the Treasury during the remainder of the fiscal year, over and above the receipts that will normally be recived during that period, except income taxes, will be about $340,000,000. The receipts from the income taxes on individuals and corporations are received near the end of the fiscal year, and are estimated at $245,000,000, which leaves a requirement of additional revenue for this fiscal year of $95,000,000.

The estimated appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 exceed the estimated revenues of that period by more than $400,000,000, as heretofore stated. It will be seen, therefore, that additional revenue amounting to $500,000,000 will have to be raised at this session of Congress

When such a condition as that exists it seems to me that Congress is entitled to expect that the President will conform to what he considers the requirement of law and of his duty and suggest to us the best method to meet the extraordinary situation.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. GORDON. How much of this deficiency was the result of defending the country against invasion?

Mr. GILLETT. I thought we had always been at peace. thought that the political cry of the gentleman's party was that the President had preserved peace.

Mr. GORDON. That is exactly-Mr. LONGWORTH. Especially in Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. But were we not in danger of invasion?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think there was any serious danger of invasion which a band of cow-punchers could not have driven back.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell how much there was in the Treasury at the time the Democrats came in power?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember those exact figures; about one hundred and fifty millions, I think.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GILLETT. I do.

Mr. ROGERS. I wonder if the gentleman has noticed an article in this morning's New York Times which deals with the Democratic caucus of last night and from which I would like to read one sentence.

Mr. GILLETT. I have not seen it, but I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. "Chairman Kitchin defends the bill" is the subhead of this administration newspaper:

Addressing a group of insurgent southern Democrats, Mr. KITCHIN said, "You can tell your people that practically all of this tax will go north of Mason and Dixon's line."

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. There must have been Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield? There must have been a leak.

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. KREIDER. I wish the gentleman from Massachusetts would permit me to answer the question the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Smith] asked about the balance in the Treasury when Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated President. I wish to inform him the balance was a little over $149,000,000.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought it was more than that. Mr. KREIDER. I want to ask a question. Is the I want to ask a question. Is the gentleman repared to say how much money the Government of the United States has spent pursuing the so-called watchful waiting policy of the administration, including the expense of taking Cruz and then turning it over after we had cleaned up the streets and done a little plumbing work, and also when we sent the so-called punitive expedition into Mexico in their operations between the two lines of railroads who stopped when they got orders from Carranza to stop and are now withdrawing when he tells them to withdraw?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not give the details, but they have cost several hundred million dollars.

Mr. GORDON. Then, as a matter of fact, it exceeds a hundred and sixty-five million dollars?

Mr. GILLETT. It has been $165,000,000 just this year.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. KITCHIN. I notice the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers] read a statement from a New York paper—the New York Times-in which it is said that I said in the caucus last night that most of this tax-practically all of this taxwill come from north of Mason and Dixon's line. I did not say that, nor anything of the kind. I never mentioned the Mason and Dixon line, nor did I mention New York City; but I will say now that this tax will go to pay appropriations practically all, or most all, of which will go north of the Mason and Dixon line. The appropriation for preparedness will go for the most part to shipyards, munition makers, and so forth. These happen to be north of the Mason and Dixon line.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield? Where does the gentleman think the tax will fall—south of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think most, or the greater part, will be levied north of Mason and Dixon's line. All these fellows who live in States that will pay a large part of this tax can get rid of the location argument by removing down to my town of Scotland Neck and pay the tax from there.

Mr. GILLETT. They would not dare to. I suppose they are afraid of your taxgatherer taking-

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the taxes in my States are a great deal lower than in the State of Massachusetts, and some of these gentlemen might move down there to dodge the high taxation of Massachusetts, as it is reported they come here to Washington for that purpose.

Mr. GILLETT. I expect they could not dodge them very long, judging from what I see in the public press. This may have been as inaccurate as the gentleman from North Carolina said the other was.

The public press says a bond issue is to be authorized in order to meet some of this deficiency. Now, if that is true, I think it is especially unfortunate that the President did not come before us, as he says it is his duty to do, and advise us, for I am very sure he would have opposed a bond issue. We know he is always consistent; that he does not change his attitude; and so let me read to you what he said about a bond issue in one of his previous messages. He said:

If or one, do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for. The objects we are now proposing to spend money for can not be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own. It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Just a statement as to what the bond issue provides for in the revenue bill. It is for the payment for the Danish West India Islands and the Alaskan Railroad, and other items that are for permanent improvement,

Mr. GILLETT. How much of a bond issue is authorized? Mr. CANNON. That in addition to the $220,000,000 Panama bonds?

Mr. HELVERING. The nitrate plant, $20,000,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That makes $80,000,000 in all. Now, what

Mr. LONGWORTH. The shipping expenditure.
Mr. HELVERING. Two hundred and twenty million dollars unexpended Panama Canal bonds. That is $312,000,000 to pay for the expenses of the Mexican border and these permanent improvements

Mr. GILLETT. W. Mr. HELVERING.

We have not had war, have we? G. We have saved ourselves from war, which would have cost not this $160,000,000 but billions of dollars.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Panama bonds yet unissued amount to $240,500,000 and odd. The Treasury report this morning shows that.

Mr. HELVERING. The statement was transmitted to the Ways and Means Committee day before yesterday, Mr. FORDNEY. You authorize $300,000,000 indebtedness.

Mr. HELVERING. And an addition of $100,000,000 more that the Republicans authorized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Of Panama bonds?

Mr. HELVERING. No.
Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney] that in my understanding there were $201,000,000 and some odd hundred thousands of Panama bonds, but since the statement was made, as the public generally understood, $10,000,000 has been issued and set aside to be issued for a rural credit farm-loan bill. You see we provided for $10,000,000, and it is about $22,000,000 now. And as to the bonds to take care of the Mexican situation, and perhaps the purchase of the Danish West Indies, and the building of the Alaskan railway, and the armor-plate plant, it will take, including also the nitrate plant, and the $50,000,000 required by the shipping bill, both of which are taken care of by an authorization of these Panama bonds-it would take the amount of the Panama bonds and about $80,000,000 of new bonds, of new money, to take care of these permanent investments, which I have just mentioned, including the Mexican situation. Now, the Mexican situation, as I understand, according to the Treasury report, will require, up to June 30, $162,000,000. Now, I do not think that any of us in the House, except possibly some of us on this side and a few on that side, can complain about that, because I understood both your party in the Senate and here indorsed the President's Mexican policy. They voted on a resolution as to the Vera Cruz proposition here in the House and in the Senate, by an overwhelming vote, and both Republicans and Democrats voted to indorse his policy to enter Mexico after Villa.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was it his policy that they indorsed?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can only tell by the resolution that the Republicans voted on in the Senate, and the Vera Cruz proposition here, and I have heard no complaint on the part of anybody, especially Republicans, for the last several months as to the expenditure of this $162,000,000. The greatest complaint I have heard is that they did not spend more, and have taken more troops in there, and cost the American people many million dollars more.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do you think they ought to go further?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the complaint I have heard from your side.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?
Mr. KITCHIN. I certainly will.
Mr. CANNON. Did he catch Villa?
Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know that he did. He sent a whole lot of commanding officers down there, 19 out of 20 of whom were Republicans. I reckon if they had been Democratic officers they would have caught him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He did not even catch Carranza.

Carranza caught him.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, to analyze the statement just made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin], there is $50,000,000 for the shipping, $20,000,000 for the nitrate plant, and $11,000,000 for the armor plant, and $25,000,000 for the Danish Islands. Now, what else is there except Mexico?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Alaskan Railway, $35,000,000, and the Mexican situation, $162,000,000.

Mr. GILLETT. I will leave out the Mexican situation. will allude to that later. There are $141,000,000, which I admit are permanent improvement and which I admit justify a bond issue, if we have not spare cash in the Treasury. have bonds already on hand which, by the economy of a Republican administration, we did not use when we had a right to, but paid for most of the building of the Panama Canal out of our extra pocket money. We have got from $200,000,000 to $240,000,000 of them on hand. Why do you need any more bonds? I do not believe that this Mexican excursion is a proper subject to be paid for by bonds. It is certainly no permanent improvement. Why did you not pay for your Vera Cruz excursion by bonds if that theory is correct? I never approved of either of them. I was one of those who voted against it. I voted and made some remarks against it.

And as to this later excursion down into Mexico shortly before the election. If it had been made immediately after the attack—and I do not want to get into a Mexican discussion, because there is such an infinite field for criticism there that it would take all day-but this is one of the instances which, it seems to me, shows the utter fatuity of our whole Mexican policy. If the troops had been sent in to catch Villa the next day, there might have been some sense and judgment in it, but to wait a week and then to think that the United States troops could catch a mosquito like him, out in the mountains of Mexico, was preposterous; and it has accomplished no more than we could

And when it comes to Mexico, these "battles" between Carranzistas and Villistas always strike me as comic opera. I suspect the "battles" and the "victories" consist simply of the soldiers on the one side or the other wondering on which side they can get most loot and changing to the side that offers the best prospects, and that is the side that wins the "victory.

But that is altogether apart from the question. It seems to me that from what the President himself has laid down in the message which I read a new bond issue is not authorized. There are only $141,000,000 of permanent investments which we will have to pay for, and we have $240,000,000 of Panama bonds on hand which can be used for it.

Now, I want to say just a word-and I did not mean to take so much time-about the President's recent message to the Senate. With what I understand to be the general purpose of that message I heartily concur. I understand him to mean that the best hope for a durable and permanent peace is a concert of the powers of the world, supported by armed force, and that the United States shall enter that concert and help to enforce it, if necessary, with its Army and with its Navy. With that general proposition I am in thorough accord, for it seems to me it is the best practical step toward the permanent end of warfare, which we all desire. The President expressed it with his invariable charm, but he expressed it also with the vagueness and nebulousness which are almost as invariable.

But, if I am correct in thinking the main purpose is what I have stated, I agree with him. I think it may be "an iridescent dream"; it may be an anticipation of that parliament of man and federation of the world which we all know is so far off, but it seems to me it is a step toward it.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Could the gentleman give a plan for the accomplishment of that supposed purpose less measureless

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I do not know. I have not the responsibility of doing it, and I will not pretend that I have thought it out.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I yield to my colleague.
Mr. CANNON. Would my friend agree to any proposition that the United States should cooperate with the nations of the world in creating an armed force greater than any now existing, to be called into exercise by a vote of the nations of the world?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, now, the gentleman is assuming two things: First, he is assuming that it is a force greater than any now existing

Mr. CANNON. I am using the President's statement. Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I read it carefully, but he does no Yes; I read it carefully, but he does not state that. If that is it, of course it accomplishes nothing, because, as I understand, the main purpose of this concert of the powers will be not to maintain a greater force than the armed powers now do, but to generally and largely reduce the force of both the Army and the Navy. If it does not accomplish that, it fails at the beginning.

Mr. CANNON. I read from the President's statement:

Mr. CANNON. I read from the President's statement:

I do not mean to say that any American Government would throw any obstacle in the way of any terms of peace the Governments now at war might agree upon, or seek to upset them when made, whatever they might be. I only take it for granted that mere terms of peace between the belligerents will not satisfy even the belligerents themselves. Mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure, it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind.

Does the President mean what he says on is it "not the says."

Does the President mean what he says, or is it "as the sounding brass and the tinkling cymbal"?

Mr. GILLETT. But he does not say greater than the present force of any nation or alliance. Of course, the force of the concert must be greater than the force of any part of it, but I trust there will be a general and decisive reduction of armaments.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman believe that the United States should now or at any other time enter into treaty or agreement with the nations of the world that if there be a falling out between the United States and any other nation on this continent or elsewhere the nations of the world by a majority vote shall determine what the United States shall do?

Mr. GILLETT. In general, yes; though how such details as voting will be arranged I will not now suggest. There must be some court of final decision. We can not go in and say we will Mr. GILLETT. Now, you are getting into details which are dictate to everybody else, and that other nations shall submit not before us at all.

their differences to some general concert without being willing to submit our own. But, of course, as I said, this is all very vague and nebulous. You can not tell what conditions will be laid down. It will depend largely on those conditions. But it seems to me that conditions can be laid down that will make it proper and safe for the United States, desiring, as I think we do, no aggression on any nation on this continent or hemisphere or on the other one. It will be safe for the United States to enter such a council.

Mr. CANNON. And action determined by the vote of the majority, a little nation having as much voice as the big nation?

Mr. GILLETT. That is one of the details that I do not assent to. It is not suggested by the President. It has to be worked out.

Mr. CANNON. Let me put a case. Mexico is adjacent to the United States for 1,800 miles. We have trouble with Mexico, and I believe we will have future trouble with it. Suppose this agreement were made and the United States were to proceed to protect itself under the Monroe doctrine, or from the standpoint of protection to the American people. Would we have to submit, before we dare assert our rights for protection, to a popular vote of the different nations of the world? Is that what this agreement contemplates?

Mr. GILLETT. For myself, as to any contest we have with a little power like Mexico, our neighbor, I will always be willing to submit that to any fair tribunal of the world. I am not afraid of differences between ourselves and Mexico, and I do not care much in what manner they are decided. Any little dispute we might have with any of our neighbors, with whom we ought to have friendly relations, would not be very vital to the United States, and we could well leave it to the arbitrament of other powers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand the President's address, there is no proposition that any nation shall submit its rights or wrongs to a majority vote of the nations of the world, as that expression would ordinarily be understood; but in outline the proposition, as I understand it, is that all nations shall enter into an international agreement by which each of the signatory powers will reserve to itself certain things of vital character which are never, under any circumstances, to be considered arbitrable-as, for example, the boundary lines of each country after these have been once fixed by the agreement, the right to determine who may immigrate or come into the country and who shall be eligible to citizenship-but by which all other questions which may arise are to be referred for hearing and judgment to a great international court, composed of the foremost jurists of all the countries. Then it is also proposed that there shall be a general disarmament of the nations and that the judgments of the great international court shall be enforced by an international police force, just as United States marshals and their assistants enforce the decrees of our courts. That is as I understand the proposition. I would not say that I advo-cate it in its entirety, but that, I think, is a fair statement of the proposition. The whole subject is in the very highest realms of statesmanship and ought to be considered in all its aspects when we discuss it on this floor.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Might it not be well to have the method referred to officially translated, in order that it might not cause a disagreement between such able intellects as that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]? We want to know what it does mean.

Mr. GILLETT. What the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

Cooper] has suggested is of course the program which is now being so much agitated by the League to Enforce Peace. I say I approve of the President's policy, I do not commit my-self any more than the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. self any more than the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] does to any detailed method of working it out. That is in the future, and the President absolutely suggests nothing as to details. All I indorse is that it seems to me the best step toward international peace in the future is some concert of powers, to be developed, as of course it would have to be, with the greatest care and study and elaboration; but at the threshold I do not want to refuse accord to the general principle. On the contrary, I strongly favor it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Who would say what subjects are arbitrable?

Mr. FESS. Would the Monroe doctrine be one of them?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course the Monroe doctrine in its original purpose has long been obsolete. It was established to prevent monarchical governments being imposed upon this continent. Well, now the monarchies have enough to do to keep democracies from being imposed upon them, and are no longer hoping to impose them here.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GILLETT. Let me just say that what the Monroe doctrine means now, as I understand it, is that the United States does not propose to have any great European power get ports or harbors or stations anywhere near our borders, which would be a menace in case of war. We use it now as a matter of selfdefense, and that, as I understand it, is practically the purpose of the Monroe doctrine to-day.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Suppose two countries in Europe are at variance. and it becomes necessary for this league of peace to use its force. We would be bound to join them if we are in it?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Without any interest whatever in the contest?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How would our troops be used?

Mr. GILLETT. As the gentleman knows, that is a detail that I can not predict.

Mr. FESS. Would that be done without a vote of the people? Mr. GILLETT. As I say, that is one of the details that I can not predict, and will not pretend to.

Mr. FESS. One more remark.

Mr. GILLETT. I have only 14 minutes remaining and I have promised to yield 10 minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask just one question.

Mr. GILLETT. I can not yield because I wish to say a word or two more and I have only four minutes in which to say them. In this message of the President I was struck by the President's insistence that other nations should adopt the principle that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Could it have failed to occur to him that there was abundant occasion for him to urge that doctrine in his own country and in his own party? Is the universal right of the governed to consent or dissent recognized by the Democratic Party? Are not some States solidly and permanently Democratic only because they deliberately ignore and violate that principle? If the governed had been allowed to register their consent in Democratic States at the last election the President would not occupy the White House after next March. The party of which he is the recognized leader not only systematically violates this principle which the President in his message exalts, but in order to do it is obliged to disobey the Constitution of the United States. Yet I have heard no word of criticism from the White House against this long-continued denial to the governed of their privilege to consent or dissent. Is it only when the principle is advantageous that it is to be commended? Is it to be disregarded when it would be inconvenient? Throughout a whole section of the country controlled by the President's party a large class of the governed are prohibited from exercising their rights by social and political ostracism. In that conduct he acquiesces. Before insisting that foreign nations shall adopt his theory would it not be well to set his own house in order? How can he expect to influence opinion abroad in favor of a principle when at home he is the chief beneficiary of the flagrant and continuous violation of the very doctrine which he is striving to force upon other nations? And yet I am sure that while he extols it abroad he will take no step to enforce it in his own party, where its determined violation is the very foundation of Democratic success. [Applause.] I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr.

BENNETI

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not the time.
Mr. BENNET. I will yield the gentelman one minute.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask relative to the President's message to the Senate if the gentleman from Massachusetts does not think the most significant characteristic of it or what has followed from it has been the response of the workmen of Great Britain, the peasants of Russia, and the socialists of France applauding the sentiments?

Mr. GILLETT. How much that is I do not know, and I suspect the gentleman does not know.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. From what I have read the people are responding; not the aristocrats but the plain people of Europe.

Mr. GILLETT. As to that I do not know, and do not see how anybody here can know yet.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: I hope it is true. Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, after the vote of this morning, 147 to 137, that it does not make any difference what you say on the floor of the House, you can write a new speech for the Record, I think four minutes is really too long, because if you do not like your speech you can put in what you please anyway.

I want to talk during these four minutes of a peculiar situation. I have always understood that this House had the right to ask an executive department for information. And in practice, under both this administration and the Republican administrations, I have found that when I went to the department and asked for information I usually got it. The Department of Labor, so far as the administration of Ellis Island is concerned, is an exception. On the 18th of July I made a speech on the floor in which I made certain allegations as to the immoral mixing of alien men and women at Ellis Island. The Acting Secretary of Labor went to New York and found the allegations were correct, and issued an order, which I put in the RECORD last summer, changing the conditions.

Within a week thereafter investigations were instituted at Ellis Island and carried on for three days before the deputy commissioner. I do not know what investigations there were, but I know the fact of the investigation was brought out before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

I called up the department over the telephone and said I was going to New York and would like to look at the report of the investigation. I got no reply. I wrote a letter and got no reply. I called up again, and I got a reply that my letter would receive attention. They wrote me a letter declining to let me see the commissioner's report, the first time that anything like that had happened in my eight years in Congress. I thought there was some mistake, and so I introduced a resolution of inquiry last August. Then I went to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and said that I had no desire to spread fallaclous matters on the public record, and for him to have these things sent down to the House Committee on Immigration and let me look them over and let the members of the committee look them over for information. That was not done. I called the attention of the chairman of the House Committee on Immigration to the matter at this session once or twice after that. In the meantime I had introduced a resolution asking that a copy of this investigation be sent to this House. Day before yesterday I brought up the resolution and the Speaker ruled that that particular resolution was not within the rules of the House; that it was not a resolution of inquiry. I think he was I have introduced two other resolutions, one asking for the original examination and another asking for information contained in the examination. The one the Speaker ruled out asked for a copy. So, in four or five days I am going to bring before the House a request in three different forms, for a copy, the original, and the information, and I am going to ask the Chair to rule on these other two propositions, because I believe that this House is entitled to information upon which it is called to legislate, and I am going to get a roll call on that proposition before I officially die. [Applause.]

By leave of the House I insert the communications from the department:

My Dear Congressman: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of November 8, renewing your request for permission to look at the reports of the investigation made at Ellis Island in July last.

I beg to advise that neither the election nor its results had anything to do with the action taken by the department in this matter. The decision of the Acting Secretary, of which you have already been apprised, will have to stand until circumstances arise which properly indicate a necessity for reconsideration thereof.

I am, respectfully, yours,

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose in the brief time allotted to me to say anything with regard to the bill under consideration. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the matter of making a change, which it seems to me must come in the near future in respect to the making of appropriations for the various departments of the Government. If you will look through the calendar and note the dates of the passage of the last appropriation bills in the last session of Congress and then note the time by going through the Congressional Record that was consumed in the consideration of those bills, and then consider that within the short space of three months we take up the same bills and go over the same hearings and appropriate for the same departments, as we do at the short session of Congress, it will give any man cause for reflection. To-day I introduced a bill changing the present method of making appropriations. This bill provides that with each incoming Congress the estimates shall be made for a biennial period, and Congress at the long session, if that bill or something like it should become a law, will make appropria-tions for a biennial period, leaving the short session of Congress free to transact such business as the country may demand shall be transacted. Either we must do something of that kind or Congress must necessarily be called into special session at the close or shortly after the close of each short session of Congress. Every day we see in the newspapers, and we hear it expressed here and upon the streets, that we must have an extra session of Congress, because at this short session we will not have time even to go over the appropriation bills and enact the limited amount of legislation that is demanded by the ad-

In talking with one of the officers of the War Department in regard to some provisions carried in this bill, he told me that it took him at least six weeks this year to prepare his esti-mates, and that it took the time of more than four clerks for about the same period of time. I asked him how much longer it would have taken if he had estimated for a biennial period when he made his estimates last year. He said that it would have taken him a very short time; the additional time would always be negligible.

We know, too, that when we pass appropriation bills at the short session of Congress we do it with considerable hurry and without due consideration. The short time at our disposal makes it impossible to give due consideration to details. We do not consider and can not consider appropriations in a deliberate way, in the same way that we do at the long session of Congress. This might result in great waste were it not that most all of these appropriations are practically duplications of items in former bills, not in the same amount, not for the same thing exactly. That being true, we can estimate for a 2-year period just as well as we can estimate for a period of 12 months, and Congress can appropriate for that period just as well as it can for a shorter period. It will, of course, leave to the short session of Congress those items that can not be provided for, where new legislation enacted after the enactment of a biennial appropriation bill has provided for new duties requiring the expenditure of money, and it will also leave perhaps a much larger deficiency bill than we would have if we only appropriate for a single session.

But there can be no objection to the proposed legislation be-cause it would necessarily result in a larger deficiency appropriation bill at each short session of Congress. It will not mean an increase in appropriations. It ought to result in a decrease in the appropriations.

The proposed legislation will, in my opinion, result in preventing ill-considered and hasty appropriations at the short sessions of Congress. That alone is a sufficient reason for its adoption, but my object in presenting the bill goes further than this. The adoption of this measure will keep the short sessions of Congress free and open for the enactment of necessary legislation. The tremendous growth of the country has added very largely to the activities of the various branches of the Government service. New problems are constantly arising which require the attention of Congress, and many of these problems can not be solved at the short sessions of Congress because of a lack of time. It is the opinion of many that Congress ought to be almost continuously in session. If this be true, then it does seem that it is useless for Congress to pass these supply bills for only a 12 months' period when they could as well be passed at the long session of Congress for a biennial period.

In addition to this, the adoption of legislation along this line would result in great economy in the matter of holding hearings on appropriation bills. The bill which I have introduced makes practically no change in the present law, so far as the required estimates are concerned or so far as appropriations are concerned, except the changes necessary to provide for biennial appropriations instead of annual appropriations.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

[Mr. LONDON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the discussion which has been had under the freedom of general debate has taken a wide range, and there has been but one phase in common with all the speakers, and that was a careful avoidance of the bill before the committee.

As the chairman of the subcommittee presenting this bill, it becomes my duty in particular to undertake to acquaint the House somewhat with its provisions and the reasons that, to the committee, seem to justify its presentation here and its enactment into law. Before I take up the bill, however, permit me to say simply this, in order that my silence may not be misunderstood: While I might find sentences in the remarks of the various gentlemen who have spoken with which I was in accord, dealing with those speeches as a whole I desire to express my dissent from them all. But I have felt that it was not a wise time for men in public office, particularly in this body, to undertake to express, certainly in any final form, opinions touching the very great issue that has been raised by the President of the United States in the message that he delivered to the Senate touching those matters that are now acute because of the European war. Much that a man might say would be improper to say because of the pending war and the relationship of this country as a neutral, and, over and beyond all of that, the proposals that have been suggested by the President are so tremendous and involve such far-reaching consequences and such marked departures from the historic position taken by this country from its beginning that he is a brave man indeed who with a few consideration of the subject is now prepared to give his final judgment. It seems to me peculiarly a time when men should keep their minds open to the truth as it may appear, willing to abandon, if need be, preconceived convictions, but with no inclination to rush into new ones without a thorough examination of all that is involved thereby. But whether we are to come into a universal peace that all men hope for, and some men believe probable, whether we are to get that peace through the method that has been suggested by the President, or not, I for one have not felt that we, charged with the defense of our country, could afford to neglect that defense because of a belief or a hope that its defense would never be necessary.

Therefore in the preparation of this bill, so far as I have been able to influence the judgment of the subcommittee, it has been along the line of continuing the policy that was adopted last year, of undertaking all such improvements in connection with our seacoast defenses and such additions to our mobile armament as would put this country in a better position for defense and for the maintenance of its rights, if need might be

The bill that was presented last year was an unusually large one, judged by the standard of bills that had preceded it in the many years before. The average appropriation bill for fortification purposes has amounted to something under $7,000,000. Last year a law was passed which, with certain deficiency acts, carried $28,547,550, and with contract authorizations of $13,800,-000, making a total of $42,347,550, a sum nearly seven times as great as that which had been made available for similar purposes in annual bills in the years that had gone by.

This year the committee has recommended a bill carrying an appropriation of $51,396,593, with contract authorizations of $9,459,000, or a total of $60,855,593. These are large sums, large even in this day of unusual sums, but I submit to this committee that the judgment as to their size must not be a judgment simply of money, but a judgment as to what is needed to be done, the interests at stake, and the risks that you are undertaking to insure against.

The United States has not only the greatest coast line of any nation in the world to protect, infinitely greater than any nation or almost any combination of any of the great nations, but it has a wealth and a population that makes its position in the world that of primacy among all the nations. And while some men believe that because of its size it is in no danger from any attack anywhere, I have not believed that mere size was a guaranty of freedom from war. And I unfortunately have been forced to know that the justness of the motives of a nation are not a guaranty against war and conflict with others.

Unfortunate it is that two are not necessary to make a quar-There never was a statement that was disproved as that statement has been by the history of the world for the last two or three years. I realize what I said on this floor last year—that the most momentous fact in the lifetime of any man here present is the constant contraction of the earth's surface, for the earth is not to be measured in statute miles. It is measured in the time that it takes for the interchange of thought, of men, and of commodities. By that standard, which is the only true standard in a world of facts, the world has become constantly smaller, and with its contraction has come an enlargement of the part that America must play in it. And so to my mind there is no question as to the tremendous stake that we have and that we need to preserve and protect.

Believing that, believing it fundamentally, believing that the action of the Congress and the action of the people have justified and approved that conception, the problem that confronted the Committee on Appropriations in dealing with the fortifications bill was the problem of determining what was necessary and then of providing the means for the orderly doing of those

Last year there was presented to the committee the report of a board of review that had made a review of all the fortifica-tions of the continental United States, the Panama Canal, and of the insular possessions, and had determined what in the judgment of that board was necessary to add to existing armament or to place as new armament in places not heretofore fortified, to protect within the proper scope of fortifications the United States, the Panama Canal, and the insular posses-That report contemplated an expenditure of approximately $96,000,000, and for the continental United States an expenditure of about $71,000,000. It was supposed that the estimates that were submitted last year represented about onefourth of the amount requisite to carry out this scheme of the board of review.

In point of fact, however, the estimates that were submitted and the allowances that were made did not constitute a fourth of the project, even if you considered authorizations as well as cash appropriated. Since that report was presented certain additions have been made to it which will result in an increased expenditure, taking into account the increased cost of doing the same thing over last year, of probably a sum sufficient to make the total reach $110,000,000.

The bill which has been presented to the committee this year undertakes to provide for a third of the little more than threefourths of the scheme remaining to be appropriated for. other words, we are trying to do what we told the House last year we were going to do, to finish the scheme that had been suggested and approved for the fortifications of America with four annual appropriations. The actual physical doing of these things will take much longer than that, because unfortunately it takes from six to seven or eight years to actually create and turn over to the Coast Artillery a new fortification, even though the money be supplied as fast as it can be used.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman's committee ascertained how long it will probably take to expend the money provided for in the pending bill? Mr. SHERLEY. The committee has undertaken only to give moneys that would be expended prior to the passage of a new That is one of the reasons why we sometimes provide for authorizations of expenditure as well as the cash, so that, where it was necessary to make contracts and yet not necessary to expend the actual money within the year that we are providing for, it could be done. But we have tried to give only moneys that we thought could be and would be economically expended prior to the passage of a new fortification act making new moneys available.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that the $51,000,000 in cash provided for in this bill can be economically expended within the coming fiscal year?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; although I am not prepared to say that think it will all actually be expended.

Mr. MADDEN. Will it be available until it is expended? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it will be available until it is expe Yes; it will be available until it is expended. and the reason I say I am not certain that it will actually be expended is this: There always occur certain unforeseen things that prevent the expenditure of certain moneys intended for a given purpose; and yet we can not afford, unless we want to delay to a very great extent, to withhold moneys when they might be needed, and not being available, the work would be very greatly held back.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is a wise business method of procedure to provide ample means, so that the department can proeed if it wants to.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the committee that the thing that determines practically the time it takes to equip a modern fortification, assuming that you have title to land-and I shall come to that subsequently, either in general debate or under the five-minute rule—is the making of the guns and carriages; and that takes, particularly for such new guns as we are now building, never heretofore built in America, from three to five years, and there are always unforeseen delays that make it almost impossible apparently to get a fortification actually in commission under six or seven years.

I have wished it were otherwise, and I have endeavored as best I could to hasten the doing of these necessary things and the elimination of those causes which make for delay; but the condition of the Ordnance Department, and the necessary time it takes in devising plans and specifications, and the doing of the work in the arsenals or by private contract, and the assembling of the parts and their final shipment to the place where they are to be emplaced result in these delays, and apparently we have no hope of seeing any great reduction in time in the future under what it has been in the past.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The appropriation last year was increased by $26,000,000. Can the gentleman give us any idea of how much of that amount will likely be expended before the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that with the exception of about $2,000,000 that was given for emplacement work, and which could not be used because the title to lands was not finally acquired, practically all of it will be expended, although not necessarily will the things for which it was appropriated be finished. In other words, it will either be expended or be obligated from month to month in the expenses incident to the manufacture of these carriages, and so forth.

Mr. TOWNER. Are the direct appropriations carried in this bill made available until they are expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. All the appropriations in this bill are available until expended.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman tell us just what is meant by the authorizations

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps I can tell you more quickly than you can ask.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is meant by "authorization" is this: It authorizes the Government to enter into contracts to the amount stated. Those contracts may be either with private manufacturers or they may be with the arsenals. That is, the right to incur that liabiliy may be availed of in the procurement of material that is to be used at the arsenals, or it may be entirely used in entering into contracts for which the faith of the Government is pledged with private manufacturers.

Mr. TOWNER. It extends to nothing further than merely the right to make the contracts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Without that they could not expend anything but the cash available. For instance, if you want to make a contract for the procurement of certain guns, those guns would not be manufactured for several years, and they might enter into a contract by which they would agree to pay a certain sum at a certain time and so much on delivery. Now, unless they had either an authorization or cash sufficient to cover the entire cost of such guns, they could not enter into a contract for their manufacture at all.

Mr. TOWNER. Then it extends to nothing further than the power to make a contract?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does just what it says. What is not always understood is that sometimes the contract authorization is used in the way of buying material that is manufactured in the arsenals, whereas the average man is apt to think that it means the making of a contract for getting the finished thing from private manufacturers. That is not always generally un-

Now, the only reason for it is this: It is not desirable, in my judgment, to tie up great sums of money in the Treasury that will not be needed for quite a period of time, because the very moment you appropriate certain moneys the Treasury is obligated to that extent for that amount of money. This is simply a means of not unduly segregating your available funds in the Treasury until the need exists for the spending of the money, and it simply obligates the Government in good faith-a faith which it always keeps-to make the appropriation that is subsequently necessary to carry out that obligation.

Mr. TOWNER. I quite agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was unfortunately called out at the time the gentleman began his remarks, and he may have already answered the question that I desire to ask. I infer from what the gentleman has already said that this amount which is now appropriated is only a portion of what will be required to carry out the general plan.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Can the gentleman give us any estimate as to the further sum which will eventually be required to carry out the plan?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have already covered that to this extent, that I stated that the board of review in connection with fortifications looked to an expenditure of $96,000,000. That did not include, however, any estimate for Alaska, for Guantanamo, for Guam, or for the Danish West Indies, in the event that we shall fortify them, as I presume we will; but for continental United States, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, and Panama it was estimated that it would take $96,000,000 to do all of the things that they thought desirable to be done in order to make these fortifications as complete and modern as was Now, it was planned that deemed necessary and advisable. those sums should be made available through four annual appropriations, and that plan has roughly been carried out in last year's bill and in this year's bill, though last year we did not appropriate quite up to one-fourth of the sum that was necessary, and there is in this year's bill an added expense due to the fact that a 25 per cent increase in the cost of armament and a 20 to 25 per cent increase in the cost of ammunition is going to result from the very much higher market that now exists than existed a year or more ago. Whether that will continue to exist over the time within which these moneys are to be expended is a matter about which gentlemen may have various views and may speculate, though of course we have no actual knowledge.

Now, in order not to mislead the committee I ought to say that the fortifications bill deals with two matters, one relating to fortifications proper and the other to the mobile artillery and its ammunition for the Regular and Volunteer forces of the United States, so that a segregation has to be made of the items in order to show what goes for fortifications and what goes for mobile artillery and ammunition, and I was about to make that segregation when various gentlemen interrupted for other inquiries.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I do not desire to disturb the continuity of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. SHERLEY. I still hope to be able to make that state-

Mr. EMERSON. The gentleman made a statement earlier in his speech that interested not only myself but others. He said that from observations he had made in the last two or three years he had come to the conclusion that the good intentions of nations were not sufficient to keep them from war. I have so much confidence in the gentleman's learning and judgment that I would like to know what he means by that statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, I might cite cases, and in so doing might violate the rôle that I have undertaken to play since this European war started of being neutral, in speech at least, touching the participants in that war. Without using illustrations I will endeavor to give the gentleman my view.

So long as there is a difference of opinion as to what is right, the fact that one party is right does not necessarily carry with it acquiescence in that position by another party holding different views, whether honestly or dishonestly. The result is that if that group or nation feel strongly enough in regard to their views which are antagonistic to those of the other group that may force a war, irrespective of the justice of the views of the party that is forced into the war. That, I think, is so plain and so axiomatic that a statement of it ought to carry conviction. If men will think of nations somewhat as individuals, they will have no difficulty in coming to correct conclusions as to many of these things. Individuals differ as to what constitutes right and wrong, and individuals insist upon their positions; and unless certain machinery is created by groups of other individuals to force a settlement by lawfully provided methods those individuals settle their differences by their own respective strength; and nations as groups of individuals have done the same thing; and they will only cease to do it either when great groups create a machinery for the adjustment of differences, with the power back of that machinery to compel obedience to its decrees, or there comes such uniformity of thought as to what constitutes right and such desire to do only what is right as to make all nations and all men in accord.

When that time comes laws and governments and all of the machinery of frail human nature will be unnecessary and the millennium will be upon us. For my own part, I have yet to see any way except the slow, toilsome process of evolution whereby man has come from the level of the beast to his present stature for the solution of most of these fundamental matters. I have ceased to believe in a royal road, and there is nothing to my mind more dangerous than the belief that individuals can get together and by bringing their minds in accord thereby bring great masses of mankind into accord; and one of the most fatal things is to assume that the same standard of civilization, and therefore the same conception of what constitutes right and morality, exists among the great groups of people. That is not true. Gentlemen, there is more difference between the conception of what constitutes right and morality in groups of men, or, to use the usual phrase, nations, than you find among individual men in a single group, and that latter is certainly wide enough. All you need to do is to look at the map of the world with your eyes open and see the groups of men as they exist, to realize that their conception and our conception of what constitutes morality, of what constitutes right, of what constitutes what is desirable in life, are so totally different that, while those people may be just as sincere as we are, they by their convictions may be forced into a position and an action at direct variance with that into which our own conception of truth and right and of what is desirable may force us.

But I had not intended to be diverted from a financial statement on the bill. Last year for fortification purposes proper we appropriated $17,751,050 in cash, and authorized contracts we appropriated $11,751,050 in cash, and authorized contracts for $7,300,000, or a total of $25,051,050. This year for fortification purposes only we have appropriated $35,186,593 in cash, and for authorizations $5,259,000, making a total of $40,445,593. So that the difference between this year's bill and last year's bill, as it relates to fortifications only and considering authorizations the same as cash, is a difference of about $15,000,000. But when you consider that last year's bill carried authoriza-tions that this year must take care of, it will be seen that that difference does not represent that much of increase in the amount of work that you are undertaking, but consists in part of what is made necessary by the promises to pay of last year which we are preparing to make good.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.
Mr. TILSON. I notice that the amount of appropriation for arms and armament for fortifications has been considerably increased, and the authorizations in most cases have been considerably diminished over that of last year. Is that caused by the fact that the projects will be completed in the near future?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. I will say to the gentleman frankly that there is no absolute certain way by which you can determine how much cash and how much authorization shall be had, and in submitting the estimates the officers who submit them usually figure, having in mind their available balance in the Treasury, the condition of the work that is being done, the time it will probably be finished, thereby determining roughly what they will need in the way of cash and what they can afford to have go over as a pledge of the Government for another year. A good deal of this work is further advanced than last year, and a good deal more may be let by contract or started in the arsenals than last year, because some designs that were then needed and held matters up are now finished. Because of the authorizations of last year, it will be necessary to carry more cash this year. This bill will become a law on the 4th of cash this year. This bill will become a law on the 4th of March next, and the next bill will probably not become a law for 15 or 18 months afterwards, so there is a longer period between the passage of this bill and the next bill than there was between the passage of the last bill and this bill.

Mr. TILSON. I believe in authorizations, because I believe better contracts can be made in that way. Therefore I wondered at the cutting down of the authorizations in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we have not in any way hindered the Ordnance Department, and it applies more largely there than with the other departments.

Last year the bill carried for mobile artillery and ammunition therefor $10,796,500 and authorizations of $6,500,000, or a total of $17,296,500. This year's bill carries $16,210,000 for mobile artillery and ammunition, with contract authorizations of $4,200,000, or a total of $20,410,000, an increase over last year for mobile artillery and ammunition of three million one hundred and odd thousand dollars. That increase could probably be fully accounted for by the increased cost of obtaining the In other words, we are going practically no faster in supplying the artillery and ammunition than we were last

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. I wilk.

TOWNER. As a matter of fact, the amount carried in this bill for fortifications is comparatively very small?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; for actual fortifications it is greater than for mobile artillery. Last year the bill, as I stated, carried $25,000,000 in cash and authorizations for fortifications. Now, not all of that was for new fortifications; a good deal is for maintenance. I say a good deal, but I mean a respectable sum was for maintenance. Some of it was, of course, for ammunition for existing fortifications, and some of it was for new fortifications themselves. The gentleman will find the detailed statement in the report, in which there is shown under subdivision A the amount of moneys that go in the way of what we might call new material, and in subdivision B what goes in the way of maintenance, upkeep, and repair.

Mr. TOWNER. But practically the bulk of the appropria-tion is for guns and ammunition. Can the gentleman give an idea of how much of the appropriations is expended in the physical construction of fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. If what the gentleman means by that is emplacement in contradistinction to guns and their carriages, that will be found in the consideration of the details of the bill on the last page or two of the report.

Mr. TOWNER. The amount spent for guns and ammunition, together with the authorizations, amount to $45,000,000. Is that confined to continental United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no division made to show the total amount of money which went for emplacement and the total amount of money that went for guns and carriages, at least in the report. It could be obtained, because we have the most complete financial statement touching fortifications of anything the Government has ever done. I have subdivided the matter so much now that I doubt if anybody will take the trouble to read it and understand it. That particular division did not occur to me as important.

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps it is not important. Let me ask the gentleman, Was there an appropriation put in here for carrying on the work at the entrance to Chesapeake Bay?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; considerable for the armament and also for the emplacements. Last year the things that we undertook were largely those relating to the proposed fortifications at Cape Henry, the fortifications in connection with the defenses of New York, the building of a certain number of antiaircraft guns, and the building of carriages for the mounting of some spare 12-inch guns for high-angle fire that should be placed at various fortifications upon the Atlantic, the Gulf, We also provided for one 14-inch mobile gun to be mounted on a railroad carriage, and for one 16-inch railway howitzer. This year the bill provides additional sums necessary for Cape Henry, for the New York defenses, for the building of carriages, and for the additional amount of money for the emplacement of the twenty-four 12-inch guns that are to be mounted for high-angle fire and for the additional antiaircraft guns. It also provides for the procurement of certain land at Boston and also in Delaware Bay as incident to the fortifications of Delaware Bay, the fortification there to consist of four 12-inch guns, and for the building of two carriages with all-around fire for the defenses at Charleston to replace those which are now there and which permit of the guns being fired only at a limited degree of elevation. The other items relate to maintenance and ammunition, which, it will be recalled under the Board of Review schemes, was very greatly increased; that is, the amount desired as reserves; and we are undertaking to very rapidly bring it up to the scheme that was there set forth. Also to the supplying of fire control for all of the 5 and 6 inch batteries, together with such minor matters as searchlights, power plants, and se forth, in connection with the various fortifications. We are also providing for an additional number of mobile guns to be used in connection with seacoast defense; we provide for six 12-inch howitzers to be mounted on railroad cars, and four 16-inch railway howitzers and four 14-inch railway rifles.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman what is the effective range of these modern guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it varies with the different guns. The 12-inch gun that is mounted for high-angle fire has a range exceeding 30,000 yards, shooting a projectile weighing seven hundred pounds and odd. The 16-inch guns will have an effective range of exceeding 30,000 yards. The other 12-inch guns and the 14-inch guns have a less range, depending somewhat on their elevation and upon the weight of the projectile; but no new guns are to be provided for the primary armament of any place that shall be of less than 16-inch caliber, with an effective range of more than 30,000 yards, and that is away beyond any range at which any battles have ever taken place, either between naval vessels and land defenses or between warships.

Last year provision was made in the bill for the procurement of the patent rights of Mr. John Hayes Hammond, jr., to a radio-dynamic torpedo, provided a test that was ordered should prove satisfactory, and provision was also made for the installation of one unit for the use of such torpedoes in the event these rights were acquired and the project was approved. personnel of the board that was created, a joint board of Army and Navy officers, has been appointed. They have furnished Mr. Hammond with the use of an aeroplane and of some Government boats and other things necessary to enable him to make his test, and it is expected that these tests will be had very shortly, but as yet they have not been had and no report has been made, and, of course, no moneys have been nor will be expended unless the report of that board shall be favorable and shall be approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. TILSON. The appropriation made last year continues available for that purpose? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Last year the committee also carried upon its own initiative the provision for $1,000,000 for the equipment of private plants with jigs, dies, tools, etc., to enable them to manufacture guns and ammunition that might be needed by the Government. This year $500,000 was submitted as an estimate for a similar purpose, but it developed in the hearings that the $1,000,000 had not been expended, due to two causes: First, it was the belief of the War Department that it ought not to place this money among various manufacturers who were then considering proposals for bids to the Government until after those bids had been made, because, manifestly, it would have been unfair to give to one manufacturer as against another the advantage in bidding that would come from this equipment. The other reason, and perhaps one of more importance, was that the whole matter had been submitted to the Board of National Defense touching the plan that should be followed in supplying these manufactures, the type of manufactures, their location and their probable output, all of those matters being proper and necessary matters to determine before this money could be wisely expended; and in view of the fact that they now have $1,000,000 the committee did not feel warranted in adding to that sum until they had actually used it, and we had the benefit of the experience gained from that expenditure.

Mr. TILSON. Has there not been this further difficulty of being uncertain as yet, before having it thoroughly tested out, as to the designs and kinds that should be secured, the number of each, and so on?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; all of those details.

Mr. TILSON. In other words, it is necessary that there be a thorough study of the subject made before there can be any assurance that the money appropriated will be wisely ex-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask the Clerk to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended, namely:

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last There were a few other matters I think I ought to bring to the attention of the committee before we take up the detailed consideration of the bill. One is that there is found in this year's bill provision for the creation, operation, and maintenance of squadrons of hydroaeroplanes to be used in connection with the seacoast defense. That was put into the bill because it became apparent in the hearings had that a considerable portion of the money appropriated last year by Congress for the purchase of neroplanes was being used for the creation of certain squadrons in connection with seacoast defenses, and it was be-lieved by the committee that the matter was one that properly belonged to this committee and jurisdiction of it should be taken, not with the idea of robbing another committee or of increasing our scope but because of the necessarily intimate relationship between the use of these hydroaeroplanes and the coast defenses, and particularly because of the fact that in the housing of them and in the maintenance of them, in regard to the necessary ground, the equipment for taking care of them, that committee which dealt with fortifications was the only committee that was in possession of the detailed information touching these fortifications that should be available in order to properly determine upon estimates and needs in connection with this new branch of fire control, because that is practically what it is. While their value in scouting purposes will be great, one of their very great values will be in providing an additional method for fire control of the guns.

It frequently occurs that, owing to fog or to a smoke screen that could be made by an attacking fleet, the observation sta-tions in connection with seacoast batteries, which are relied upon to furnish the information whereby the guns are aimed and fired, could not see their targets, and the value of having an aeroplane that could fly high enough to be above this obstruction of cloud or smoke and out of the range of antiaircraft guns aboard the ship and yet in position where it could be observed from these fire-control stations, and the information obtained whereby the guns could be aimed exactly as if the target were visible from the observing station, will be tremendous in connection with the effective use of fortifications. In addition to that, it is believed that these hydroaeroplanes can very probably be used in the way of dropping flares which will light up the target and its immediate surrounding while leaving the fortifications obscured and in the dark, whereas the searchlight has the disadvantage of at least indicating with some degree of certainty the location of the fortification when it is used to illuminate the enemy's ships, and their use in that regard is believed to be one that will mark a very considerable addition to the effectiveness of seacoast fortifications.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman regard the hydroaeroplane as beyond the stage of experimentation now?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is no doubt of that fact, and I think my view is shared by the committee. Now, I do not mean by that we are not in a condition where there is and will continue to be an evolution as to types, or where we have reached final knowledge as to the useful activities of such aircraft, but I do mean that the ability successfully to use such aircraft in connection with the firing of large guns has long passed the questionable stage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. May I state to the gentleman or ask him—he does not mean to indicate, does he, that the hydroaeroplanes are to be used to the exclusion of aeroplanes in connection with those fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. Hydroaeroplanes are to be used at fortifications

Mr. GILLETT. We sometimes want some aeroplanes.
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the squadrons that are being created are squadrons of hydroaeroplanes, because they will light on the water about the fortifications, and for that reason these types are used rather than the aeroplanes. The testimony of Col. Squiers before our committee showed there were a number of types developed, dependent upon the particular work that they had to do. Some of them were to be very light, fast craft, to be used for very wide ranges of activities and dependent upon their speed very largely for their safety. Others were to be of a slower type, still with considerable speed, but of a slower, heavier type. The different types will carry different amounts of armament. Some would be literally fighting machines, while some would be only used for such purposes as I have indicated, however having armament sufficient to protect them from destruction by an enemy's aeroplane or hydroaeroplane. When this section is reached I will endeavor to give more detailed information than I am undertaking to do now, but I thought it well to call the attention of the committee to the fact that these items were being carried in the bill in order that no one might be taken by surprise in that regard.

Now, I desire very briefly to make a statement, which I think will prove of very great interest to the House. A great deal has been said and will be said, unfortunately, in the future touching the expenditure of money in America, touching the relative amounts that one section of the country gets as against an-other section of the country. For my part, I am glad in 14 years' service in this body that I have never felt the need or occasion to make a speech in favor of a locality or a section as against any other locality or section, and that during those 14 years I have neither felt the desire nor the need to make a speech in favor of one class of men as against any other group of men, [Applause.]

If a proposition can not be defended because of its inherent merit, without regard to locality or to class, it has no right to a defense at all. And to my mind nothing is more unfortunate than the attempt by partisans on both sides to constantly create the impression that efforts are being made by groups of men to appropriate moneys with regard to geography only. But inasmuch as many statements have been made, some publicly and some privately, as to expenditures of money for coast-defense purposes, I thought it would interest this House if I should give them : n accurate detailed statement as to the moneys that have been expended north of Washington on the Atlantic, and including Washington, south on the Atlantic and the Gulf, and on the Pacific, and, in addition, what is proposed to be expended under the new scheme in the North Atlantic, South Atlantic and Gulf, and the Pacific.

Since 1888 and up to June 30, 1915, for seacoast fortification at points on the North and Central Atlantic coast there have been expended $41,551,143,48. There is contemplated as neces sary, under the scheme of the Board of Review as originally submitted, for expenditure on the North and Central Atlantic coast, $19,216,424, which, if it be done, will make a total expenditure for that section of $60,767,567.48.

There has been expended since 1888 and to June 30, 1915, for seacoast fortification at points on the Gulf and South Atlantic coast-and I will say in passing that Washington was treated as belonging to the southern section-$22,647,272.17. There is contemplated an expenditure under the Board of Review scheme of $9,067,492, or a total of $31,714,764.17. For the Pacific coast there has been expended since 1888 to June 30, 1915, $17,751,850.22. There is contemplated under the Board of Review project an expenditure of $11,844,491, which would make a total of $29,596,341.22.

Now, from that it will appear that when this scheme is carried out there will have been appropriated for the North Atlantic almost twice the amount as for the South Atlantic and the Gulf, and there will have been appropriated more than twice for the North Atlantic than for the Pacific, and there will have been appropriated for the South and the Gulf more by $2,000,000 than for all the Pacific coast. Now, these figures show one thing, and one thing only, and that is a thing that ought never to be lost sight of, namely, that, fortunately for this country, expenditures in connection with seacoast fortifications have not been made on account of geographical inducements—that is, geographical in the sense of geographic-political inducements-but that they have always been made and are proposed to be made simply with regard to the needs, due somewhat to the number of har-bors, due a very great deal to the centers of population and the governmental activities that are to be protected, and to the amount of wealth that is centered in the areas sought to be protected. And these fortifications have been built, so far as the wisdom of the men who have planned these various projects could provide, with an idea solely to protect this country as a whole, a protection according to its need at different places, and not with the idea of putting so much money in one section and so much money in another. And it will, in my judgment, be an exceedingly sorry day for America if ever fortification appropriations are made as the result of local pressure, for particular localities, and with an idea to equalize expenditures in various sections of the country. [Applause.]

Now, I say this because I think it is important that this committee, that the country should know it, and I say it because I again want to express my utter abhorrence of the frequent arguments that are made by men, unfortunately on both sides of the House, touching geographical political situations in regard to great matters of national concern. If we deserve the country which we are so fortunate to live in and to speak for as its Rep-resentatives, we will be broad enough to see it as a whole and not merely to see a part of it. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. In the armament appropriation, in this particular paragraph at the bottom of page 4, for purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, and so forth, I understand that is all mobile armament, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.
Mr. TOWNER. And it would include those 16-inch guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, it could embrace 16-inch guns; but, in point of fact, it does not. The biggest gun that is now contemplated to be built for the mobile Army is, I think, a 9.5

Mr. TOWNER. That includes the guns that are operated on the railroads?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The guns that we are providing for operation upon the railroads—14-inch rifles, 16-inch howitzers, and 12-inch howitzers—are, presumably, for use in connection with seacoast defense. But they could, and probably would, be used, if necessary, in connection with mobile operations in the interior

Mr. TOWNER. Then I suppose all the 16-inch guns would be under the provision for seacoast defense?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Every 16-inch gun we are building is intended to be used on fixed emplacements for seacoast purposes.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, the appropriation for the ammunition for those guns is $10,940,000. What is the assurance, or what is the opinion the gentleman has, regarding the ability to procure for the use of the Army and for fortifications the 16-inch shells, having in mind the difficulty that the Navy Department is having in that connection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, I have no doubt that we will make—I am rather inclined to believe that we are now making— 16-inch shells, because we have one 16-inch gun for Panama. But certainly by the time these guns are ready to be mounted we will be able to make a 16-inch shell. There is no difficulty in making a 16-inch shell as against a 14-inch shell. The problem that the Bethlehem people complained of was the problem of creating a shell of sufficient hardness to penetrate armor of certain thickness and hardness at a given angle, which they said was a very severe test. According to their newspaper advertisements they had spent a great deal of money in trying to create a shell that would come up to that test. I am informed that that is not an unfair test. It is a test that is met by the makers of ammunition for other Governments, and it is believed there ought not to be any difficulty in meeting it for the Navy

Mr. TOWNER. I was wondering how the estimates were made; upon what conception of the probable cost is this estimate that is made for $10,900,000? I am speaking of the one for the ammunition.

Mr. SHERLEY. The estimate as to cost is based on past experience of the Ordnance Department. I think this year there has been added 20 per cent for cost of ammunition due to the higher market, and as to the guns 25 per cent. Those are the estimates submitted by Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, and usually he knows what it is going to cost. Of course, the committee has no personal knowledge, and could not have, as to what it is going to cost.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY, Yes, Mr. ROGERS. Referring to that same paragraph for ammunition for seacoast cannon, the total amount of authorization was $13,000,000 this year, was it not? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; $10,940,000 cash and $2,000,000 of contract authorizations.

Mr. ROGERS. Two years ago this corresponding bill carried from $200,000 to $300,000 for the same purpose, I think.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it carried $200,000.
Mr. ROGERS. The statement was made on the floor at that time, and repeated quite broadly throughout the country, that the amount of ammunition then in our seacoast forts would not defend the country on an average more than 43 or 44 minutes. I think the gentleman from Kentucky denied the truth of that statement, but it was very widely made at all events. dered whether the gentleman could tell the House or the committee how long the ammunition appropriated for in this bill would be effective to withstand an attack. Is there any comparative suggestion that the gentleman could make along that line?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; because that would take a calculation that I would not want to undertake to make on my feet. But I think I can tell the gentleman this, and perhaps it is well that chusetts [Mr. Rogers] anticipated what I was going to say.

it should be told: Prior to the adoption of the Board of Review's policy the then existing scheme for reserve ammunition contemplated a reserve for guns in the insular possessions of a two hours' supply, and for guns in the United States of one hour's supply, the theory being that both coasts would not be attacked at one time, or presumably all of one coast, and that that ammunition might be transferred from one place to another. When the Board of Review came to consider that matter they determined that the amount deemed necessary as a reserve was totally inadequate, and they provided-I would like to read accurately instead of trusting my memory—they provided in substance for an accuracy life of the guns in connection with the guns in the insular possessions, and for a correspondingly great increase in regard to the guns in the United States.

We had up to that time accumulated about 73 per cent of the total reserve that had been deemed requisite. That 73 per cent represented for some types of guns 100 per cent, and for other types of guns and mortars considerably under 73 per cent, but an average of 73 per cent. The $200,000 that was appropriated would have increased that only something over 1 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue until he finishes his remarks. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request? There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. When that bill was brought on the floor gentlemen will recall that it was a bill carrying about $7,000,000. did not undertake to deceive the House then, though I stood by the bill as made, because men in responsible place in legislative bodies must act in the capacity not of an individual but of the chairman of the committee that he is given the right to speak for. So he speaks for his committee, and for his party, and for the administration, as the facts may be at that time. But I very frankly said to the House that that was the weakest place in connection with the bill that was presented, and that if the committee saw fit to overrule the Fortifications Committee and increase the amount, all right.

Well, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gard-NER] offered an amendment, but the Committee of the Whole did not agree with him, and the amendment was not agreed to, and the original amount was carried. After the review was made and they reported these very greatly increased allowances, then the Committee on Fortifications, in my judgment very properly, began to increase greatly the appropriation for this purpose, and this year we allow all that has been asked touching the reserve ammunition for seacoast guns.

Now, I can give the gentleman actually the scheme as it exists now for the reserve supply:

The recommendation of the Board of Review for reserve seacoast ammunition is as follows:

"(a) For guns in continental United States, except guns of 8-inch callber and upward on inner lines of defense, allowances equal to one-half the accuracy life of the respective calibers; for mortars, except on inner lines of defense, an allowance equal to one-fourth the accuracy life.

"(b) For armament of 8-inch caliber and upward on inner lines of defense in continental United States, allowances equal to one-half those for outer lines.

"(c) For guns in the insular possessions and on the Canal Zone, allowances equal to the accuracy life of the respective calibers; for mortars, an allowance equal to two-thirds of the accuracy life."

The difference between the mortar and the gun being the fact that the mortars are shot with a lower muzzle velocity and so do not have the very rapid deterioration of the rifling that oc-

Mr. ROGERS. The previous statement of the gentleman that the board requires one hour's supply to be on hand and there was in fact but 73 per cent of an hour, seems readily translated by the layman into terms that are intelligible, but the report that the gentleman has just given of course means nothing at all to the layman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will try to translate it. It means an increase of more than 200 per cent in the allowance for the gun, so that for continental United States it would have a meaning of more than two hours' allowance.

Now, it is proper to say that the public, aided by some sensational writers, had a total misconception of what two hours meant. They seem to think that it means that in two hours after the fight might have started we would be completely out of ammunition. That would be true if during those two hours all these guns were used at the maximum capacity in the way of rapidity of fire. It is also true that a little later on, at that same rapidity of fire, your guns would be inaccurate in their hours?

That is about equivalent to two hours' ammunition for each of our 12-inch guns and the coming 14-inch guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say it was considerably over that. Mr. GARDNER. Would the gentleman say it was three

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I am not sure it is quite that. course, the old scheme was based on the idea as to the probable time that guns would be in action, and the transference of ammunition from coast to coast and from locality to locality. latter consideration was eliminated as being an unwarrantable one in the scheme adopted in the board of review.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand each one of the coast defenses is to have its own supply of reserve ammunition, and that is to be half the life of the big guns.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not in the insular possessions. That is to be for the life of the guns because it was not believed that after the war broke out there would be any certainty or probability of being able to convey there additional ammunition; whereas, presumably, in America after the war broke we would immediately begin to add to our supply of ammunition, and there would be an opportunity to increase the amount. But in the judgment of a great many men the allowance we are making for the United States, if it was not increased at all, would be considered as exceedingly liberal.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman means that if it was not increased after the war broke out?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. What does the gentleman think about it? Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I permit myself to have an opinion about matters that are that technical. I think one of the greatest errors a man can fall into here is to assume that a limited amount of work can qualify him as an expert in a science that takes a life to master.

Mr. GARDNER. That is true; but it is something like a crucible in which a lot of fats are boiled and there is a precipitate. The gentleman has had a long experience in the House, and the House has as much confidence in him as in any other Member of the House, and I would like to know his opinion, if he is willing to give it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman frankly that I have not thought about it in the way the gentleman puts it. I will tell the gentleman why. I have a certain elasticity of mind, but it is being strained a good deal. I have traveled pretty fast lately. Here was the old scheme that was thrown into the discard and a new scheme representing 200 per cent increase that was supposedly the judgment of the best men we had in the service who dealt with the subject. I have thought that until we reached its fulfillment I did not need to worry myself very much about whether we wanted to go a little bit further or not, because apparently I have all I can do to get Congress to agree with me in going this far.

Mr. GARDNER. Until we have one-quarter of the life of the gun the gentleman thinks it is not much use to worry about going further?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we are beyond that. I am traveling along the road, and until I am at the end of it I do not concern myself as to how much further a new road may extend.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In this report, when the accuracy life of the gun is referred to, does that mean the figure that was formerly held in the case of each caliber before this European war, or is it based upon some observation since the war has been under way?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it is an estimate. We have shot ome guns to the limit of their accuracy life, because in this bill we are providing for relining some guns; but the 14-inch guns we have not shot to the limit of their accuracy life, and the 16-inch guns we certainly have not, and those are certainly estimates; but they are estimates which have been worked out, and which represent a given number of rounds for the accuracy life of the gun. Now, I have not stated what that was

Mr. GREENE of Vermont, I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we rather go to the extreme in what we do say about these matters; and it seems to me better to leave it as the board left it-in that general term, the accuracy

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand the purpose of employing that term; but I only wanted to ask the gentleman that term would signify to those who were more or less informed about the matter the figures which were arbitrarily set as an estimate before the war or whether they have been modified since the war began?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is a general understanding as to about what is meant by the accuracy life of the various cali-bers. That is the understanding by the experts in ordnance and artillery

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly; but that does not answer my question. If the chairman of the subcommittee will permit, I meant to ask whether that understanding was the understanding which the department had, in figures which were generally made public, as to what was expected to be the accuracy life of the various guns then in the service, or whether those figures had been modified since the beginning of the European war?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we have not had any experience from the European war, unless perhaps some that might have been obtained from the North Sea fight, touching how quickly these guns would wear out. We do know that some of the English ships that were in the North Sea fight had to have their guns relined.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am speaking more particularly of the mobile field artillery, and the suggestion has come several times, I understand, from the European battle fields that the former estimates of the probable accuracy life of cannon were very much under the real demonstrations by experience.

Mr. SHERLEY. Touching field artillery, I have not gone into that. Of course, as to mortars and howitzers, the accuracy life is very much greater than that of rifles which have a very high muzzle velocity. The accuracy life is probably beyond what we would be able to supply in the way of ammunition for mortars and howitzers.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What has the committee done in reference to the fortifications of the canal?

Mr. SHERLEY. This bill does not carry any appropriation for the canal. That appropriation comes in the sundry civil bill, and I would rather not go into it in connection with this bill.

Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I was summoning up these appropriations hereabout $145,000,000. I was wondering whether with the successive years the charge will lessen or increase. What are we to expect? Will some of these be fixed annual charges?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was estimated by the Board of Review that after their scheme was carried out there would be about a $2,000,000 annual maintenance charge, I think. That is my recollection. Now, frankly, I believe there never will come a time, as long as you have fortifications, when the matter will be finished and when there will be nothing but maintenance. And I will go further and say I think there never ought to come . such a time; because if it came it would be a practical evidence of stagnation on the part of those who plan and design these matters. It is impossible to forecast the future sufficiently to provide for the exigencies that it will bring forward.

I have frequently said on this floor, and I say it now, that I think we are the best fortified country in the world; and I think, speaking by and large, our defenses are adequate. Yet that has not kept me from recommending to the Congress projects that look to the spending of $96,000,000-practically nearly as much as they cost—for bettering them.

Mr. FESS. There might be something in the future that would make our present fortifications inadequate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course. For instance, the things that we are doing now in the expenditure of this $96,000,000 are largely the result of new developments that could not be foreseen by anybody. We are providing antiaircraft guns, In looking over some of the old hearings the other day I saw where Gen. Allen, then Chief of the Signal Corps, trying to get a balloon authorized by Congress, was asked the question whether the balloon could be hit by gunfire, and he said "no" that it could probably stay 1,000 feet or more up in the air, and that it could not be hit at all. To-day an aeroplane that does not fly 6,000 or 7,000 feet high has not much chance of doing a great deal more flying. The result is that we have had to build antiaircraft guns because of the danger that comes from the flying machines. We are building guns of very greatly increased range, due to the fact that battleships are now carrying guns with a range away beyond what was believed possible a We are also adding to the volume of our fire few years ago. because of the fact that the volume of fire from battleships has been very greatly increased. This is always just a contest be-tween the offensive and the defensive, and it will not end, apparently, until the ingenuity of man has ended.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I assume the gentleman has plenty of time, for I do not want to encroach upon his good

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I have more time than information, as some one said the other day.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think the gentleman can ever have that. I want to get back to the old subject. Is it proposed with these new 16-inch guns that any of them shall have a mount other than a disappearing carriage? Mr. SHERLEY. The Board of Review adopted generally the disappearing carriage, but provided that they should hereafter have an all-around fire wherever it was desired, and also left open the use of barbette carriages where there were particular reasons to make them desirable as against the disappearing carriage, and in point of fact we are building, for instance, in the eastern entrance to Long Island, some turrets in which are going to be mounted some 16-inch guns, and of course they will not be upon disappearing-gun carriages. I have no doubt that there will be in the future a number of guns at certain places that will be mounted on barbette or some carriage other than the disappearing-gun carriage.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Might I make one further inquiry, and I might possibly be permitted to make a little preface so that the gentleman will understand my point of view. My own information, as I have gathered it from men interested, has been that up to the 12-inch size the disappearing-gun carriage is certainly an excellent thing, but there is some doubt in the minds of some men as to any size above that, and I found quite a large number of officers who maintain it is impossible to build a disappearing-gun carriage that will efficiently serve that sized gun, for several reasons. One is that the length of the gun is so great that when it is lowered the men must get so far back from the emplacement and protection that they practically have no protection at all. The second is the weight of the gun is such that it is impossible to get proper counter-balances to make it work well. There have been some experimentations lately, and I thought perhaps the gentleman might enlighten us upon them. I have been told that the defenses at Cape Henry have been delayed in the installment of the 16-inch guns by reason of the department not yet having perfected a carriage of the disappearing type that will carry the guns.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not put it quite so strong; but the gentleman appreciates that the very moment you get a different caliber gun the whole question of weight and strains and stresses changes, and it becomes necessary to work out an entirely new computation and set of tables touching the carriage to hold that gun. I will say this to the gentleman, though it more properly would come in connection with the Panama deat least, I would have mentioned it then: Some of the guns at Panama, the 14-inch guns, were mounted on disappearing-gun carriages that in their use developed a weakness in connection with the carriage. There was a breakage of one of the pins, I think, due to the fact that this steel, which had been tested for tensile strength, hardness, and so forth, had not been tested—because only recently have they learned how, successfully—in regard to its ability to withstand shock, a certain feature of brittleness, and as a result some of those did break. A great many others did not, but there were spare parts for those that did, so that the guns are in commission. Since then that problem has been met successfully, according to the testimony before the committee, in two ways: First, by the production of a steel that will stand the shock, and, second, by a cushion against the shock, so that they have both removed the cause and created steel of a character to take care of it even if they had not removed the cause. In other words, they have apparently reached a double insurance against the recurrence of that trouble.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood there was some difficulty there, and that no doubt has been met as the gentleman indicates; but has the difficulty heretofore experienced with the 16-inch gun been met?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the first place, I do not agree with the gentleman in respect to the expression "difficulty heretofore experienced." We have just been building one 16-inch gun carriage for the one 16-inch gun which now exists in America, and that is being tested out at the Sandy Hook Proving Grounds. Presumably the gun and carriage will go to Panama very shortly. That is my understanding.

Mr. GARDNER. But that is only of 35 calibers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. So that that would not meet the difficulty the gentleman points out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, you can not test a disappearing carriage for a 50-caliber 16-inch gun until you have a 50-caliber 16-inch gun.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but the successful test of that carriage would not meet the gentleman's point that the gun is so long that it brings into range the men who operate the gun.

Mr. SHERLEY. I, perhaps, do not attach the weight to that particular suggestion that the gentleman from Minnesota. [Mr. Miller] does. I happen to have seen fortifications shot at by battleships at long ranges where presumably you would get the plunging fire that has made so many people think that the reason for the disappearing-gun carriage had passed, and also at shorter ranges.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I presume the gentleman refers to the experiments at Pensacola?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; at Mobile. I have no doubt of this, that, as between the disappearing carriage and the barbette carriage, the disappearing carriage does give a very increased protection to the gun. I do not mean by that that I think you will never hit a disappearing gun carriage and put it out of commission. As to the point in respect to the men, I can not see how the added length would expose them very much more to fire, and, without meaning this in any sense as a brutal remark, because I would like to see the men protected as much as possible, that can never be the main consideration in determining the types to be used, because unfortunately in great wars we have to sacrifice men frequently where you do not sacrifice the

Mr. GARDNER. You have to sacrifice men to save other men's lives

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman will probably concede, however, that any shot that destroyed a gun crew would very probably put the gun carriage out of business?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I would not concede that at all, because have actually seen shots that hit right in front of the emplacement and exploded, and, according to the damage done to dummies which were placed where the gun crew would have been, would have killed one of them, wounded another, but did not hurt the gun a particle, so it is easily possible to hurt the gun crew without putting the gun out of commission.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Just one final question and then will not trespass further on the gentleman: Is the department making any experiments whatever toward perfecting the barbette carriage and making it more serviceable than the disappearing carriage for large guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know, but frankly I should rather suspect not.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise if we should experiment to see which after all is the better type for these large guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. I personally would have no objection to it. I should have stated that the ordnance people are building a number of barbette carriages for 12-inch guns. I think it is fair to say in regard to the ordnance department that they have a tremendous amount of work to do, more work than they can do, and Congress never will undertake to relieve the pressure that exists now and that will exist a hundredfold more if war comes in such places as that, and, as I said last year, if we ever get into a great war, where we are going to break down worst is at the desks of the men who have charge of supplying these great munitions.

Now, these men are engaged in a tremendous amount of work and in doing things that have been ordered to be done. It is true, as the gentleman knows, Gen. Crozier himself believes in the disappearing-gun carriage as against the barbette carriage, but it is also true that the board has determined on the type generally. Now, he is the officer who is actually to create things, and he is simply following the recommendations that have been made.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If I may be allowed to say this: The gentleman knows I have no technical knowledge of the subject and do not pretend to have, but, being interested in the subject, I visited the best fortifications of this country on both coasts, in Hawaii, in the Philippines, in Panama, and I think it is only fair to say I have tried to converse with every captain serving a gun, with most of the colonels of most of the Artillery Corps, and I have never yet found one man of the whole lot who did not, without reservation, say that he would rather have the barbette carriage by all means than the disappearing type. I do not know whether they are right or wrong, but I do think this almost unanimous opinion on the part of the men who are actually serving the guns ought to be given the consideration of having a barbette carriage type brought to perfection; and they all tell me that the barbette carriages, which thus far have been very few in number, have been of the most ancient and archaic character, so that in most places they are placed they have never had a fair test.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I can say this to the gentleman in reply to that: There is probably no subject in connection with seacoast guns that has been so frequently investigated and reported on as this old controversy between the disappearing and the barbette carriage, and every decision has been in favor of the disappearing-gun carriage.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has that decision been by men who actually served the guns or by men in the office? I say that not in disparagement of men in the office, but-

Mr. SHERLEY. It has been both by men who were in the line generally and men who were on the staff and by men who actually used the guns. Now, I have talked to a great many men, just as the gentleman has, and I have visited quite a few fortifications. I have not found anything like the preponderance that he speaks of in favor of the barbette carriage. I have found that most of the junior officers have expressed a preference, but I have also found when I examined them as to the reasons that their reasons did not seem to stand analysis. Now, I would not let that alone determine me, but the judgment of these boards rather convinces me, because it has been so openly and so frequently pronounced.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The findings of the board of review are confidential, and I do not want to ask the gentleman any questions which the gentleman ought not to answer, but in this case where they do recommend the use of the barbette carriage. why do they recommend that?

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as those details are concerned, I have not the information myself. I think this is true: I think that there may be places you might want to use a rather higher angle of fire than you would get ordinarily with a disappearing-gun carriage, and for that reason you might use a barbette carriage. Then there might be a question of space in connection with your emplacements that would determine whether you wanted one or

Mr. GARDNER. Well, now, the gentleman told us last year, for instance, if I recall rightly, or somebody else, that they were mounting a lot of these 12-inch guns as howitzers.

Mr. SHERLEY. They were going to mount them on barbette carriages with a 30° elevation.

Mr. GARDNER. That is practically mounting them as howitzers: it is somewhere between rifles and mortars.

Mr. SHERLEY, Except they can use them, of course, at much less elevation.

Mr. GARDNER. On the disappearing-gun carriage 15° is the greatest change, is it not—the greatest angle of difference for depression or elevation of the muzzle?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is now as to the old 12-inch gun. The 14's will have 20° elevation and the new ones that are being planned, I think, will have a 30° elevation.

Mr. GARDNER. And no depression? You mean 30 altogether?

A 30° range. Of course, if you had a depression, which would be a maximum depression, you would then have a 25° maximum elevation; but the argument that was originally made by some against the disappearing-gun carriage, that it did not permit the use of guns for all-around fire or for high elevation, and therefore great range, has been answered by the statement that the carriages will provide both for all-around fire and high-degree

Mr. GARDNER. Of course, those were two of the great arguments that were used. My impression is a good deal like that of the gentleman from Minnesota as to the officers, but it is quite possible they formed their opinion because of the immobility of the disappearing carriage.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not wish to disagree with the judgment of these junior officers, and yet I do not suppose there will ever come a time that the fellow who uses a thing will agree with the man who makes it, because he sees simply the problem that confronts him as to the use of it, whereas the other fellow has the problem of making the thing, which raises a good many others that do not present themselves to the user. Now, I have no doubt if we had barbette carriages in all this time you would find a great preponderance of men who would insist we ought to have had disappearing-gun carriages, because that is human nature.

Mr. GARDNER. It is very possible.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will. Mr. WHALEY. For my own information, I will say that I find here on page 2 of the report you have a statement as follows:

Carriages for two all-around fire 12-inch guns for Charleston, $150,000.

When the appropriation bill was up last year I was told the forts of Charleston would be taken care of, and you afterwards said that an appropriation of $150,000 could fix the two 12-inch Was that in addition to this amount in this year's carriages.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. They were telling you that they were going to ask $150,000 for fixing them up. That did not mean they were going to have that out of funds that were being appropriated

Mr. WHALEY. There are four 12-inch guns down there. Is it the purpose to fix the carriage of one on Fort Sumter and one on Fort Moultrie, or to fix the two on Fort Sumter and have none on Fort Moultrie?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not sure of my memory, as I have had a right severe test put on it this afternoon, but my impression that the two guns are to be at Sumter.

Mr. WHALEY. The statement made to me by the officers down there last year, before the fortifications bill of 1916 was passed, was that carriages of the guns of Fort Sumter could not be moved; that they were absolutely worthless; that they had disappearing-gun carriages, but they could not be worked.

Mr. SHERLEY. That statement, that the gentleman has repeatedly given to me personally, and which has to-day been given the committee, and which I do not for an instant question was given to him, is contradicted absolutely and emphatically by the men who have inspected Charleston; and I took pains this year-and the gentleman will find it in the hearings-to ascertain what sort of inspection was being made of fortifications generally, because we carry a provision there for maintenance of fortifications, and presumably we are keeping them in good condition. There are three to four inspections made by different men of the fortifications of America annu-Now, to believe that those guns were not usable, and that that fact should not be known here in Washington after four annual inspections, is to believe what I do not for an instant

Mr. WHALEY. Does not the gentleman recall that I brought him a witness who is president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and who was present at the time and stayed there for hours, and who said that the guns could not be worked when ordered by the colonel in charge of the fort?

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be, but that would not prove any-

Mr. WHALEY. It would prove that they could not be used. Mr. SHERLEY. It would prove that they could not be used at that particular moment. That is all it would prove.

Mr. WHALEY. And six months afterwards the colonel of the fort told me they had not been used up to that time, and therefore I suppose that does not prove it either. And I came afterwards and asked you to provide carriages so that the guns could be used, and I afterwards understood the appropriation was to be made. Is this appropriation to be made so that the guns can be used? Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will not have difficulty to get at what the appropriation will be used for, so far as the committee on fortifications can inform him. If the gentleman will look at the record and not trust to his memory, he will see that there was no statement in the hearings or on the floor that out of the appropriations of last year $150,000 was to be used in Charleston. In point of fact, it was just the contrary. I said to the gentleman on a number of occasions, when he was pressing me as to the work at Charleston, that Charleston would be reached, but we could not do it within the scope of the bill last year. And I took occasion to have reports made repeatedly, not once, but several reports were made, from Charleston, touching the condition of the fortifications there.

Now, I am not questioning at all the gentleman's good faith in his belief touching the conditions there, but I say that the testimony taken before the committee does not warrant the belief in the conditions being such as represented,

Now here is the trouble-

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just there? My statement was that I asked you on the floor last year during the hearings on this bill if anything was going to be done for Charleston. Your reply to me was that it would be taken care of. After the fortifications bill had passed I saw Gen. Weaver, who was the head of the bureau, and he told me that $150,000 of that fund of last year would be appropriated or set aside to fix these guns, these carriages, that to-day you are appropriating for.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, in the first place, I have only this to say, that if Gen. Weaver told you that, he was mistaken, and the reason why he was mistaken is this: There has always been an understanding between the officers of the Army and the committee making the appropriation that the moneys will be expended for the purposes that have been indicated in the testimony at the time the estimates are submitted, and so careful have those gentlemen been in carrying out that understanding that when emergencies have arisen making necessary an alteration of the program they have, wherever it was possible, communicated that fact to the committee making the appropriation, in order to ask their consent, that they might not be subject to the criticism of having obtained money for one purpose and using it for another, because we carry these items in such general terms that they are available anywhere for a particular work.

For instance, funds for emplacement work can be used anywhere in the United States, and the money for ordnance could be used for ordnance anywhere. But they do not do it, and therefore I am positive in my statement that it was not intended by anybody that there should be expended last year $150,000 for Charleston.

Mr. WHALEY. Now let me ask you another question. there any place where you can find out where the appropriation is to be applied for fortification purposes?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. The gentleman can find it in the hearings, or as a rule in the committee reports.

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman says that the officers can apply it where they please, according to your statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I said to the contrary of that. I said was nothing in the law that would restrict them from expending the money in certain places, but when they came and asked for the money they always stated what they expected to do with it, and when we allowed it, if nothing was said that could be construed as meaning it was intended to be used for a different purpose, it would not be used for a different purpose than what it was asked for.

Mr. WHALEY. Is any of the appropriation to be applied to any of the southern ports other than Charleston?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.
Mr. WHALEY. Is Savannah to be fixed up?
Mr. SHERLEY. No.
Mr. WHALEY. Is Jacksonville to be fixed up?

Mr. SHERLEY, This is true as to a good many of them: Some of the money is going to be used to build barbette carriages for the 12-inch guns. As soon as those carriages are finished some of those guns will be mounted at southern ports, and northern ports, and Gulf ports, and Pacific ports.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman in all frankness: I am southern man. Nobody can accuse me of wantonly or intentionally trying to discriminate against the South. But Charleston, with all its importance, is negligible when compared with the importance of a place like New York, and that is not because Charleston is in the South or because New York is in the Take population, take money value of property, take any of the tests that could be applied touching fortifications, and the gentleman will find that the South is being treated just as well as the North is, or as the Pacific coast is.

Mr. WHALEY. That is what I want you to give me information about

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I am trying to do-

Mr. WHALEY. Because I understand the appropriation bill last year was to take care of the North and East and that the South was not to be given any of that.

Mr. SHERLEY. A lot of the appropriation made last year was for Cape Henry. You can not call Cape Henry North.

Mr. WHALEY. No; that is South; one place. What I want to know is when my people are going to be fortified. If you What I want can tell me some time in the dim future when they will have some protection-which we have not to-day-while you are protecting all the other parts and all the other ports of the country, I will be glad to know it. They value their lives and property just as much as other people do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, you can tell your people that if there has been any discrimination at all recently touching places not of the first importance, it has been in favor of Charleston. In other words, there are places in the South that in my judgment are more in need of an expenditure of $150,000 than Charleston.

Mr. WHALEY. What I am driving at is, you have got four forts down there, and there is not a single gun on those four forts that can keep off a battleship, which can lie off the harbor at a safe distance and destroy the forts.

Mr. SHERLEY. I deny it.

Mr. WHALEY. I get it from the officers at the forts that have to fire the guns. They tell me that a shell from a battleship can destroy those forts 3 miles out of range of the guns of the forts, and that they can move in after destroying the forts and destroy the navy yard; and yet we get no additional fortifications, such as larger guns, and so forth, for the forts down there, but we are told that after awhile we will be protected. Now, what I want to know is when we are to be protected?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, $150,000 is to be expended for building two barbette carriages to take care of two 12-inch guns. It will probably take a year or more to get them. After they are mounted those guns will have a range of 30,000 yards, which will be a range sufficient to prevent any ship coming against

But let me say to the gentleman that there is no greater error than to assume that because certain guns are out of the range of other guns, therefore the fortifications are inadequate, and therefore the fortifications are going to be battered to pieces. repeat it again, that there has been no fortification in America that I have made as many inquiries about, touching its condition, as I have in regard to the fortifications at Charleston, and every report that we have had has been a contradiction of the statement of facts that has been represented to the gentleman and which he in turn has represented to me. I am not for a moment questioning the accuracy of the gentleman's statement, but I am questioning, as I have a right to question, on the preponderance of testimony, the condition, as the gentleman states it.

Mr. WHALEY. I suppose the gentleman will admit the testimony of the general commanding the district and the colonel commanding the fort is entitled to some weight with me, when I have had them tell me that the guns are absolutely worthless and that the forts could not defend the city. I have to rely on the officers. If they are no good, we ought to kick them out. They have been in the service 35 years as Coast Artillery men, and if their opinion is not worth as much as that of the gentleman from Kentucky, then I am misled. I certainly give them credit for some experience and knowledge of the subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman need not be worried. The one thing about which I have been most careful has been not to put my opinion against the opinions of men whose business it to know, and the things I have stated here have not been stated because I believed them as an original proposition, but they have been stated because of the testimony given by men whose business it was to know. Now, there is a great deal of difference between conversations had touching the conditions of fortifications and reports as to those conditions. A man may very well say that a gun is not worth anything. He may use even a different phrase in order to emphasize it. What he means is that that gun, compared with a new gun of certain power and range and mounted in a different way, is not worth anything, and that is true as a relative statement; but the statement that the gun is of no value in the defense of that place would not be true. When it comes to the reports of these officers, which are on file in the War Department, which the gentleman can see, which I have seen, and some of which I think he has seen, and also the comment of the district officers, he will be forced to the conclusion that taking it as a matter of evidence and weighing it simply as a lawyer, as against the conversational statements which the gentleman has heard, the preponderance of evidence is against him.

Mr. WHALEY. Does the gentleman recall that last year I asked him to bring the general commanding the district and the colonel commanding the forts and let them testify before the committee? I was informed then that the same information could be gotten out of the department, and I told you it could not be, because the general commanding the district had been shifted to Honolulu, so he could not give his testimony, and I was told that he could not be brought here because of expense.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not for an instant believe that the general was shifted to Honolulu in order to keep him from giving testimony

Mr. WHALEY. He was sent there just before Congress met, and he was brought back just after the fortifications bill was passed. Ordered out in November, 1915, and brought back in June, 1916.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is another piece of logic that is not sufficient to warrant governmental action, in my judgment. It may have happened that he left just before Congress met and that he came back right after it adjourned, and yet a logician would say that it was a non sequitur that he left because of the fact that Congress was to convene.

Mr. FESS. A case of post hoc, ergo propter hoc.
Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to be unfair to the gentleman or his territory, but I tried my best to ascertain the facts. I hope to go to Charleston, if I can ever find time enough, and see

Mr. WHALEY. I offered to take the gentleman last year.
Mr. SHERLEY. I am a little tired of the constant statements that are made to me informally, which conflict with the formal statements that are on file.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is not the entrance to Charleston Harbor such now that no battleship of any size could get in there except at certain particular stages of the tide?

Mr. WHALEY. I would like to answer that, because I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky knows. I will say that a steamship, Edgar F. Luckenbach, from the Pacific coast, went in there the other day drawing 32 feet 3 inches of water, with a tide not quite full. There is not a battleship in the Navy that draws that much to-day. The entire fleet can get into Charleston Harbor and still leave ample room for double the fleet of to-day.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I said except at certain stages of the tide—at high tide.

Mr. WHALEY. The difference between high tide and low tide is 5 feet 2 inches. There are 281 feet at low tide, and there is a rise of 5 feet 2 inches.

Mr. SHERLEY. How wide is the channel? Mr. WHALEY. The entrance channel is 500 feet between the Mr. WHALEY. jetties and 1,000 feet beyond. I suppose that will carry a battleship 90 feet wide. It is the deepest harbor on the South Atlantic coast and costs less and requires less to maintain.

Mr. SHERLEY. It would also make any vessel present a very good target to shoot at.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I know when I was down there on a vessel drawing 26 or 27 feet of water we could not get in except by lying out and waiting for high tide.

Mr. WHALEY. That was a long time ago. It was in 1898, was it not?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; it was five years ago, and it struck me that the defense of that narrow channel through which vessels must go ought to be a very simple thing.

Mr. WHALEY. Unless they first stood off and demolished your forts, which they can do.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman,
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would like to know one thing that I could not get from the evidence. I understand from the evidence, on pages 72 and 73, that the ultimate provision of field artillery and ammunition is based on a force of 1,000,000 men, according to the statement of Gen. Crozier.

Mr. SHERLEY. What happened was this: The estimates that were submitted represented one-seventh of the amount remaining to be supplied in order to carry out the Treat Board report, as finally approved by the Secretary of War, which contemplated the acquisition of a given amount of mobile armament for 1,000,000 men.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is that one-seventh for about 100,000 men a year?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it was not one-seventh in the sense of men; it was one-seventh of the cost in money value of the mobile artillery remaining to be supplied.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much had been supplied already-enough for two or three hundred thousand men?

Mr. SHERLEY. It all depends on your calculation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I mean by the Treat Board calculation.

Is it about 100,000 men?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Greble Board contemplated field artillery and ammunition for 500,000 men, figuring four guns and a fraction over for every thousand rifles and sabers. The Treat Board increased the number of guns for a thousand rifles and sabers considerably, increased tremendously the amount of ammunition and caliber of guns that should be had, and figured on the basis of an army of a million men instead of five hundred thousand men. Now, if we had been working under the Greble Board scheme

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Never mind the Greble Board. Mr. SHERLEY. But I do mind it because it is important for comparison, and I can only give the gentleman the information in the way that I have it. If we had been working on the Greble Board scheme we would have built more of some guns than were in the Greble Board scheme. Now, as I recollect, the Treat Board plan figures something like an expenditure of about three hundred million-odd dollars, and we have something like fifty or sixty million dollars' worth now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I thought it was $450,000,000, and that we had about $150,000,000 now, including ammunition.

I am including ammunition.

Mr. SHERLEY. As a matter of fact, we have $67,000,000 in value of material now on hand or appropriated for. There remains to be provided under the program of that board material to the value of $256,692,738.

Now, the estimates that were submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations contemplated providing one-seventh of that sum of $256,000,000 with this difference: That the estimate there is the estimate of values at the time the Treat Board made the report, whereas it is going to cost us now about 25 per cent more to get the guns than it would have cost under the figures that were used by that board.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am obliged to the gentle-man. I think I have got all that. What I wanted to get was what we are providing for and what we will have in seven years in material and ammunition for a million men. Does the gentleman think a million men ought to be anything more than a mere figure, and that we ought to have reserve for a great deal more than a million men if we get into a war in seven years?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is carrying me far afield. Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am asking the gentleman for his opinion.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know the gentleman is, and I will give it. The gentleman is carrying me far afield. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asked me whether I thought the present allowance for seacoast cannon was adequate. I replied to him as a practical legislator that that question was immaterial. I have far enough to travel before I get up to this scheme without burdening my head as to how inadequate it may It takes all the influence I have to get men willing to go as fast as we are traveling. What is the use of my troubling myself as to how much faster we could travel if we wanted to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman see a distinction between fortifications and the land army?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; I do not want to be disagreeable to the gentleman, but I have not time to waste in making calculations about how much more might be desirable when every ounce of influence I may have is necessary to get men to agree with me to go as fast as we are going.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentle-man whether he does not think if the Navy failed as a defense, that a mobile army is of much more importance than fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do and I do not. I think fortifications is not all; but I do think that we are more likely to have guns and ammunition than trained men when war comes, if it shall come.

I am much obliged to the committee for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am not going to attempt to discuss the bill under consideration, because it would be unwise for me to do so in view of the information that we have had from the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I am willing to follow him in this matter and vote for the bill he presents.

A large number of my constituents are making a vigorous protest against some of the provisions of the revenue bill about to be brought in by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, and especially to that section of the bill which proposes to impose an additional tax of 8 per cent on the earnings of corporations and partnerships. I feel that there is much justification for their protest. Every known source of revenue has been tapped heretofore by this administration. It has perfected an obnoxious system of taxation, and the present bill simply adds to that unwholesome structure additional iniquities.

It first reduced the revenue heretofore collected at the customhouse by more than one-half. In order to take care of this loss it revived the Spanish War tax, increased corporation taxes, increased the income tax, imposed an inheritance tax. Its present plan is to again increase the income tax, the inheritance tax, to sell several hundred million dollars' worth of United States bonds and $100,000,000 worth of United States Treasury notes

I will incorporate as a part of my remarks a telegram which I received from the Hon. George M. Gillette, president of the Minnesota Employers' Association, an association composed of about 5,000 of the business men of the State of Minnesota, protesting against the tax:

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 26, 1917.

G. R. SMITH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I wish to record in the name of 4,200 business men of this State represented by this association their protest against the proposed measure before Congress taxing profits.

MINNESOTA EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION, GEO. M. GILLETTE, President.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of gun and mortar batteries, $2,500,000.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] to tell us how much of that amount is for the Cape Henry fortifications. I think he did not go into the details of that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the situation touching that item is a little peculiar. Last year we gave them $2,300,000, the idea being that that would enable them to start considerable work at Cape Henry and do some work at Rockaway Beach, in the event that they got the land, and also for the emplacements in connection with certain of the 12-inch guns that were to be mounted on barbette carriages. It developed at the hearings that they had not expended practically any of this money, due to the fact that title has not been secured at all at Rockaway Beach, and there was a hitch in the title at Cape Henry, growing out of a right of way for a railroad in connection with the wharf that was necessary before beginning most of the construction work, in order to get the material Questions also arose as to the other emplacements. result was that though they asked this year for $3,675,000 the committee cut that amount to $2,500,000, because it was believed that with the something over $2,000,000 they have now on hand and the two million and a half we are giving them they could not and would not spend more than that prior to the next year's bill becoming a law. With that it is expected that they will do their work as fast as they can at Cape Henry and at Rockaway and for the emplacements of these 12-inch guns. One of the problems that delayed there was the question of where they would place those guns. Then there was also some money-$50,000 and odd-for emplacements for antiaircraft guns, and considerable question came up as to whether those guns should be on fixed emplacements, and I am rather inclined to think that they will not be, but will be placed on trucks capable of being moved about, and simply stored at the fortifi-The result is that they will have now all of the money that they can use for emplacement work. And this further fact ought to be noted: There will be no actual delay in regard to these fortifications because of their failure to expend previous moneys, because, as the gentleman knows, they can build emplacements very much faster than you can build the guns, and by the time the guns and the carriages are ready I think the emplacements at both of these places will be easily ready.

Mr. GARDNER. Would about $1,000,000 of this be expended at Cape Henry?

Mr. SHERLEY. As I recall, they asked this year for something over $800,000 at Cape Henry. I should say that at least a million of it or more would be spent at Cape Henry.

Mr. GARDNER. And they have expended a couple of millions before this at that point.

Mr. SHERLEY. We appropriated it, and they have now something over $2,000,000 unexpended, and I should say that considerably over a million, if needed, would go to Cape Henry. I can not recall at this time the estimated cost for the emplacements at Cape Henry.

Mr. GARDNER. I can not either, and I was just going to ask the chairman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was not the sum of $1,600,000 appropriated last year for Cape Henry?

Mr. SHERLEY. Last year there was appropriated $2,300,000, with the understanding that it might be used for several purposes, according as the exigencies demanded. It was not possible to segregate it. The clerk informs me that $1,700,000 in round figures is what the emplacements at Cape Henry are ex-

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That may be. The statement made by the gentleman a year ago, I think, when the discussion was up, was that the amount for those fortifications cost about $1,600,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. They submitted estimates this year for $3,675,000, of which $800,000 was expected to be for Cape Henry, but they also had estimates for a lot of other work, which they can not possibly do within the time between this bill and a new bill, and the cut that was made here was made after a very thorough examination. I think I am warranted in saying that the engineer officers feel satisfied that we have allowed them funds ample for their work for the ensuing year. If I have any doubt it is that we did not cut it enough. I think that next year the committee will probably be told that they have not been able to expend more than four million of this money.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is any of this sum to be appropriated for gun or mortar batteries for Hawaii?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not at this point in the bill. The money for the Hawaiian Islands is carried under the insular possessions in the latter part of the bill. There is being carried money toward the building of six emplacements in the Hawaiian Islands, a little less than $300,000 of the total required.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Perhaps the gentleman can fur-ther tell me whether any of this is to go to fortifications in Puget Sound? I know that is a pretty broad question.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not think any of this emplacement money is for Puget Sound. We are making some provisions in connection with the item for armament for seacoast defenses. Part of that is for some 16-inch guns at Puget Sound, but it is not necessary to start that emplacement work now, because it will take four to five to six years to get the guns and carriages, and you can build those emplacements in two seasons.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that if it is going to take four or five or six years to get a 16inch gun and carriage we might shorten that time up by having some barbette carriages that do not take so much time to make?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, I think it will take more time to build barbette carriages; but the building of the guns is the thing that is going to delay a great deal, and we have to have the same gun, whether we put them on a barbette or a disappearing carriage.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am afraid the bogey man will get us long before those guns are built.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be, but I think only the bogy man will get us, and I am not afraid of him. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to transfer to the owners of the adjacent land, in partial consideration for the transfer to the United States of an easement in other land of said owners, the title of the United States to a right of way now owned by the United States and located between the tract of land known as the main Fort H. G. Wright Military Reservation and the tract of land known as the Mount Prospect Tract, on Fishers Island, Long Island Sound, N. Y.

For modernizing older emplacements, $102,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I assume this is to enable the department to overcome that difficulty that the gentleman a little while ago referred to about fortifications down on Long Island.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; then I was talking about Rockaway Beach. The situation is this: We now own a certain roadway, or, rather, we own a right of way at Fort Wright. In connection with the building of some turrets that are to be placed there it is necessary to build and construct a railroad. Now, the roadway is not adaptable for the placing of a railroad. Last year we appropriated money to acquire certain land that is to be used there, but in doing that it became desirable to trade this right of way which we now have as a road right of way for a right of way that is to be given us for a railroad, and this language is put in for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Entirely for the benefit of the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely, and it simply saves us the cost of condemning and buying a right of way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, before withdrawing the reservation of the point of order, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he does not think, as it is late on Saturday afternoon, we should rise, as it is apparent we can not finish the bill to-day

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I had no idea of finishing the bill, but I had hoped to get pretty well into it. Personally

I am tired enough to be willing to quit at any time.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has been on his feet a little more than two and a half hours and he ought to be willing to quit.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to hear the gentleman is in an accommodating state of mind, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. ALEXANDER having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Houston, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20453, the fortifications bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn—Mr. Speaker, I will withhold that for a moment to enable the gentleman from Nebraska to submit a request for unanimous consent.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by discussing briefly the subject of the organization of the House in close contests, to supplement the same by a well-written history of such contests by Edgar C. Snyder, correspondent of the Omaha Bee, a very instructive article, entirely nonpartisan.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, as this is the first thing he is going to put in the RECORD that is nonpartisan, I am not going to object to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the extension of remarks? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. Sinnorr, until and including January 31, 1917, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BAILEY, until and including January 29, 1917, on account of important business.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker designates the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] as Speaker pro tempore for to-morrow's memorial exercises.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to adjourn. The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at 12 o'clock tomorrow, Sunday, January 28, 1917.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Res. 182) authorizing an exhibition of the various activities of the Government service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1364), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20500) to provide for the prohibition of the importation of intoxicating liquors into the Territory of Hawaii, and to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors therein under certain conditions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1365), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 28, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. Littlepage as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer

Eternal God, Dispenser of all good, Father of all souls, our hearts instinctively turn to Thee as we thus assemble here today to record on the pages of history the life, character, and public service of a deceased Member who served his people, State, and Nation upon the floor of this House with fidelity, courage, and fortitude. We mourn his going, but not without hope. We thank Thee for that something within that tells us we shall never die, that something which tells us that truth shall outlive the stars, that something which tells us that love shall be satisfied. We mingle our tears with those who knew and loved him, his lonely widow and orphan children; and pray that they may look forward with imperishable hope to a reunion in a realm where sorrows nor death shall ever enter. And Thine be the glery through Him who taught us that good is stronger than evil, that life is stronger than death.

I know not where His islands lift Their fronded palms in air; I only know I can not drift Beyond His bove and care.

Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bowers] is recognized.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, it was not my pleasure to have had a long personal acquaintance with my colleague, the late Representative HUNTER HOLMES Moss, Jr. I became a Member Representative HUNTER HOLMES Moss, Jr. of this House on the 16th day of May, 1916, and he died a few weeks following. It was my pleasure to hear him deliver an able, eloquent address during this brief period and I was impressed with his ability, foresightedness, and his progressiveness. In that address he proved himself to be a man of courage, and, although apparently in great pain, he delivered it in a forceful and impressive manner. He was then walking within the shadows of death. He knew it, his family knew it, and his friends knew it. The sands were then running low in the hourglass which timed his life.

Judge Moss became known by 'reputation throughout the West Virginians, like myself, knew him in that impersonal way, read with interest and profit of his stand on important judicial and public questions, as well as the addresses he was accustomed to make to bar associations and gatherings of our people in the western part of the State on nonpolitical subjects of considerable importance at the time of their delivery. We who lived far distant from where he lived and labored came to know him in this way, and West Virginians were universally attracted to him. They admired him for his aggressive style of public utterance, the outspoken emphasis of his opinions, and the clarity and common-sense texture of his judicial decisions. This combination of youth and wisdom on the circuit courts of our State was a comparatively rare thing even as late as then. West Virginia up till about that time still clung tenaciously to the archaic idea that old age, with its patriarchal beard, was fit only to wear the judicial ermine, interpret the laws and award judgments. Beardless youth, however wise and well poised, however learned in the law and upright of character, however abreast of the vanguard in the procession of progress of the age, was thought to be insufficient for the task. Happily, this is all changed in West Virginia.

The late Representative Moss was, perhaps, the pioneer in bringing it about. Wisdom and learning, character and industry, worth and merit are now rewarded when found in our sturdy young men. They do not have to wait until age has whitened their heads and infirmed their limbs to receive the Victorian crosses which the men in all walks of our busy American life have shown that they deserve. So it happened—and it happened in a remarkably short space of time—that Judge Moss's name became known Statewide, and his reputation as an able and upright judge likewise. Men like myself, far distant from his field of activity, bethought themselves that in him there was developing a man who was destined to mount to greater heights, to build the structure of his public career upon a foundation the corners of which would rest upon every boundary line of the Commonwealth. He possessed the qualities of leadership and statesmanship. His was a new and brilliant star in the public and official life of West Virginia. That opinion is still held. Death itself can not erase it. It alone, in our judgment, could and did prevent realization. Moss's career, extraordinary as it was, is far from achieving the grandeur and fame which it would have reached had he been permitted to live out the allotted three score and ten years.

In these circumstances which I have narrated it will be plain to my hearers that when I met Judge Moss here on the floor of this House I did not feel that I was meeting a stranger. Nor did he, I am glad to state. Our relations became immediately friendly and cordial, although we both knew at the time that our friendship would be of short auration. That, of course, was a subject never mentioned between us. In the few times I saw and talked with him I found no need to discount the appraisement.

In his district have died recently many of its most prominent men, among them the Camdens, Jacksons, Boremans, Shattucks. and Representative Moss's worthy competitor, Hon. John M. Hamilton

The district which I represent has been stricken, hard stricken as it were, within the past few years. No other one district in the Nation has lost so many of its valuable and distinguished men as this district.

First, only a few years ago, came the death of Senator Stephen Benton Elkins—and to whom I know of no better tribute than that printed in the Washington Post on the morning after his death. He was a man who made friends on every hand, who drew and held them to him, regardless of political affiliation, religious creed, or racial characteristics. Of him it may be said he was without an enemy. He was the apostle of sunshine, the embodiment of good cheer, the inveterate foe of pessimism, a supreme optimist who saw only the best in everyone and refused to believe ill of anyone. It was impossible for him to harbor a grudge, and if ever this sincere, big-hearted man gave offense in the heat of debate or political discussion, he was quick to retract and heal the wound before it began to hurt. In his loss the second district and the State of West Virginia lost the ablest man of his time and generation.

He was my friend and I loved him. He represented the highest type of American citizenship and American statesmanship. But only in the year gone by our losses have been very great, for following this came the death of my distinguished predecessor, Hon. William-G. Brown, known to us all and admired as Junior Brown.

Brown's ancestors were Scotch. His father was a distin-tished man, and held many positions of honor and trust guished man, and held many positions of honor and was the first Member of Congress from the second district. Junior Brown followed in his footsteps; was three times elected a Member of Congress, always making himself felt and respected. He was a big-hearted, affable, courteous American, who possessed a genial smile and hearty handshake that has never been excelled by any man. His liberality and generosity were surpassed by no man. His remarkable popularity was well de-No one was ever more loved or stood higher in the estimation of his friends than Junior Brown-and those who knew him best loved him most. He came to the House full of the wisdom of experience of dealing with affairs. He was a lawyer, a business man, a statesman, and was one of the ripest, strongest men of action in this illustrious body.

Two weeks after Mr. Brown's death came that of Gov. William M. O. Dawson-weak, frail, always weak and frail in body—the greatest organizer of his time, and one of the ablest men the State has yet produced. "It was Gov. Dawson's lot to stand at the focus of many contentions and to be praised or blamed with that decision which is characteristic of interest or passion rather than of reason or intelligence. With these contentions and judgments, which time can only read aright from the imperfect records of good and evil, I am not concerned. He was especially interested in promoting the welfare of the common people. Any measure which proposed to increase their happiness at once commanded his attention and support. The laboring man had no wiser or truer friend, and he gave him-self to the advocacy of those lines of social and industrial reform, to his judgment combined conservatism with advancement, in that wise proportion which is essential with healthy growth and real improvement to society." He was the greatest organizer of his time, and history will accord him a place as one of the many remarkable men of his State.

Last but not least of the great men who have lived in the second district and who have recently passed away is Senator Henry Gassaway Davis. Henry G. Davis was one of the most notable figures of the State, and one whose works and deeds ran current with its history. He was born during the administration which gave us the Monroe doctrine and died in Washington in March of last year, making his span of life cover almost a century of time. Family exigencies required him to begin his life work at the age of 13, and for 80 years his activities in private and public affairs continued uninterrupted. The governing elements in his character were untiring energy, persistency, and loyalty of purpose, clear vision, rigid integrity, and an abiding faith in the righteousness and results of all his undertakings. Others kept pace in the progress of events in the wonderful development of West Virginia, but he was ever in the forefront and his dominating personality made him a leader of men and measures. He served for 12 years in the Upper House of Congress, and his daughter has the unique distinction of having had a father, husband, and son who were members of the United States Senate, Senator Davis's achievements and fame are indelibly fixed in the annals of West Virginia, and he well deserved the title that was so freely and affectionately bestowed in his later years by his appreciative fellow citizens, of "the Grand Old Man of West Virginia."

But to go back to the splendid man in whose memorial we are gathered here to-day—Judge Moss died in Atlantic City on the afternoon of July 14, 1916. Congress had adjourned over the week end. Word was not received in Washington of his death until that night, coming then by the way of his home at Parkersburg. Senators and Members had scattered away to various resorts. It was with difficulty that even all the Members of the West Virginia delegation could be notified.

A majority of the Senators and Representatives who were

West Virginia delegation in Congress. Thus, it was a party of personal friends of the deceased. It was shorn of its stiff official character, and I think it was all the better. The men of that party were close to Judge Moss, had worked side by side with him; they admired him and they liked him, and felt his death as a loss personal to themselves. It was a beautiful July day when all that was mortal of our dead coworker and friend was laid away in a flower-lined grave in a cemetery at the edge of the city of Parkersburg, his home. The citizens thronged the Trinity Episcopal Church, where the funeral rites were read and the favorite hymns of the departed Congressman were impressively sung by the white-robed choir. There was a veritable garden of fragrant flowers surrounding the coffin and the church altar. The local bar association, the officers of the local courts, and county and city governments were present in a body. Outside the church the streets were lined with people, young and old, who had known the young lawgiver and lawmaker. The very air was laden with tribute and filled with tender memories. It was a scene which made itself "felt" in the hearts of everyone. I shall never forget the impressiveness of it. It was only in the few hours intervening between the closed grave and the departure of our train that that scene became vocal. I have never heard such splendid and heartfelt and tender tributes paid to any man as I heard fall from the lips of man after man in Parkersburg, who had known Representative Moss from the day of his birth until "The Moving Finger" had written the final word of his earthly chapter.

The death of Congressman Moss removed from West Virginia one of its most promising young men-young, ambitious, cultured, with a career so promising that one can not comprehend why he should have been cut down in his prime. is all the more pathetic because of his children. He met death, I am told, as he did every problem of his boyhood and youth, with a smile, a stout heart, and with a consciousness that he had faithfully and well performed his duty. loved wife and children, to his devoted mother and sister, no sweeter consolation can come than the thought gathered from his memorial address to the Elks some years ago in his home town:

There is no death! The stars go down To rise upon some fairer shore. And bright in heaven's jeweled crown They shine forever more.

And ever near us, though unseen, The dear immortal spirits tread; For all the boundless universe Is life—there are no dead.

Those who have known him best can temper their regret at his early taking off with gratitude to the Giver of every perfect gift that he lived among us even for so brief a space, and our farewell to him can be the fervent wish that the soul of this distinguished West Virginian may forever be at peace. It is God's will; so mote it be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WOODYARD] is recognized.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker, in the order of Nature-that Nature which moves with unerring certainty in obedience to fixed laws—Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., has gone to that repose we call death. In the midst of his labors, while yet a young man by no means at the zenith of his intellectual powers nor brilliant yet substantial public career, crowned with honors and laden with trophies meritoriously won and gladly bestowed, with a future illumined by the white lights of promise, this friend and colleague of ours was suddenly stricken, and soon thereafter his courageous and intrepid soul took wings.

This House is met to-day to rejoice at the testimony he has left us and to commend his life and efforts as worthy of serious reflection and emulation. It is a service of helpfulness and inspiration to the living, for nothing we can say can add to nor subtract from the lives of our honored dead. No words of ours, however profound in thought nor how eloquently uttered, no chaplet that our hands can weave, no testimony that our personal knowledge can bring, will add anything to the fame of our deceased colleague, friend, and comrade that the public which knew him best, and which honored him most, will not now freely accord.

Judge Moss—this was the title by which he was addressed by his home people and by his constituents—represented the fourth congressional district of West Virginia in the Sixty-third and in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress until the day of his designated to attend the funeral services, which were to be held on the afternoon of Monday, July, 16, could not be reached in time for them to fulfill the appointment. In consequence, the official party was composed altogether of members of the by a broad and versatile experience in public life and office which comparatively few men in our country obtain at such an early age, and no man among West Virginia's public men, dead or living, so far as I have been able to discover by searching their biographies, ever had. County prosecutor, circuit court judge, Member of the National House of Representatives-all within the brief span of an even dozen years—these were the successive goals achieved by him, the triology of high honors bestowed upon him by an appreciative public as rewards for a high order of service performed with as high a degree of satisfaction to them. In these three important official positions his brilliant mind, his gifted tongue, his lofty ideals, his acquired learning. enviable manhood, and indefatigable industry found their opportunity for development, for expression, and for the performance of service beneficial to humanity in the county, in the State, and in the Nation.

In this connection I think it should be mentioned that Judge Moss represented no small nor remote constituency. It was in a populous, modern, industrial city that he started to carve out the remarkably successful and brilliant career to which we today pay reverent tribute.

There was competition there between strong and brilliant men-men older, with larger experience and with accumulated honors and dignities-when he stepped forth from college on to life's crowded, jostling, and unsympathetic highway. It was there before, is there now, and ever will be to the end of time. It is this knowledge which makes his rapid succession of distinguished achievements all the more unusual and extraordinary. There was nothing accidental about his success. It came to him because he deserved it, because he worked hard for it, because he had the ability and courage to possess it. He was the elect among many ambitious and strong men, not by any trick of fate, but because those qualities which make for greatness and success in life he possessed in most abundant measure.

Not the least of these was family. Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., was the descendant of distinguished forbears on both the paternal and maternal side. The Mosses and the Blairs were leaders in the social and professional life of their day. They were prominent in the communities in which they lived, exercising a benevolent and uplifting influence over their fellows, and favorably impressing themselves upon the history of their times. It is interesting to note that Judge Jacob Beeson Blair, grandfather of Judge Moss, was one of the first Representatives elected from West Virginia to this House, serving in the Thirty-eighth Congress, the district he represented then embracing all the counties, and numerous others, which many years later sent the distinguished grandson here to represent them. Judge Blair was one of the founders of the State of West Virginia, and his name is linked with the procession of events which led to the birth of a new star in the galaxy of loyal Union States.

It may not be inappropriate to mention here as an interesting historical coincidence that William Gay Brown, father of the late William Gay Brown, jr., who was a member of this Congress at the time of his death, March 9, 1916, and represented the second congressional district of West Virginia, was the other one of the first two members of this House to be elected from the then new-born State of West Virginia. As their elders had worked side by side in friendly relationship for the welfare of their State and their Nation, so the son and grandson with mutual respect and friendship, both answering the final roll call in the house of their Heavenly Father within less than four months of each other.

The late Representative Moss was born in Parkersburg, W. Va., in the year 1874. His father was a banker, the son of a leading physician, who was equally as much of a leader as an officer in the Union Army. His mother, who survives him, was the daughter of Judge Blair, from whom she doubtless inherited her interest in literature and her mastery of the art of brilliant conversation, which have given her a leading and influential place in the club life of her home city, and is an added testimony to the advantageous intellectual heritage which fell to the son. The boyhood of Representative Moss, with the exception of a few years when his parents resided in Salt Lake City, was spent in Parkersburg. He attended the public schools there, then the State University, where he completed his academic and legal studies.

The honors which he reaped in his student years were a forecast of the larger and more distinguished honors which were to come to him when he entered upon the activities and struggles of his workaday life. He had scarcely more than two years practice at the law when he entered upon his political career; yet in that short time he had shown such ability as a counselor and such superior talent as an advocate that it was easy to be seen by the people of his native city and county-side that a new and brilliant star had taken its place in their his place here among them, and his abilities and worth were firmament. Twenty-six years of age found Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., nominated and elected prosecuting attorney for the great county of Wood over older men, lawyers of longer training, and officials of proven trustworthiness.

To this office was now brought an occupant who possessed the enthusiasm of youth, tempered with a grasp and comprehension which usually only accompanies the experience which goes with more mature years. Here was a brilliant, active mind, a studious nature, and a storage house of restless energy. It was but natural, then, that there should take place in the administration of the affairs of that office a radical departure from the rules which had governed its administration for many years preceding. The change had not been expected by the public, but it came, and succeeding events proved that it was welcome. For it was then and there, while administering the duties of that office, the foundation for as brilliant a career as any West Virginian ever made for himself in so brief a period of time was laid.

There was nothing sensational about it, unless it can be said that in that time and in that place an official who enforced the laws without fear or favor, whose sense of justice was so strong as to be almost a religion with him, was a sensation. His devotion to duty was his creed; absolute and exact justice to all and everybody alike was, it may be said, an obsession; honesty and loyalty were the points by which he ever steered his course. True to his conscience, true to his oath, and true to his obligation to the people who called him to their service—these were some of the main groundworks upon which this young State's attorney built for himself a monument more to be prized and more enduring than the marble one which marks his final resting place. He was the youngest man, up until that time, who ever held the office of prose-cuting attorney of Wood County, and no one before nor since has made a record superior to his in administering its affairs.

It is not to be wondered at, then, that before his four years term had wholly expired he was made the nominee of his party for the office of judge of the circuit court, embracing at that time the counties of Wood, Wirt, and Pleasants. He lacked a month or more of the required age—30—when he received the nomination, but he had attained that before the He was elected by a very large vote of the people. He was the youngest man to be elected circuit judge in the State's history. He assumed the judicial ermine which had been worn by men who had grown gray in the public service. Such men distinguished in the State's annals as James Monroe Jackson had worn it. The great "war governor" of West Virginia, one of the first two United States Senators elected from West Virginia, the beloved and revered Arthur Ingraham Boreman, had sat upon the bench of that court; had considered it as great an honor to round out his great career there as his fellow citizens had considered it a great honor to overwhelmingly and delightedly acquiesce in his wishes in regard to that,

The situation offered a supreme test of the mentality and character of the young prosecutor. How splendidly he stood it, with what exceptional ability he met it, with what dignity and learning, impartiality and justness he administered it, constitute a blessed memory for his relatives and friends and a shining chapter in the history of West Virginia jurisprudence. In the closing year—the eighth— of his judgeship, Judge Moss was acclaimed so just and so able by the bar and by the public that he could have succeeded himself without opposition, an offer unheard of before or since in that circuit. All he had to do was to say the word and he would have been unanimously reelected for another term of eight years. But another and, perhaps, a higher honor was opening up to him then-one which, if not higher, offered duties more to his liking and more suited to his active mind and energetic personality. For the excitements and strenuosities of political life appealed more strongly than anything else to Judge Moss. He liked the smoke and the thick of political battle. His reasoning powers and oratorical talents fitted him for the triumphs of the hustings, and the oppositions and support, the noise and the enthusiasm, were the very breath of life to him. His nomination for the Sixty-third Congress came easily to him, and his election little less so, although he was opposed by one of the most popular candidates the Democratic Party had to offer. His reelection to the Sixty-fourth Congress over both a Democratic and a Progressive opponent was an evidence of the undiminished confidence in and admiration for him which the voters had so signally given every time they had the opportunity to do so.

Of his labors in this House its membership is well aware and promptly recognized and suitably rewarded. This was evidenced by his appointment to membership on the Committee on the Judiciary at the opening of the present Congress, a position of influence and importance which relatively few men attain at the outset of their second term. Here upon the floor of this House, before committees of the Congress, Judge Moss stood for the best that there is in life, as he did as public prosecutor and judge, as he did upon the lecture platform and in private life. He has left his impress for good upon this great body. It is entirely reasonable to believe that, had not death cut him down so ruthlessly and so cruelly, even greater success and higher honors would have come to him. His meteoric, meritorious, and extraordinary career amply justifies that belief—an opinion, I may say with confidence, which is held by the people who gave him their suffrage time and again, and to whom his services as a Member of this House and in the other official positions he so ably filled and so brilliantly adorned, were so pronouncedly satisfactory.

And now may I be pardoned for mentioning personal matters as briefly as possible. Judge Moss and myself were personal friends. We were associated together a great deal, especially in promoting the success of the party to which we belonged and in whose success we were so actively and devoutly devoted. Judge Moss was my friend and supporter in the five congressional campaigns I made in the fourth district of West Virginia. I appreciated that help and he knew it.

When it came his turn to be the candidate of the great Republican Party in the fourth district for membership in this House, I gave him my support as ungrudgingly. He appreciated it. Our relations were cordial and friendly. We campaigned together, and some adventures of an interesting character which befell us upon these trips, upon one especially which was not without danger though fraught with humor after the danger had passed us by, I recall as most pleasant memories of our friendship and association. I had unbounded admiration for the talents and character of Judge Moss, and I am proud of the honor, as I am conscious of the added responsibilities of the office because of his having occupied it, of being chosen to succeed him. His record and memory will be a guide and an inspiration to me in taking up the service of our country where he was forced by death to lay it down.

While there is much in the life of Judge Moss to admire, there is more in the manner in which he met death, because it strikes the chords in the hearts of men which respond to the touch of heroic deeds. It was in those critical, inexorable, relentless days which preceded his passing from among us, and at almost the very striking of his final hour that the indomitable courage and valor of the brave soldier who was his paternal grandfather asserted its hereditary dominancy. It was this greatest of all crises that come but once to us all which he met with a patience, a trust, and a courage which was sublime. No hero ever met a braver end, nor died more nobly. With so much to give up, to surrender, which makes life for men worth living, he met the final summons with a courage than which no mortal man has ever shown greater.

Hence, to that small circle around his recent heaven and home, who could know more of his manliness and worth than we do, we say: "Look up, if you can, through your tears; try to be as brave as he was, and try to remember—in the midst of a grief which his greatest wish for life would have been to help you bear—that he had no fear of death nor of anything beyond."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Cooper] is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker: In the death of Representative Hunter H. Moss, Jr., his wife has lost a devoted husband, his children a loving father, and the Nation and State of West Virginia a fearless, capable, and able Representative.

We loved him in West Virginia because he had the ability and courage to advocate and fight for those principles he believed to be just and right.

While believing in the principles of the Republican Party and ever willing to defend it in debate, he was not a narrow-minded partisan, and was ever willing to concede to his opponents honesty of purpose in thought and debate.

Although a Republican in principle, thought, and action, Congressman Moss was a man of independent conviction, progressive in thought, and with judicial temperament. He was always careful to advocate and vote for those principles which, in his opinion and judgment, would best promote the welfare and happiness of the people of his State and the Nation.

We differed with him sometimes, and in a conflict of opinion he no more doubted our sincerity of thought or purpose than we doubted his honesty of conviction.

Well do I remember the last time Representative Moss stood upon the floor of this House and in a strong, forcible, and able speech advocated the passage of the ship-purchase bill, although a majority of his Republican colleagues registered their votes against that measure. Representative Moss was firm in his conviction that the principle was correct, and while it pained him to differ with his Republican colleagues, he left the Hall feeling he had acted as his constituents would have had him act.

We love and honor in West Virginia the memory of HUNDER H. Moss, Jr., the more because he stood upon the floor of this House when the body was frail and weak, when life was hanging by a thread, and with determination and force expressed himself in favor of the passage of a measure which in his opinion would best promote the interests of the people of West Virginia.

Because a great majority of his party associates advocated certain principles of government only appealed to Judge Moss when, after a careful study of the principles in question, he was convinced of their worth and justice. Perhaps his judicial training caused him to weigh matters more carefully than he otherwise would have done, but justice and right seemed ever to be in his mind when deliberating and deciding a disputed question.

His whole heart and soul seemed wrapped up in his congressional duties, his one thought being to give to the Nation and to his State his best work upon public questions.

After his speech delivered in the House on the ship purchase bill, his last appearance in the House of Representatives, Judge Moss went to Atlantic City, and with his loved ones about him sought rest and health; but it was soon apparent his condition was growing daily more serious.

The Sunday before the end came I visited him at his hotel. He was too weak to see visitors, but being advised I was in the city he insisted that I be allowed to see him. I found him on his death bed, but still with the same determination and the brave light of hope in his eye, although it was evident to me his soul would soon take its flight to its Maker.

I suggested to him that I would be only too glad to look after his personal congressional correspondence for him and do what I could to take from his mind any pressing matter. He immediately informed me that he was giving his personal attention to his congressional correspondence and would continue to do so, as it was his desire to keep in touch with the people of his district so that when he returned to his official duties he would be familiar with all matters in his district. This showed the determination of the man, his strong character; and, had he not been afflicted with an incurable disease, mind would, perhaps, have triumphed over matter, and Hunter H. Moss, Jr., would have been with us to-day.

Representative Moss was open-hearted, courteous, easily approached, and always willing to go out of his way to accommodate a friend. During my short acquaintance with him I took advantage of our friendship and association to learn many lessons from him upon questions of public importance. Being a lawyer of ability and having had congressional experience I relied upon his judgment, which I was convinced was sound and reliable.

I shall never forget the wealth of information I acquired from Representative Moss; and when I return to West Virginia and take up my business affairs I shall recall to memory the honest, fearless, and determined young statesman from the mountains of West Virginia; and as time rolls on and my thoughts turn to the many pleasant acquaintances and associations formed in the Sixty-fourth Congress I shall, I know, wish it were within my power to turn back the calendar of time in order that I might again be given the privilege of being associated with my friend, HUNTER H. Moss, Jr., in the Sixty-fourth Congress.

West Virginians genuinely regret the untimely death of Representative Moss. They recognized in him one of the best examples of West Virginia's splendid, able, and patriotic young manhood. They remember the services he performed as prosecutor and as judge of the circuit court for the State of West Virginia, and later as their Representative in this great body. They predicted for him still greater service for his State and the Nation, all merited, because of his ability and loyalty to duty. His sudden death, many years before man's allotted time, was a shock to them. When we are meeting to-day to pay the last tribute to the memory of the departed one, we feel we are but voicing the sentiments of his constituents in West Virginia, and feel they, too, would consider it an honor and a privilege to meet here for the purpose of paying their respect to the memory of the brilliant student, jurist, and statesman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Sutherland] is recognized.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems but a few days since this House was assembled upon a similar occasion to pay a tribute of respect and affection to the memory of a member of the West Virginia delegation, our late honored colleague, William Gay Brown, of the second district of West Virginia. Twice within a year, in fact, within a period of a few months, has the last final summons to eternal rest in the arms of the Almighty been given to members of the delegation from our State, each time summoning a man in the flower of vigorous manhood, who was valiantly and faithfully doing his part as a man and as a public official. Our heads are again bowed in deep sorrow as we shall attempt in feeble words to express our estimate of the life and character of our late colleague, Judge Hunter Holmes Moss, and to express to those near and dear to him by family ties words of consolation in the fact that we share with them in part the burden of loss they have been and are yet enduring.

Prior to coming to Washington early in April, 1913, as a Representative from West Virginia in the Sixty-third Congress
I had not been intimately thrown with my late colleague and friend, Representative HUNTER HOLMES Moss, who entered Congress at the same time, although I had known him by reputation as a brilliant prosecuting attorney of one of the large and populous counties of the State, containing the city of Parkersburg, and as an honored judge of the judicial circuit of which that county—the county of Wood—was a part. His close attention to the duties of those two positions covering a period of 12 years from January 1, 1901, until January 1, 1913, and the reputation he had made in them easily gave him, without opposition, in 1912, the nomination for Congress in the fourth congressional district of West Virginia. His term in the Sixty-third Congress began March 4, 1913, and his active service in that body began on April 7, a little more than a month later. Our association from that time until he was called in such an untimely way to enter "that bourne from which no traveler returns" was of such a character that it gave me a close view was of such a character that it gave me a close view of his qualities, both as a man and as a public servant.

He entered upon his duties as a Representative from West Virginia with zest and became an active force upon the floor of this House and in all the other manifold duties of a Congressman's life, and at the same time took such a part as his duties would allow in the social activities of the National Capital.

I was constantly thrown in such close contact with him that I was enabled more and more to appreciate those qualities which, at such an early age, had brought him such uniform distinction.

While it is customary and somewhat expected that a new Member of this body shall serve a novitiate until he has become familiar with the methods and rules of procedure, yet the native force and ability of Judge Moss made him soon after becoming a Member of Congress an active factor in its deliberations, and his natural quickness of mind and grasp of public questions, his legal and judicial training, were destined to put him in the very first rank of the active membership of the House had he not been thus stricken about the middle of his second term while a Member of the present or Sixty-fourth Congress.

He was at all times conscientious to a degree in the discharge of every public duty devolving upon him. He strove conscientiously to represent in every particular the people of his district, and in a larger way to serve the people of his State and of the Nation. He was attentive to the work on the floor of the House, without neglecting the routine duties which consume so much of a Representative's time, but which duties, being of a less showy character, do not bring him so prominently into the public eye. He was always courteous, kind, and helpful to those about him, and in every way showed by his life and actions among us here that he possessed those sterling qualities of Christian gentlemanliness which are the flower of good breeding and the outcome of a good heart and a well-ordered intellect.

I happened to learn on the very day upon which he underwent an operation in Baltimore that the disease with which he was stricken was of a necessarily fatal character and that he could not possibly expect to live many months.

The shock which this intelligence caused me was one of the severest I have ever experienced. While I had known that my friend Judge Moss had not for a short time been in robust health, yet his youth and energy and his correct habits at all times seemed to entitle him to live to a ripe old age. When he finally returned from the hospital in Baltimore, and after awhile resumed his place on the floor of this House, the display of Christian fortitude and manliness was to me daily one of the most remarkable exhibitions I have ever seen. If at that time he realized that he was fatally stricken and must soon pass hence, he did not in any way signify to the world that this was the case. Later he stated to me and to other friends that he was going to make the best fight he could—that the doctors might be mistaken and that he might overcome his malady. I watched be mistaken and that he might overcome his malady. I watched im discharge, under these circumstances, with persistence and gard to party lines and without exception, pronounced similar regularity, the duties devolving upon him, and in my experience nothing more heroic, more courageous has ever come directly within my notice. He even persisted in attending to his duties when to do so must have been a severe drain upon his vitality and physical resources, and when, if he had saved himself, he might possibly have prolonged his life.

No hero upon a battle field, no gladiator in the arena, no knight of old ever fought a truer, nobler fight with an enemy than did Judge Hunter Holmes Moss fight here among us with the relentless foe that was facing and slowly conquering him.

He possessed to a marked degree the courage of his convictions, and one of his latest acts as a Member of this body was to leave his bed of pain and come over here to lead the fight in the Judiciary Committee, of which he was a member, to have reported out of that committee a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to the several States granting equal suffrage to women. This was characteristic of the man.

In his private life, in his relations as son and brother, as husband of a devoted and congenial wife, as father of an interesting group of children, as a neighbor and friend to those who knew him best and longest, and as a member of the community in which he had lived during his entire life, Judge Moss always rang true and stood for all that makes for clean living, lofty ideals, good companionship, for personal and civic virtue.

As testimonials to the estimation in which he was held in his home community of Parkersburg, I will read editorials that appeared in two of the papers there—one of them of the same and the other of opposite political faith:

[From the Parkersburg Journal of July 17, 1916.]

CONGRESSMAN MOSS.

The untimely death of Congressman Hunter H. Moss, of this city, who expired after an heroic struggle to recover from a disease with which he was stricken some months ago, removes from West Virginia one of its most promising young men. Young, ambitious, cultured, full of life to the finger tips, to the ordinary grief at the loss of any lovable character there is added the sorrow that a young man with apparently a career so full of promise should be cut down in his prime. For those who have known him through his boyhood, his college days, on the bench, and in Congress it is hard to understand the removal of a personality like his from the activities of life.

There are those who have asserted that the day of opportunity for young men had been engulfed in the maelstrom of combination, monopoly, and practical politics, and that only the favored few can hope to succeed, but the brief and brilliant career of Hunter H. Moss was a refutation of this theory. His passing is all the more pathetic because of his cheeriness to the end. He met death as he did every problem of his boyhood and youth—with a smile, a stout heart, and a spirit unafraid—and when the tired eyes glazed Saturday, and the attendants at his bedside filed out of the presence of the mystery of life, a light had failed. To his beloved wife and children, his devoted mother and sister, no sweeter consolation can come than the thought gathered from the following beautiful lines quoted by their own cherished dead in a memorial address to the Elks some years ago:

"There is no death! the stars go down

"There is no death! the stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore:
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

And ever near us, though unseen, The dear immortal spirits tread; For all the boundless universe Is life—there are no dead."

We who have known him best can temper our regret at his early taking off with gratitude to the Giver of every perfect gift that he lived amongst us even for so brief a space, and our farewell to him can be the fervent wish that the soul of this distinguished young West Virginian may forever be at peace.

[From the Parkersburg Sentinel of July 17, 1916.]

The news of the death of Representative Hunter Holmes Moss caused general sorrow throughout the State. In some respects the career of the Congressman from the fourth district was like that of John E. Kenna. Like Mr. Kenna he had high office at the gift of the people when young for such honors, and like Mr. Kenna he was cut down in the very prime of life, in his busiest hour.

Few men of Hunter Moss's years could point to so long a record of public service. He was elected prosecuting attorney at the age of 26, one of the youngest men in the State to hold that office, and four years later he was elected circuit judge, again a young man for that office, but fully competent by both training and experience. In 1912 and in 1914 he was elected to Congress after the most hard-fought and closest campaigns the district had ever known.

Judge Moss was born and reared in Parkersburg, his family was prominent in the upbuilding of the community, and he loved his home town. In local movements for civic betterment he took an active part and frequently, when partisan interest clashed with what he considered was best for the city or county, he cast partisan interest aside. As a lawyer he was a leader at the West Virginia bar, and as an orator his reputation spread over many States.

The home life of Judge Moss was ideal. He believed that salvation came through the saving grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and he never was too busy with temporal affairs to give time and attention to the needs of the Christian Church. Parkersburg loved and honored him as a distinguished son, and mourns because it has lost a good neighbor and worthy citizen.

enconiums upon the life and public service of our deceased friend and colleague.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an account of the proceedings of the Bar Association of Wood County, the home county of Judge Moss, and the proceedings of the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Parkersburg Sentinel, July 17, 1916.]

TRIBUTE OF RESUECT IS PAID BY BAR—MEMORIAL MEETING FOR JUDGE MOSS HELD BY WOOD'S LAWYERS—FITTING EULOGY IN RESOLUTIONS—ASSOCIATES IN PROFESSION TELL OF HIS STERLING QUALITIES.

QUALITIES.

A very largely attended meeting of the Wood County bar was held this morning to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of the late Judge Hunter H. Moss; Judge L. N. Tavenner was made chairman of the meeting and Abijah Hays secretary.

A committee composed of J. W. Vandervort, W. W. Van Winkle, Judge F. H. McGregor was appointed to draft resolutions of respect and submitted the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Your committee, appointed to formulate resolutions on the death of Hon. Hunter H. Moss, begs leave to report as follows:

"We assume the task impressed with the tender touch of friendship, whose bonds are broken. We know that words are futile to express the pain we feel, and in the passing of Hon. Hunter H. Moss to young American manhood is given an example of what may be achieved by a courageous soul even at high noon, before his advance has reached the horizon of its glory. Deeds accomplished here in earth can not be measured by the flight of years; and he, at the age of 42 years, has been called away, crowned with earthly honors and reward.

"Hunter H. Moss, Jr., died in Atlantic City, N. J., July 15, 1916. He was born in Parkersburg May 26, 1874. His father was Hunter Holmes Moss, his mother Harriett Wilson Blair. His father was the son of the late John W. Moss and was for many years engaged in banking in Parkersburg, for a time cashier of the Parkersburg National Bank, and at the time of his death vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of Parkersburg. His mother, surviving him, was the daughter of Jacob Beeson Blair, one of the first Congressmen from West Virginia, and prominent in the formation of the State of West Virginia, and prominent in the formation of the State of West Virginia.

AN ABLE LAWYER.

"Graduating from the West Virginia University in 1896, with the degree of LL. B., he quickly engaged in the practice of law, securing a large practice through his unusual ability and extensive acquaintance throughout the State. Recognized as an able practitioner and of analytical mind, he was elected prosecuting attorney in 1900. At the close of his term in 1904 he was elected circuit judge, in which position he developed an ability remarkable in so young a man, diligently discharging his duties, careful in judgment, and seldom reversed on appeals.

charging his duties, careful in judgment, and seldom reversed on appends.

"After leaving the bench he was elected to represent the fourth district of West Virginia in the Congress. At the time of his death he was in his fourth year of service. He was strong as an advocate in the law, a good debater, and unafraid to meet an issue, whether at the bar or in the political forum. He put his whole soul into every case or subject he had. In his decisions from the bench he seemed to grasp with a masterly mind the real justice of the cause and molded into his judgments and decrees equity in its real essence.

"April 30, 1902, at Parkersburg, he married Anna Baker Ambler, daughter of B. Mason Ambler and Nannie B. Ambler. They had three children, all living, Ambler Holmes, Hunter Holmes, and Ann Cary.

"He was a distinguished and public-spirited citizen, of exemplary and industrious habits, charitable and chivalric in his nature, wise with wonderful sagacity, of infinite tenacity of purpose, genial and approachable, ever the friend of good government, cultivating the loftiest ideals and governed by the highest principles, of the warmest heart, a devoted and loving husband, a benign and indulgent father, a lovel and unchangeable friend, guided in all his actions by a firm belief in the wisdom of Divine Providence; full of honors, cut off in the prime of life, he has been gathered to his fathers, a rare man whose memory will ever be fragrant with duties performed, flowers that strew his pathway of life, and whose death is a public calamity.

ABLE PROSECUTOR.

ABLE PROSECUTOR.

"Defending the people for four years, he was one of the ablest prosecutors Wood County ever had, holding ever the scales of Justice; for eight years he administered the law as judge of the circuit court, tempered with mercy and enriched with wisdom beyond his years. In the field of statesmanship, his second term in the Congress of the United States, he has fought for his country and the people with work and pen and voice, bold and strong for what he believed to be right.

United States, he has lought to the work and pen and voice, bold and strong for what he believed to be right.

"If with the impetuousness of youth he engaged in varied lines of business and did not meet with anticipated success, yet in no line of life or labor was his character smirched or his honor tarnished by doubtful deeds.

"He has been called home, away from mother, wife, children, and from us all, his friends; he fought true life's battle, he touched deep human hearts, he felt warm the flame that burns on the family hearth and fireside, he lived high toward life's ideals, and with it all, as father, friend, citizen, lawyer, judge, and statesman, his leader and teacher always was our Christ, who interceded on Calyary for us all.

"We tender to his family our sympathy in their sad bereavement, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be engrossed and sent by our sceretary to his wife, and that copies of the same be furnished the press of the city and State, and recommend that a copy of the same be spread upon the minutes of the courts of this county as the memorial of the bar of Wood County to his life and works, and our tribute to his virtues by those who knew him best.

"We further recommend that the bar attend his funeral in a body.

"J. W. VANDERVORT,

"W. W. VAN WINKLE,

"F. N. McGraegor,

REMARKS OF ASSOCIATES.

Before the adoption of the resolutions remarks were called for, eliciting a number of heartfelt tributes to the dead jurist. These were all characterized by deep feeling, as were the remarks made by Judge Tavenner in taking the chair. He said be felt like asking leave to remain standing, rather than take the vacant chair that so suggested the man who had once occupied it.

J. W. Vandervort spoke first, saying he had known Hunter H. Moss almost from infancy, and had seen him grow and advance not only in mind but in worthy ambition, and had seen him elected to positions of honer, but in every one of them his first care was to see the right embodied in all his acts.

Mr. Vandervort said, referring to the financial reverses experienced by Judge Moss's mind was that all of his property should go to his creditors, with nothing reserved for himself but an unsmirched honor. No one, said the speaker, could have felt his position more keenly and he had no doubt that the anxieties of this nature hastened the young statesman's death. He closed with a tribute to Judge Moss's as a man of sincere religious convictions, whose conscientiousness was one 4 his most prominent characteristics.

W. M. Strauss spoke feelingly of Judge Moss's student days, saying that he never knew a young man of more promise nor one in which that promise was more thoroughly fulfilled. Only one part of Judge Moss's career remained inexplicable to him and he had no doubt that this would have been explained had he lived and it would have been clear that his life was a consistent whole; and that his later years would have been crowned with even greater honors than his earlier ones.

Judge C. M. Showalter gave some interesting reminiscences of Judge Moss as prosecutor, when the speaker was associated with him as assistant prosecutor and also as partner in civil practice. He said Judge Moss's most distinguishing attribute was his extreme fairness and sense of justice. He took no advantage and if he felt that a prisener was innocent he did not hesitate to say so.

W. E. White said he felt very keenly the death of Judge Moss, as they were friends of long standing and had been closely associated in politics. Attorney White's remarks were also largely reminiscential and were full of interest. Several incidents were related showing Judge Moss's sense of fair dealing.

Judge T. A. Brown delivered the next tribute to the dead jurist, saying, among other things: "I knew him well and intimately. In all positions he stood the crucial test of a man. As a representative of the people of his district he was able and conscientious. As judge he was honest, fearless, and clean. As a friend he was ever loyal and true, Words might be multiplied, but a higher tribute than this I can pay to no mortal man."

H. P. Camden told of his long friendship with Judge Moss, which no mortal man."

H. P. Camden told of his long friendship with Judge Moss, which nothing had altered, and paid a high tribute to him as a judge. He said his record on the bench was equal to that of any ever made in this county and told how business had been facilitated by the systematic methods introduced by Judge Moss. Referring to his adverses, the speaker said he fully believed that Judge Moss was led into them by taking the advice of men in prominent positions on whom he had a right to rely, and he told how Judge Moss had declared to him his firm purpose to pay all that he owed if his life was spared long enough for him to do so. This seemed his greatest ambition during the last years of his life. of his life.

It was decided that the bar should attend the funeral in a body and announced that all should meet at the courthouse at 4.15 p. m. to day for that purpose. Arrangements were made for a suitable floral tribute from the bar.

I also offer as a part of my remarks the resolutions adopted by the West Virginia Society in the District of Columbia, as follows:

West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C.

At a meeting of the West Virginia Society in the District of Columbia, held September 1, 1916, the following action was taken:

"Whereas, our friend and fellow member, Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., departed this life July 15, 1916.

"Resolved, That we, his fellow West Virginians, who have shared his friendship, hereby manifest the respect due his memory. We recognized in him a shining example of the best manhood of our native State and the manifold opportunities it offers to young men of a high order of talent and character to obtain the suitable rewards they merit. As university student, lawyer, public prosecutor, circuit court judge, and Representative in Congress, Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., stood for justice, righteousness, and open-handed dealing between man and man. He was always an eloquent and forceful advocate of what was best and noblest in American citizenship. His life was an open book and his public career the brilliance which Illumined its pages. We who knew him but to respect and love him, commend his life as a worthy example for the youth of our beloved West Virginia to emulate.

"Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his family in their great loss, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to them."

HENRY S. BAKER,

President.

WM. T. George,

Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] is recognized.

Mr. Neely. Mr. Speaker, twice within the space of one short year insatiate and all-devouring death has preyed upon the West Virginia delegation in the Congress of the United States. Again "the silver cord has been loosed, the golden bowl broken, the pitcher broken at the fountain, and the wheel broken at the cistern." Again we are called upon to mourn the loss of one of West Virginia's illustrious sons. With bowed heads and heavy hearts we have come to this forum to commemorate the memory of the Hon. Hunter Moss, late an active, able, and aggressive Member of this House. To-day we lovable, and aggressive Member of this House. ingly hold this sad and solemn service as a token of regard for our departed friend. We extol his virtues and eulogize the characteristics that made his life an asset to the Nation and his death a loss to the Republic.

HUNTER Moss was a self-made, a self-respecting, and a self-controlling man—rich in intellect, great in heart, and grand in soul. He was successively elected prosecuting attorney of Wood County, judge of the fourth judicial circuit of West Virginia. and a Member of Congress before he had reached the age of 39. At 40 the fame he had achieved and the honors he had won proclaimed him a man of genius and one of fortune's favorite sons.

As a public official he knew no dictator but his conscience, no guide but his judgment, and no purpose but to serve his country.

He walked the rugged road of right, and never for a moment wandered from the way to loiter in alluring shade, or drink the bacchanalian draught, or pluck the idle flowers that fringe the banks wherein temptation's wooing tide doth ever surge and flow.

Where duty led he followed, heedless of results, regardless of misfortunes, and thoughtless of rewards. He was a model citizen, a devoted husband, a loving father, and a faithful friend; a patriot who loved principle more than party, a statesman who worshiped at the shrine of truth, an official who burned incense on the altar of universal good. For his patriotism we honored him, for his statesmanship we admired him, for his faithful services to his country we loved him; and since we loved, admired, and honored him in life, we revere him in death, cherish his memory, and strew the brightest of flowers upon his grave. We wrap the spotless record of his achievements in the golden foil of affection, entwine it with the silver threads of appreciation, and store it in the spacious vault of the heart to be treasured there until we, too, return to silent dust. Midway between the daylight and the dark, midway between the dews of May and December's cold and surly blasts, while his sun was at the zenith, his life at the fullest, and his hopes at the highest, the marble-hearted messenger of death, that knows no mercy and feels no pity, summoned HUNTER Moss to join the countless myriads of the dead. But in the grand total of eternal things it matters little when or where one dies. The longest life is but an infinitesimal point in eternity's endless line. By the liberal scale of infinity's measurements it is but a short step from the first of earth's cradles to the last of her graves

For reasons that we do not comprehend, for motives that we do not understand, it may be just as well for the bursting bud to be killed by an early frost as to live to become a perfect flower and scent the air with its sweet perfume. It may be just as well for man to die in the summer time of life as to live until the snows of winter frost the hair and chill the thought and freeze the heart. At least, we hope that this is true. Without a doubt, a protest, or a fear Hunter Moss, "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust approached his grave like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

and lies down to pleasant dreams."

Dream on, oh sainted dead, through seedtime and harvest; through sunshine and shadow; through winter's storm and summer's calm; dream on until the angelic harbingers of the resurrection shall arouse thee from thy slumber and usher thee through the pearly gates of paradise into the imperishable Joys of thy Lord.

Husband, father, friend:
"Farewell. * * *
All our hearts are buried with you,
All our thoughts go onward with you.
Come not back again to labor,
Come not back again to suffer,
Where the famine and the fever
Wear the heart and waste the body.
Soon our task will be completed,
Soon your footsteps we shall follow,
To the Islands of the Blessed,
To the Land of the Hereafter."

From this memorial exercise the living should learn anew a lesson that is as old as sacred history. The lesson is this: "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting, for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart." A sanctuary of sorrow is a crucible in which to purify the soul. May our coming to this service not have been in vain. May the premature death of Hunter Moss be a constant reminder to us of the serious meaning of that irrevocable decree: "Man is born to die." While we are industriously struggling for fortune and sedulously striving for fame, and while we are eagerly endeavoring to "lay up for ourselves" diversified "treasures upon earth," let us remember that death comes nearer to everyone with every fleeting breath; that it comes indifferently, as a thief in the dead of night or as a royal guest at the blaze of noon." Let us bear this well in mind, not that our days may be consumed with impotent grief or our lives shrouded with dispiriting gloom, but rather that we may be impelled to make timely preparation for the coming of the inevitable hour in which every man must surrender his own soul.

"And when the Angel of Shadow Rests his feet on wave and shore,
And our eyes grow dim with watching,
And our hearts faint at the oar,
Happy is he who heareth
The signal of his release,
In the belis of the Holy City
The chimes, of eternal peace."

With an abiding faith that everything in the universe was designed by an unerring architect for some ultimate good, with an abiding faith that all who earnestly and honestly strive shall eventually wear perfection's crown, let us go forth, with hope in our hearts and courage in our breasts, to fight the good fight, to finish our course, and unqualifiedly to keep the faith.

"And when earth's last picture is painted And the tubes are twisted and dried; And the oldest colors have faded, And the youngest crities have died, We shall rest, and faith we shall need it. Lie down for an zon or two, "Till the Master of all good painters Shall set us to work anew. And those who were good shall be happy, They shall sit in a golden chair; They shall sit in a golden chair; They shall splash at a ten-league canvass With brushes of camel's hair; They shall have real saints to draw from, Magdalene, Peter, and Paul, They shall paint for an age at a sitting And never get tired at all; And only the Master shall blame, And no one shall work for money, And no one shall work for fame, But each for the joy of the doing, And each in his separate star, Shall paint the thing as he sees it, For the God of things as they are."

The SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Nelson] is recognized.

consin [Mr. Nelson] is recognized.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, with genuine regard for the memory of Hunter Holmes Moss, Jr., and sincere sorrow because of the untimely taking away of our associate and friend, I wish to place upon the permanent records of the House a few words of loving personal tribute to his life and character.

His legislative career was not long, little more than three years, and yet such was the powerful impress of his personality that his name and fame will endure here longer than that of most men who have been privileged to sit in this Hall among the leaders of the Nation.

During the past two sessions of Congress it was my good fortune to come into close contact with him, within the circle of good-fellowship that prevails in the Committee on the Judiciary. Here I learned to know him well and to admire greatly his fine qualities of mind and heart. Here I saw him in action, Seeking to promote the common good, he stood for what was right; despising unfair tactics, trickery, and deceit, he was openminded, considerate, and sincere; hating every show of arbitrary power, he enthusiastically championed the rights of all, the interests of a common humanity.

the interests of a common humanity.

Now that he has left us, and we lament our loss, it is with satisfaction we know that, though his thread of life was cut off suddenly in the prime of his matured manhood, yet he had achieved a very successful career.

A study of his life will prove an inspiration to any young

A study of his life will prove an inspiration to any young man who wishes to win his way to high and honorable distinction.

Mr. Moss was successful, because his life was adjusted to his environment; it was in accord with the eternal truth of things. He early filled his mind with the learning and drilled it with the discipline of school and college. He acquired a mastery of the principles and the practice of his profession. He builded for himself a home, happy in the love of wife and children. He won by faithful service the confidence, esteem, and affection of his fellow citizens; and his whole life bore silent witness to a harmonious adjustment with Him whose breath is the spark divine in every soul.

The life of Judge Moss was not only conditioned upon a harmonious adjustment with the realities of being, it was also progressively directed toward higher ideals. He had the onward, forward, and upward outlook upon life, the vision of higher things. In a brief and very modest semiautobiographical sketch we read these few self-revealing words: "He has always been progressive in his ideas and tendencies." His speeches and votes, while a Member of Congress, eloquently illustrate the largeness of his ideas, the loftiness of his vision. Those of us who have rebelled in the past against the opposite tendency on the part of the more conservative to hold back or stand still found in Judge Moss a sympathetic associate. In the largest and highest sense he believed in the widest and the noblest extension of the principle of democracy.

Not only were his ideas and tendencies progressive, but he put his ideas and tendencies into deeds. He achieved results. He grew. He developed. He progressed steadily from one level of achievement to some still higher plane of attainment. Thus, because he was "progressive in his ideas and tendencies," he made his way from the common school to the university; he passed soon from the position of practicing lawyer to the office of district attorney, then circuit judge, and, finally, national lawmaker. He was content to remain but one short term on a minor committee of the House and then won for himself a place upon one of the highest committees of Congress, and here he soon won our admiration, esteem, and affection, and we accorded to him distinct prominence.

But Judge Moss was not only a progressive, he was an aggressive personality. His character was cast after the heroic type. He was a fighter. Convinced of the rectitude of his purposes, the sincerity of his convictions, and the unselfishness of his motives, he was without fear, and therefore he fought bravely for what he thought was right. He was guided, however, not only by an enlightened conscience, but also by a clear head. As day after day throughout the year we sat around the table of the committee discussing either the general principles or the details of bills before us, or it may be some amendment to the Constitution itself, Judge Moss often revealed the fact that he was in possession of an intellect keen as any blade of Damascus.

But the elements, conscience and intellect, however important these are, do not constitute in themselves alone that nobility we speak of in life as the heroic. The essence of genuine hero-ism is the spirit of self-sacrifice. It is he who courageously faces death to save his fellowmen, or risks life to vindicate a principle, a truth, or a great cause, the great commanders decorate upon the fields of battle, or the common people crown with the laurel wreaths of favor and applause. A more heroic public act than that performed by our friend I have never witnessed through a decade of service in the House. It made a powerful impression upon us, whether we agreed or disagreed with his views on the orbits of some land. views on the subject of equal suffrage. As to the emancipation of the womanhood of America, Judge Moss had definite and strong convictions. The famous Susan B. Anthony amendment was pending before our committee. It had strong friends but also powerful opponents, both sides equally sincere in their convictions. The advocates of the equal suffrage amendment were urged to have it reported to the House at the earliest possible moment. The committee itself was so equally divided that one vote either way would be decisive. At this time Mr. Moss was stricken with the disease that finally proved fatal. For months he lay hovering between life and death. Skillful physicians could do no more than to prolong his life for months, or weeks, It fell to me somehow, as a friend of the suffrage cause, to move that the amendment be reported out of the committee whenever I was convinced that its friends were in the majority. On three different days, weeks apart, Mr. Moss responded to the call, most heroically drawing upon the last resources of his weakened physical strength to attend upon the meetings of the committee. We knew, and, I believe, he knew, that his days were few, yet he fought as bravely for a favorable report as if he were to enjoy the ultimate triumph of the suffrage cause in the years to come.

Having received the summons from that "undiscovered country" whence no traveler returns, Judge Moss had not lost interest in the struggles and the aspirations of his fellow beings. Such was the spirit of self-sacrifice, the unselfish heroism of his conduct that it made an indescribable impression upon us all, and the event was chronicled not only in the publications of the suffrage associations with grateful appreciation, but was also reported with admiration and praise in the press of the country.

Seeking as I now do, to interpret the life of my friend, I see him, I hear him, in these words of one to me unknown:

I live for those who love me,
And those who know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me
And awaits my spirit, too;
For the wrongs that need resistance,
For the cause that needs assistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

The life of our friend stands before us—a broken column. We believe that it is not the end—only a change. With Wordsworth we are constrained to believe, as we behold this mystery of mysteries—life and its passing:

One adequate support
For the calamities of mortal life
Exists—one only—an assured belief
That the procession of our fate, howe'r,
Sad or disturbed, is ordered by a Being
Of infinite benevolence and power
Whose everlasting purposes embrace
All accidents, converting them to good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. Dyer] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I can not with the feeble words at my command add anything to what has been so beautifully and sincerely uttered touching the life, character, and public services of our former colleague, HUNTER HOLMES MOSS, Jr., by his colleagues from his own beloved State, West Virginia, as well as of those from other States of our great Union.

Knowing him and feeling the great loss that we and the country have sustained in his death, I want permission to at least echo all that has been so deservedly and fittingly said in praise of him. No new words are needed from me or anyone to evidence the deserved, loving, esteem in which he was held by all who were privileged to know him. That which is said here to-day may be soon forgotten, but his collegues, his loved ones, and his friends will remember him with loving admiration to the end.

Ut silvae foliis pronos mutantur in annos, Prima cadunt; ita verborum vetus interit aetas. Et invenum ritu florent modo nata vigentque. Debemur morti nos nostraque.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Nelson] has referred more directly to the life of Mr. Moss as a legislator. It was my honor and privilege as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary also to serve on that committee with him and to have seen at first hand how strongly he felt regarding his duty to the whole people. I recall well how he came to the meetings of the committee when important matters were up for consideration, and while at the very time he was hardly able to get out of his bed. He must have known then that he was only for a few weeks for this world. Understanding this, he was to the last faithful, true, and obedient to his conscience and the wishes of the people who sent him to Congress. He was a worthy representative of a great people, and it is indeed a great sorrow to us all that he should have been taken away at so early an age, and at a time when his services were so greatly appreciated and so greatly needed.

One of the greatest privileges that comes to us as Members of the House of Representatives is the opportunity to meet and associate with men of such sterling worth and character.

Great as is the loss to us, how much greater must it be to those who have known him and been associated with him all his life! To his family, his friends, and the people of the district that he represented I offer my most sincere sympathy. Yet there is consolation to them in the fact that though he was cut down at an early age, yet he had been of inestimable service to his country. He had helped and had done more than his part already in the work of good government. It is from the lives and character of such men that we can point to our great and free Government and to the great good that it has done to the peoples of America and of the world, and to what it shall, will, and must do in the future.

We loved and admired him in life. We shall benefit in practicing and teaching the principles for which he fought. He helped to make the country great. He loved his fellow men and he loved his country. He wanted everyone to have an equal, fair, and just opportunity in life. He knew the history of America and of the trials and vicissitudes that had beset her upon many occasions, and if he were here to-day he would join in the patriotic sentiment of Americans generally in saying:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee!

Mr. NEELY assumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Littlepage] is recognized.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I should feed remiss in the discharge of my public duty if I neglected to add my testimony as a Member of this body from the State of West Virginia to the high character, worth, and nobility of purpose of one of our distinguished Members who has died, whose spirit has taken its flight across the mystic river of time to return no more. I have myself just gotten out of a hospital, and what I shall say will be extemporaneous.

For a young man to start in life with all of its vicissitudes, all its snares and pitfalls, and so conduct himself in the community where he was born and reared as to command the unbounded confidence and respect of the citizens of that community to the extent that they pick him up and elevate him to positions of trust and responsibility, as was the case with our departed brother, Mr. Moss, must add to our faith in the value of having lived. His is an example that is worthy of the emulation of the young men of the land and of public men throughout the Nation and the world. That he did well, that he was kind and noble, strong and agressive is testified to by the people of his State. That he was above all things honest and reliable must be a comfort to his people as it is a reward to his acquaintances. For him to have struggled along the highway of life, you might say, unaided by the power of wealth or political influence, and to have attained that high position of respectability and of trust is a reward to us who cherish his memory and must be a comfort to his

I sincerely appreciate as a citizen of the Commonwealth of West Virginia the splendid tributes which have been paid to the memory of HUNTER Moss, who has traveled all the way from the position of prosecuting attorney, circuit judge, and finally rose in life to the second position below the Presidency of the United States-that of membership in the American Congress, which must be a comfort to those who love and revere his memory.

I should feel remiss also if I did not take this occasion to say a word relative to the immediate members of his family, who, when they saw his life ebbing away, were so kind, so thoughtful, so noble, and so true in their devotion to him who has gone, but whose memory will ever be worthy of their thought and affection.

He stood high in this House among both Democrats and Republicans. He was an independent man and an independent thinker. I saw him arise from his seat on the other side of the aisle when his own party was practically unanimous in its vote against the ship purchasing bill. I head his utterances; and while he was faithful to his political organization, and while he loved his own reaches. loved it well, he loved his own people and his State more. His State needed the benefit to be derived from a bill of that character. It is a coal-producing State, and it needs all the ships that can be obtained to carry its products to other climes. I want to say in this presence that he stood up here in this House and voted and spoke for his State, for its business men, and its people. He was true to them as he was honest here.

The people of his State have suffered a heavy loss, this Nation one of its best friends, this House one of its most beloved Members.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. LITTLEPAGE]. In accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the House stands adjourned.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1917, at 12 o'clock, noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in supplication and prayer, with praise and thanksgiving, because whatever merit there is in us has come from Thee, for in Thee we live and move and have our being. Our fathers have built for us a great Nation under our being. Our fathers have built for us a great Nation under the guidance of God, and we seek to perpetuate its glorious ministry to the world by the grace of God. We desire to fulfill ourselves in Thee by finding our highest place in our citizenship and in the world under the guidance and by the grace of God, that we may inherit the blessings of God here and life eternal in the world to come. Guide us this day in the discharge of our duties. We pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read a letter received by me-and I suppose other Senators have received a similar letter-from the League to Enforce Peace. I ask that after it has been read the proposals of the League to Enforce Peace may be printed. I send that to the desk also.

I do this because there is so much discussion as to what the league recommends and what its organization advocates that I think it is of some importance it should be recorded permanently.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. Frank B. Brandegee, 1521 K Street, Washington, D. C.

My Dean Sir: The program of the League to Enforce Peace has been brought into such international prominence by the President's note of December 18 to the belligerent powers, by the reply of the entente nations thereto under date of January 10, and by various official statements of the German chancellor that we think it probable you may wish to have at hand authoritative information regarding it.

With this letter you will find a brief resume of what the league does and does not stand for, together with its printed proposals. Under separate cover we are sending a book entitled "Enforced Peace," and within a few days a bound volume entitled "Program and Policies" will follow. We ask you to accept these with the compliments of our executive committee and officers.

JANUARY 15, 1917.

Very truly, yours, WM. H. Short, Secretary.

(The League to Enforce Peace does not seek to end the present war; it proposes the formation of a league of nations after its close to maintain peace by their united economic and military power.)

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the Secretary read the proposals, which are not lengthy at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator if he is taking the position that the President's address specifically indorses this organization and its program?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I did not take any position at all, and I do not do this at all with reference to the address the President made to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not sure that I was correct, but I thought the letter which the Senator asked to have read indicated an assumption that the President has specifically indorsed that program and that organization.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The Senator, I am quite sure, did not catch the phrases of the letter correctly. What it stated was that in view of the President's note to the foreign powers of December 18, and in view of the answers of those powers, they thought it was important that it should be known exactly what the League to Enforce Peace stood for. There is no reference at all to the President's address which was made a week or so

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHAT THE LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE STANDS FOR.

THE LEAGUE

THE LEAGUE

Proposes the submission of all disputes between nations to public hearing before declaration of war.

Proposes the setting up of international tribunals:

A judicial court, to hear questions which can be decided in accordance with the rules of law and equity.

A council of conciliation, to hear all other questions, whether political in nature or growing out of the necessities of trade, expansions of population, or other causes.

Proposes a series of conferences between the nations at regular intervals.

Proposes that the United States shall become a member of a league of nations pledged to compose their differences by use of these methods and agencies. THE LEAGUE

Does not propose enforcement of the award of either court or council, but instead dependence on delay, public discussion, and the justice of the award to insure its acceptance.

Does not propose a guaranty of the status quo, but instead provision for a peaceful way to change unjust conditions, however arising.

Does not propose or prohibit interference with insurrections, revolutions, or conditions of domestic violence,

Does not propose organization of one group of nations for protection against a second group, i. e., "an entangling alliance."

MAKING THE PLAN EFFECTIVE.

If one member nation should threaten war against another before submission of its quarrel to a hearing as provided, the plan requires all the others to join in diplomatic and economic pressure to force it to desist.

desist.

If, after their joint protest, such nation should actually proceed to war, the other nations, with their joint military forces, would come to the defense of the one attacked. This is the only cause for which the federated nations would agree to employ their joint forces.

It is expected that this program would lead to a reduction of armaments.

THE PROGRAM SUMMARIZED.

It embodies the principles of existing arbitration treaties, under which the United States has agreed, with more than 30 nations, to submit all questions, even including those affecting the Monroe doctrine, for investigation and report by international commissions.

It provides for holding, from time to time, of international conferences similar to those that took place at The Hague in 1899 and 1907, for agreeing upon rules of international law to govern in the decisions of the international tribunal.

It adds an agreement to enforce the pledge to submit all questions to public hearing and to await the award of the court or the council of conciliation before appealing to arms. This feature constitutes the distinctive mark of the program.

It is not a stop-the-war effort, but advocates the establishment of a league of nations by treaties ratified at the close of the present war.

PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS.

The following platform was adopted at the organization meeting held in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, June 17, 1915:

We believe it to be desirable for the United States to join a league of nations binding the signatories to the following:

First, All justiciable questions arising between the signatory powers, not settled by negotiation, shall, subject to the limitations of treaties, be submitted to a judicial tribunal for hearing and judgment, both upon the merits and upon any issue as to its jurisdiction of the question.

Second. All other questions arising between the signatories and not settled by negotiation, shall be submitted to a council of conciliation for hearing, consideration, and recommendation.

Third. The signatory powers shall jointly use forthwith both their economic and military forces against any one of their number that goes to war, or commits acts of hostility, against another of the signatories before any question arising shall be submitted as provided in the foregoing. (The following interpretation of article 3 has been authorized by the executive committee: "The signatory powers shall jointly employ diplomatic and economic pressure against any one of their number that threatens war against a fellow signatory without having first submitted its dispute for international inquiry, conciliation, arbitration, or judicial hearing, and awaited a conclusion, or without having in good faith offered so to submit it. They shall follow this forthwith by the joint use of their military forces against that nation if it actually goes to war or commits acts of hostility, against another of the signatories before any question arising shall be dealt with as provided in the foregoing.")

Fourth. Conferences between the signatory powers shall be held from time to time to formulate and codify rules of international law, which, unless some signatory shall signify its dissent within a stated period, shall thereafter govern in the decisions of the judicial tribunal mentioned in article 1.

WM. H. TAFT, President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: Mr. President, I have just received a telegram, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I should like to have it go in the RECORD at the point where I inserted the principles of the League to Enforce Peace, as it is from the Connecticut branch of that league.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

WATERTOWN, CONN., January 28, 1917.

Hon. FRANK BRANDEGEE United States Senate, Washington, D. C .:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the officers of the Connecticut branch of the League to Enforce Peace, earnestly protest against any action at present by the Senate upon the President's peace message which shall commit the United States to a stand against the eventual participation by our Government in a league to enforce peace. The question is too momentous for action by the Senate till the opportunity has been given for wider popular discussion. The league has always emphatically declared that it does not propose any action in connection with the present war or the treaty that shall end it. Consequently there is ample time for thorough discussion and no valid reason for an attempt to commit this Government till such discussion has been held in a matter of such vast possibilities. Haste and partisanship are alike deplorable.

Wm. A. Shankin, Middletown, president; Chauncey S. Brewster, Hartford, Charles F. Brooker, Ansonia, Marcus H. Holcomb, Southington, Irving Fisher, New Haven, Frank B. Weeks, Middletown, Theodore S. Woolsey, New Haven, vice presidents; Arthur R. Kimball, Waterbury, chairman of the executive committee; Wilson H. Lee, New Haven, treasurer; Horace D. Taft, Waterbown, secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. President, I notice that the

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I notice that the principles enunciated in that communication seek for support in the treaties of arbitration which have been made between this Government and a number of foreign States by the present administration; but, as I recall the treaties to which these articles refer, there are no cases where the United States agrees to submit to arbitration questions of vital interest or national honor. If I am correct, as I think I am—and I dare say the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] will agree with me then so much of this code of rules as seeks support from that commitment of our Government is an error.

Take, for instance, the purchase of the Danish West India Islands, now about to be consummated. No Senator would for a moment contend that the attempt to purchase those islands by any foreign State would be looked upon with favor or would be a proper subject of arbitration. Arbitration would at best merely go to the question of the power of Denmark to sell the islands, while the right of any other country to buy them in this hemisphere would be instantly offensive and in immediate contact with the principles of the American Government which have for generations been recognized throughout the world as distinctly applying to our national policy.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not feel like allowing this code of rules or propaganda of the League of Peace, which is read here for the information of Senators, to go unchallenged in that respect. Such a contention can find no possible basis in any commitment of this Government thus far made.

Senators will recall the very animated controversy in this Chamber over the proposed peace treaty with Great Britain submitted by President Taft, which the Senate rejected, and appropriately rejected, because it invaded the constitutional function of the Senate and attempted to farm out the treatymaking power to commissions and international courts not in consonance with the historic policy of this Government.

Mr. President, no power should ever be conferred on any tribunal which would commit this Government to the submission of questions, nonjusticiable in character and relating to our national honor, to any tribunal outside of the Executive and the Senate of the United States upon whom was cast the treaty-making power by the fathers of the Republic.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in relation to the remarks made by the Senator from Michigan I desire to repeat the two paragraphs of the proposal of the League to Enforce Peace, to which he refers. The first is:

The program summarized: It embodies the principles of existing arbitration treaties under which the United States has agreed with more than 30 nations to submit all questions, even including those affecting the Monroe doctrine, for investigation and report by international commissions.

The next paragraph is the first proposal, and is as follows:

First. All justiciable questions arising between the signatory powers, not settled by negotiation, shall, subject to the limitations of treaties, be submitted to a judicial tribunal for hearing and judgment, both upon the merits and upon any issue as to its jurisdiction of the question.

Mr. President, I did not vote for the 30 treaties known as the Bryan treaties, and I could not state positively at present whether the Senator from Michigan is correct or not in his statement, but my impression was that under those treaties we certainly bound ourselves to wait at least a year before there shall be any declaration of war by us on any country with whom we had made a treaty, and my impression was that it included all questions, vital questions, and questions, too, that Mr. LODGE. In some cases.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I desire to say that I agree with him, that controverses which may arise under those treaties were to be put in cold storage for a year, but questions of vital interest and of national honor have been preserved for the Senate, and ought to be preserved for our sole settlement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], I think some Senator should call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this discussion, which has been going on in regard to treaties and arbitration and our dealings with foreign nations, ought to be immediately stopped. This discussion should take place behind closed doors. We ought not under any circumstances to violate the rules of the Senate by discussing these matters in open session.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Regular order, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order made by the Senator from Florida is sustained.

INDORSEMENT OF PRESIDENT WILSON'S PEACE POLICIES.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a communication from the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of South Carolina,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none.

The Secretary read the communication, as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a resolution unanimously adopted by the Arizona Bar Association at its annual meeting at Phoenix, Ariz., January 8, 1917, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the

RECORD, as follows:

Record, as follows:

Resolution unanimously adopted by the Arizona Bar Association at its annual meeting held in Phoenix, Ariz., January 8, 1917.

Whereas since the organization of the United States district court for the district of Arizona, the volume of business of said court has so greatly increased that it has become impossible for one judge to hear and properly consider and determine the large number of litigated cases now being brought before the court, within a reasonable time, by reason of which litigants are necessarily greatly delayed in the determination of their rights, to their great inconvenience and financial loss; and

Whereas under existing law the judge of said court is required to hold two terms of said court each year in each of four counties in the State, which requirement largely increases and delays the work of the court; and

Whereas this association believes that the business before said court warrants and requires for its dispatch with reasonable speed the services of an additional judge for said district or a division thereof and the organization of an additional court upon such division: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Bar Association in regular annual meeting

Resolved by the Arizona Bar Association in regular annual meeting assembled, That the Congress of the United States be requested to consider the situation above mentioned, and to remedy the evils and difficulties arising therefrom, by the division of said district and the organization of an additional court therein, or by the appointment of an additional judge of said court as now organized.

That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each of the Senators and the Member of Congress from this State.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a position of supplying states of Leo.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lee County, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation to found the Government of the United States on Christianity, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STERLING. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of South Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CERTIFICATE.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

United States of America, State of South Dakota:

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed bill, to-wit. senate joint resolution No. 6, was duly passed by the 1917 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, January 25, 1917.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD,

FRANK M. ROOD, Secretary of State.

A joint resolution and memorial requesting the Congress of the United States to designate Fort Meade, S. Dak., as a military training camp.

camp.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring):

Whereas there is about to be created by the Government several military training camps in the territory west of Chicago, each such training camp to be located at an established military post well equipped with natural facilities, buildings, maneuver grounds, climate, health, and similar attributes, as well as to be accessible by rail; and health, and similar attributes, as well as to be accessible by rail; and Whereas Fort Meade, near Sturgis, S. Dak., combines all of these essentials on a superlative scale and is recognized as one of the best equipped posts in the West, with over $2,000,000 worth of permanent buildings and improvements already placed there by the Government; and

Whereas the hospital records of Fort Meade, as given by the report of the Surgeon General of the United States Army, show that the pure malaria-free, bracing climate renders Fort Mead the healthlest post garrisoned in America; and
Whereas Fort Meade is reached by three great railways, Chicago & North Western, at Sturgis; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, connecting at Rapid City; and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, connecting at Deadwood; and
Whereas Fort Meade has its own gravity water system, supplying an abundance of the purest mountain-spring water; and

Whereas the military reservation of 7,680 acres adjoining the Black Hills Forest Reserve of 1,800 square miles, for the most part uninhabited, furnishes for the use of the garrison and all other troops which may from time to time be there assembled for drill and maneuvers, the level and rolling prairie, open and wooded streams of water, bluffs and brakes, bare hills and timbered mountains, and all varieties of country as to topography which are likely to be encountered in warfare, a combination of prime requisites not readily found: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we favor the designation of and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States and the War Department to designate Fort Meade, S. Dak., as one of the Federal training camps, and that we earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to compass this end.

Committee on Claims.

DRAWING OF FEDERAL GRAND JURIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 20209) to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read, so that we may understand just what it proposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can tell the Senator what the bill pro-It provides for the appointment of a deputy clerk of the Federal court to aid in the drawing of grand juries. The law at present requires the clerk and the commissioner appointed by the court to draw the grand jury. In some parts of the country the distances separating the courts are great, being in one case 400 miles. The clerk of the court can not get there, and when that is the case there ought to be a deputy clerk to assist the commissioner in drawing the grand jury. In a recent case there was a motion sustained to quash an indictment because the grand jury was not drawn by the clerk of the court. The statute was construed strictly, and as I have stated the indictment was quashed. This proposes to allow a deputy clerk to aid the commissioner in the drawing of the grand jury. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does it provide for a deputy clerk to do that everywhere?

Mr. OVERMAN. It gives the deputy clerk the authority to help the commissioner in drawing the grand jury.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina what court quashed the indictment to which he referred?

Mr. OVERMAN. A circuit court of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For what circuit?
Mr. OVERMAN. The circuit embracing the State of Texas; I have forgotten which circuit that is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the fifth circuit.
Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the fifth circuit.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me to be a most remarkable holding.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does seem to be a remarkable decision; but I have the decision here, if the Senator desires to see it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The ordinary rule is that when an officer is authorized to do a thing, he can do it by deputy.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I thought and what everybody else thought.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That has been, so far as I know, the universal holding; that is the purpose of a deputy-to act in the absence of his principal.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the case to which I referred the criminal who was indicted got off for the reason that the court construed the statute strictly. That is the reason of the emergency for this legislation. They have thousands of cases down there in which they have to have a grand jury, and sometimes the clerk can not get to the court; and, as I have stated, in some cases they have to go from 500 to 600 miles to draw grand juries, and there is no way in which to pay the expense. This bill proposes to allow the deputy clerk to aid the commissioner in drawing the grand jury.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand that the theory of the matter is that the clerk acting in this capacity does not act in his official capacity as clerk, but as a member of a commission which is authorized to draw the jury, and that, accordingly, his place can not be taken by his deputy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, so as to read as follows:

1911, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 276. All such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than 300 persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in the section last preceding, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court, or a duly qualified deputy clerk, and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, or by the judge senior in commission in districts having more than one judge, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, and a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk, or a duly qualified deputy clerk then acting, may belong, the clerk, or a duly qualified deputy clerk, and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations until the whole number required shall be placed therein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 7924) authorizing the county of Beltrami, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said county, and I submit a report (No. 986) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the

The amendments were, in line 6, after the words "Mississippi River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation"; in line 7, after the word "forty-six," to insert "north"; in the same line, after the word "thirty," to insert "west, fifth principal meridian"; and in the same line, after the word "Minnesota," to insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906," and to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Beltrami, in the State of Minnesota, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in section 22, township 146 north, range 30 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, a few moments ago the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] reported two bridge bills for my colleague [Mr. Nelson]—one Senate bill No. 7924 and the other Senate bill No. 7910—and asked unanimous consent for their present consideration. Senate bill No. 7910 was folded up in the other bill, so that it was not reported by the clerk. My colleague, assuming that the request had been made and carried out, has gone to attend to committee work, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 7910.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments, in line 7, after the words "Mississippi River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation"; in line 8, after the word "forty-six," to insert "north"; and, in the same line, after the word "thirty-three," to strike out "in the State of Minnesota" and insert "west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minne-sota in accordance with the provisions of the state of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, approved March 23, 1906," and to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Bemidji, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between lots 1 and 2, section 16, township 146 north, range 33 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT GEORGE WRIGHT MILITARY RESERVATION (S. REPT. 987).

Mr. BRADY. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate bill 6133, authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to John D. Sherwood, of Spokane, Wash., the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation at Spokane, Wash., and to accept the conveyance to the United States of other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War and suitable for a rifle range in exchange for the land so overflowed. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poin-DEXTER] to the report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

after the enacting clause and to insert:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a number of requests for unanimous consent have been agreed to, and I am not going to object to this; but I shall object to any other unanimous-consent request. As long as we have a calendar of about 22 pages to look after, if we allow bills to be reported and not go to the calendar we never will get a chance to consider bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the bill be read. I should like know what it contains.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill. The Secretary. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to grant an overflow right and easement to John D. Sherwood, of Spokane, Wash., as grantee, his heirs and assigns, to raise the waters of the Spokane River along the east shore line of the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., to such an extent, in such manner, and on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of War may require, in his discretion, as a condition precedent to the overflow of the said lands, either that the said John D. Sherwood, the grantee under the act, shall fill the overflowed lands to such an extent as may be necessary to permanently establish the target range above high-water level in its present location on the reservation or that he shall convey to the United States in exchange for the said overflow right and easement other lands for a target range for the reservation of such area and extent and in such location as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to such lands as may be conveyed: And provided further, That the grantee, the said John D. Sherwood, shall construct to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, or such officer or officers as he may designate, either on the lands filled in on the reservation or on the lands conveyed to the United States in exchange for the overflow right and easement granted by this act, as the case may be, such target butts, pits, buildings, and other necessary accessories as may be required to replace the existing Government range on the reservation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. This bill grants the right to construct a dam, I suppose, which will overflow this land?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not. It does not deal in any way with the right to construct a dam. In fact, that question is not involved, because the location of the proposed dam is on a meandered stream and on private property. It would not require an act of Congress to give that right. This man already has that right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then let me change the inquiry. This overflowing is to occur on account of the construction of a dam? Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the overflow affect any other land than that on the reservation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No other public land. It will affect

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hastily caught the reading. Would the passage of the bill in any way hold the United States responsible for any damages that might occur by reason of this overflowing on private lands?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It could not possibly have any such effect as that, because the overflowing is not to be done under this bill. The only thing that the bill deals with is the military reservation, and its passage is desired to enable the Secretary of War and Mr. Sherwood to adjust the effect of the overflowing of the land on the military reservation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the dam is not on the public domain? Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not on the public domain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to con-

COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 378) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle and eastern judicial districts in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 998) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, I have just given notice that I Mr. SMOOT. would object to the consideration of any more bills in the morn-

Mr. SHIELDS. I understood the Senator to say that he would object to the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. The objection is to bills being reported now and considered while there are so many bills upon the calendar. I gave notice to that effect.

I misunderstood the Senator's announcement. Mr. SHIELDS.

This is a bill which has just been reported.

Mr. SMOOT. I should very much prefer to have the Senator not ask unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand that to be an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar. Mr. SHIELDS. I ask permission to file a supplemental report

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the cal-

DECISION ON WEBB-KENYON LAW.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether the committee have considered a matter that was referred to them quite a long while ago, and which it seems to me ought to be passed upon soon if it is going to be passed on. It was a request that the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in passing on the so-called Webb-Kenyon bill be made a Senate document. There are a great many inquiries coming in for copies of that opinion, and it can not be obtained. The supply is exhausted.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I certainly do. Mr. CHILTON. I will say to

I will say to the Senator that I have been absent from the city for more than a week on account of illness in my family and only just returned to the city this morning. I expect to call a meeting of the committee on Wednesday morning, and this matter will be taken up at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I hope the matter will be passed on at that time.

THE PENAL CODE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the memorandum which I hold in my hand, which was prepared by Assistant Attorney General Charles Warren, on the question of the history and scope of the laws prohibiting correspondence with a foreign Government, and acceptance of a commission to serve a foreign State in war, may be printed as a Senate document. It is a valuable contribution to the history of a statute, the validity of which has been called in question, which was designed to protect this Government from the machinations of people in this country interfering with our foreign representa-

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that hereafter no greater rate of postage shall be charged for publications of the regular annual proceedings and triennial and other reports of fraternal societies and lodges than is charged for sending magazines and periodical publications through the mails, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $221.22 to reimburse Joel J. Mr. OLIVER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 20079. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 20451. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war: and

H. R. 20496. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be held a session of the Senate on to-morrow evening, from 8 to 11 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering the bill to establish a civil government for Porto Rico. I wish to say that this bill is one that it is almost imperative to have passed at this ession of Congress. The Porto Ricans have no Delegate in the House of Representatives at present, and they can not have one until a measure of this kind is passed. I would couple with that request the further one that no final vote be taken upon the bill if anybody present at the session raises an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I beg pardon-what was the re-

SCHOOL PROPERTY IN DENVER.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 217) to authorize the sale of school property in the city of Denver, Colo., and for other pur-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Mr. TOWNSEND. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments on page 1, line 5, after the words "dispose of," to insert "and to execute a deed of conveyance for"; and on page 2, line 16, after the word "premises," to insert:

And provided further. That before such sale the said block shall be appraised by a board composed of three members to be appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, upon petition therefor by the State superintendent of public instruction, which board shall duly report such appraisement, after the making thereof, to said court and there recorded; and no sale shall be made of said block and the improvements thereon for a sum less than the amount of such appraisement: And provided further, That such sale when made shall be approved by the said State superintendent of public instruction before any conveyance thereof shall be made and delivered.

So as to make the bill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of education of school district No. I, in the city and county of Denver, State of Colorado, be, and is hereby, authorized to sell and dispose of and to execute a deed of conveyance for block No. 143 in the east division of the city of Denver, State of Colorado, donated and set apart for educational purposes by the act of Congress approved February 24, 1879 (20 Stat. L., pp. 317 and 318), together with the improvements thereon, so much of said act of Congress as prohibited allenation or other use of the property, upon penalty of reversion to the United States, being hereby repealed: Provided, That all proceeds of sale or disposition of said block and the improvements thereon, less reasonable brokerage, if any, shall be set apart, appropriated, and expended by said board of education for the purchase of other land in said school district for school purposes and the erection of school buildings thereupon: And provided purposes and the extent the said school district shall make use of the said proceeds for purposes other than as limited herein, it shall be held and deemed to be indebted to the Government of the United States, recoverable in appropriate proceedings in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado, which is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises: And provided further, That before such sale the said block shall be appraised by a board composed of three members to be appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, upon petition therefor by the State superintendent of public instruction, which board shall duly report such appraisement, after the making thereof, to said court and there recorded; and no sale shall be made of said block and the improvements thereon for a sum less than the amount of such appraisement: And provided further, That such sale when made shall be approved by the said State superintendent of public instruction before any conveyance thereof shall be made and

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado a question with regard to this bill. If I understood the reading of it correctly, the city of Denver has this land now under a grant from the Government on condition that it shall be used for school purposes. I understand further from the reading of the bill that, contemplating the possibility that all the proceeds of the sale of this land may not be used for the new school building, in such case there will be a debt due to the United States for the balance. I should like to ask the Senator how the United States is going to recover that balance?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is mistaken. When the section and a half constituting the original city of Denver was conveyed by the Government to the inhabitants, it reserved a block of ground for governmental purposes. That block was afterwards conveyed by the Government to the school district for school purposes. Upon the block is a very large high school, and it has been used for that purpose ever since 1876. The business portion of the town has grown around this block, so that in the opinion of the Chamber of Commerce and of the school district it is no longer suitable for the purpose for which it was designed.

The object of this bill is to permit the school board to sell this block, with the improvements, at a minimum price to be fixed by appraisers, to be appointed by the United States district court. and all of the proceeds are to be used in obtaining a site and the construction of a building elsewhere. There is nothing coming to the United States whatever.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Perhaps I misunderstood the bill, but as I caught the reading it contained a provision that in case the proceeds were not all used for school purposes the balance should be recoverable by the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think anything of that kind is in the bill, although the Senator may be correct. I have not read the bill for some time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that it is contemplated that a larger sum of money will be spent in the erection of the new building than the present site

Mr. THOMAS. There is no doubt that the new building and site will cost a sum in excess of the amount of the proceeds from the sale of this property

Mr. TOWNSEND. This is the provision to which I call the Senator's attention:

And provided further, That to the extent the said school district shall make use of the said proceeds for purposes other than as limited herein, it shall be held and deemed to be indebted to the Government of the United States, recoverable in appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district of Colorado, which is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall ask to have that clause eliminated. I do not think it ought to be in the bill; and I am obliged to the Senator from Michigan for calling my attention to it. I will state that I have not read this bill for some time, and while I have no doubt that the framer of the bill who in-troduced it in the House had by that proviso some end in view, I think that provision ought to go out, and I ask to have it stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that the bill go to the

Mr. THOMAS. I am anxious to have it disposed of now. If it goes to the calendar I am afraid it will not be acted upon at this session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will not make any objection to the bill, with the provision to which I have called attention stricken

Mr. THOMAS. I understand, and I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he has given consideration to the question as to whether or not the last proviso which is inserted as an amendment is within the power of Congress to enactwhether the employment of a board of appraisers can be considered a judicial function; that is, whether it is part of the judicial power?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that the Government can provide a means for preventing a possible sacrifice of the property which can only be alienated by waiving a condition which has been imposed upon the title. I see no reason why this arrangement can not be made. It is hardly a judicial function, but is a method of determining a minimum value.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator knows that in the past upon some occasions when Congress has undertaken to confer upon the courts the power to deal with some ministerial subject, the courts themselves have held that the act which they were authorized to perform was not in the exercise of the judicial power. We undertook, if I recall aright, in the early days of the Government to confer upon the courts the power to deal with pensions in some form, and the courts held that that was beyond the power of Congress to do. It occurs to me that to direct that a court of the United States shall appoint a board of appraisers to appraise a body of land on the petition of the State superintendent of public construction does not call for the exercise of judicial power.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that the judge of the United States court in acting under the authority conferred here does not exercise any judicial power. He merely acts as the agent of the Government in selecting the board of appraisers to determine value

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall not object to it, if the Senator is satisfied.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

And provided further, That to the extent the said school district shall make use of the said proceeds for purposes other than as limited herein it shall be held and deemed to be indebted to the Government of the United States, recoverable in appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district of Colorado, which is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I move that the bill H. R. 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made a special order for to-morrow, Tuesday, night at 8 o'clock, to be debated and to be voted upon until 11 o'clock; that no other business be taken up between those hours; and that upon final determination, if anyone objects to a vote on the bill, it shall go over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. First, can that motion as made be allowed to contain all those elements when it is a special order? Second, can the special order be entered by simply a majority vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will require a two-thirds vote. The Chair construes this to be a motion by the Senator from Colorado to make the Porto Rican bill a special order at 8 o'clock on to-morrow night, which may be done by a twothirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But I was going to add, does the Senator from Colorado then eliminate from his motion the other features which he suggested?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am willing to eliminate all the balance of it and just move that it be made a special order for 8 o'clock on to-morrow night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes that requires a rising vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Shields
Beckham	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hardwick	Myers	Smith, Mich.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] is unavoidly absent. He is ill at his home.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Swanson] is detained at home by illness

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] moves that the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide for a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Tuesday evening, January 30, 1917, at 8 o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to inquire, in case the motion prevails and a special order is made for the consideration of this bill at 8 o'clock to-morrow evening, will it become the unfinished business if it is before the Senate on the adjournment to-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will not. The rule provides that it becomes the special order from day to day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. At that hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. At that hour.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Another question: When the bill is laid before the Senate to-morrow evening, if the motion prevails now, can the bill be supplanted by a majority vote of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question the Chair does not choose to guess upon now. It would be a pure guess on the part of the Chair without an opportunity to investigate the rule and the precedents.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I notice that Rule X on this subject says: And all motions to change such order, or to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

Whether it requires a majority vote or a two-thirds vote to displace it was the question that I suggested.

Mr. GALLINGER. A majority vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first impression of the Chair is that it can be changed by a majority vote, but the Chair does not care to be bound by that opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. The rule specifies that it can be supplanted by a motion that is not debatable. That carries with it the implication, I should judge, that it would be a majority vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair never has had it presented heretofore, and knowing nothing about the precedents the Chair reserves the right to file a dissenting opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have not had a chance to look at the rule as to special orders, and I ask the Chair if I correctly understood the Chair to rule that if the bill should be made the special order for 8 o'clock to-morrow evening and not finished on that evening there would have to be an evening session of the Senate held every day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not necessarily so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But if we had evening sessions the bill would have to be laid before the Senate night after night until disposed of as long as we held an evening sesssion? I ask for information. I have not had a chance to look at the rule, but I want to know the effect of the vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a question of this kind which arose during the last session of Congress.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the con-

Mr. ASHURST. I more that the Senate proceed to the sideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must finish his ruling.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the last session of Congress, as the Chair now remembers it, at which there was a special order made and this very question arose, the Chair thinks the Chair then held that it came up from day to day.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the same hour as stated? The VICE PRESIDENT. At the same hour. But before there was any final disposition of the ruling the bill passed away from the consideration of the Senate and it was not definitely

Mr. SMOOT. May I call the attention of the Chair to a decision in the Book of Precedents?

On motion by Mr. Fessenden to postpone the further consideration of the bill (special order, being S. 151, to confiscate property, etc.) to to-morrow, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 208) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1863, and additional appropriations for the year ending the 30th June, 1862"; yeas 24, nays 20.

Before the decision upon the question was announced by the Vice President (Mr. Hamlin) Mr. Foot raised a question of order, viz, whether, as by the thirty-first rule of the Senate, it requires a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present to make any subject a special order, it does not require a like vote of two-thirds, a special order being under consideration, to postpone it.

The Vice President (Mr. Hamlin) decided that upon a motion to postpone a special order a majority could determine. (See Congressional Globes, pp. 1014, 1015.)

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there is any doubt shout it I would be

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there is any doubt about it, I would be glad to incorporate as a part of the motion that the bill shall be considered until displaced by a majority vote taking up other proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is what the present occupant of the chair decided. There was an appeal by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. This record does not show what became of the appeal, but in his opinion, after reviewing the

The Chair has no doubt that the present bill is a special order for 1 o'clock from day to day or until it becomes the unfinished business at 2 o'clock or until it has been disposed of by order of the Senate. The reason for this is that at the hour of 1 o'clock a motion can be made to take up a bill upon the calendar. This may be done by a majority vote; but as the present order was made by a two-thirds vote, it remains such special order until by affirmative action of the Senate it is displaced.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say further to the Senator from Michigan that I do not think this bill will take more than one evening. There is no minority report on the bill. It has some detail provisions in it, but I believe it can all be disposed of at one evening session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. With reference to the question I asked the Chair, and which he decided, namely, that the bill would not become the unfinished business if an adjournment occurred tomorrow evening while the bill was before us, I wish to read the rule. Rule X provides, under "special orders":

And if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

I was wondering what that meant if it does not mean that it becomes actually the unfinished business on the adjournment of the Senate on that day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am willing to eliminate that by a specific statement that it shall not become the unfinished business

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the meaning of that rule is this, that if a special order shall be made, say, for 1 o'clock, and there is no unfinished business at 2 o'clock and a discussion of the special order continues until the adjournment of the Senate, then it becomes the unfinished business. But the Chair does not believe, notwithstanding the rule, simply because it is the last measure under discussion at the close of the day it thereby supplants the unfinished business. It is simply a special order that continues from day to day, if the Senate is in session, until it is disposed of, and only becomes the unfinished business in the event that there is none already upon the calendar. That is the best opinion the Chair can give now.

Mr. BRYAN. The Chair ruled in 1914, and there was an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the ruling of the Chair was sustained, to the effect that a bill being once made a special order it shall be taken up at the same hour or on each succeeding day until disposed of or until the unfinished business displaces it. So, if the motion of the Senator from Colorado prevails, it will be considered every night at 8 o'clock until disposed of under that ruling of the Chair, which was sustained by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a further parliamentary in-This motion, I suppose, is made under Rule X, which provides as follows:

Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order, and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the Presiding Officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of—

And so forth.

In all probability there will be unfinished business to-morrow night, namely, House bill 408, and it will be the duty of the Presiding Officer then to lay the unfinished business before the Senate. But if, however, the other bill was taken up and was not finished, it would become the unfinished business.

Accordingly, Mr. President, unless we get unanimous consent at that time to lay aside the unfinished business in order to take up the measure proposed by the Senator from Colorado, the unfinished business will have to be laid before the Senate to-morrow evening, and it will have to be proceeded with unless we can get unanimous consent, or unless it shall be displaced as unfinished business.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I shall be glad to-morrow evening to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily in order that the evening may be devoted to a discussion of his measure, but I would not like to vote for the motion of the Senator unless we can have some agreement that will preserve the parliamentary status of the unfinished business,

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no desire—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us see if the Chair can clarify what the Chair thinks has heretofore been ruled and sustained by the Senate. It is-

First. That by a two-thirds vote of the Senate a special order may be made for the consideration of a bill.

Second. If that special order shall happen to be made at an hour when there is unfinished business, it does not take the place of the unfinished business, the unfinished business proceeds and the special order has no power.

Third, If it is set at an hour when there is no unfinished business, then it is before the Senate until the hour arrives for the laying of the unfinished business before the Senate.

Fourth. If there be no unfinished business and it be the last subject considered on the day it becomes the unfinished business of the next day.

Fifth. If, however, there be unfinished business, then it remains a special order to be taken up from day to day, unless by so doing it shall interfere with the unfinished business of the Senate.

That is what the Chair rules.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I understand it correctly then, to-morrow evening, if we pass this special order, when the bill is laid before the Senate the unfinished business will have to be laid aside by unanimous consent. If it is not laid aside by unanimous consent, then the power bill becomes the business before the Senate to-morrow night. A great many Senators might be perfectly willing to come here and listen to a discussion and act, if need be, upon the Porto Rican bill when they would not care to do that in reference to the power bill.

So it seems we have no assurance at all that this bill will be taken up for consideration to-morrow night at 8 o'clock if two-thirds of the Senate vote to make it a special order, because of the pendency of the unfinished business, which is House bill 408, the power bill.

I think that Senators ought to understand this matter, so that they may know exactly what they are doing when they vote for this proposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?
Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. GRONNA. I objected to making the bill a special order for to-morrow night. I did not make the objection because I do not want to have the bill considered, but I am opposed to making it a special order. If the Senator from Colorado will accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana, that we meet here to-morrow evening and he will ask that the unfinished business be laid aside, I shall have no objection to taking up the Porto Rican bill at that time. I would suggest that we proceed in that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to know whether I may get a special order to consider this bill from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock. I feel confident that we can finish the bill by 11 o'clock. If we have three hours' discussion on it, I think all parties who care to be heard will have the opportunity to be heard. Let it be the understanding that the unfinished business does not supersede it and it does not require unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has tried to be clear, but evidently has not been. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shaf-ROTH] could have obtained just what he wants by unanimous consent, but that has been denied him. He has a perfect right to move to make the bill a special order for 8 o'clock to-morrow evening, and it will be agreed to if his motion is carried by a two-thirds vote; but neither the Senator from Colorado nor the Chair can say as to whether or not there will be unfinished business at that hour to-morrow night, which some Senator may then insist upon proceeding with, and if he should insist upon proceeding with it the Chair would be compelled to hold that he had a right to have it then considered by the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, under those circumstances, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration at 8 o'clock to-morrow night the Porto Rican bill, vote upon it, and adjourn at 11 o'clock unless sooner disposed of.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Colorado will require a roll call.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will withdraw that request, because I can see that a quorum would be called for; but I will request that the bill be considered until 11 o'clock to-morrow evening unless sooner disposed of.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado knows that I have some amendments which I intend to offer to the bill to which he refers. I desire to discuss those amendments, and I am not willing to agree that we shall vote upon the bill to-morrow night.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not ask that the bill be disposed of at 11 o'clock. I should like to have it disposed of at that time; but I simply ask that the bill be considered between the hours of 8 o'clock and 11 o'clock to-morrow night, unless sooner disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have already lost a good deal of time, and I do not desire to lose any more, so I shall

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the Senator from Colorado withdraws his motion to make the bill to which he has referred a special order. That is the pending question, unless the Senator withdraws his motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I withdraw it for the time being, Mr.

President.

THE INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I report from the Committee on Appropriations without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be acted upon at once.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in conformity with my statement made a short time ago, objecting to the consideration of other business, I am compelled to object to the consideration of this joint resolution. I know what the joint resolution is; but I said I was going to object to such requests, and I shall have to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement in regard to the joint resolution. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have appeared before us and have stated that they must know what they have got to depend upon in order that they may proceed with the work in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies. It will take a very few moments to consider and dispose of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to object to its consideration,

Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then I withdraw the report.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I know that it will give me no rights whatever, I think it is only fair to give notice that to-morrow, after the expiration of the morning hour and as soon as the opportunity presents itself, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 326.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. The pending amendment is found at the bottom of page 27 of the bill, where the Committee on Indian Affairs, after the word "education," in line 24, proposes to strike out "$8,000" and to insert "$5,000," so as to read:

FLORIDA.

Szc. 4. For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education, $5,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and vote "yea."

I desire to announce while on my feet the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

So the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when this amendment was reached last week I took occasion to congratulate the committee upon the fact that it appeared in the general surrounding of increases like an oasis in the desert. I now must retract my congratulations, because the Senate has seen fit—the chairman of the committee himself voting in favor it-to recede from the Senate amendment, so that the sum of $8,000 is devoted by this bill to the Seminole Indians of Florida.

It is true that the department only asked for $5,000. It is also true that of the previous appropriation $1,701 was not expended. Notwithstanding these facts, however, the Senate has determined to force the sum of $8,000 into the reluctant hands of the bureau for this purpose. Florida is to be congratulated in that it again assumes its position as equal among the States, and no discrimination is made in this bill against it.

I think an amendment should now be offered providing for the expulsion from the public service of this agent who had the temerity to save $1,701 out of the appropriation of last year. That, Mr. President, is an example which, if persisted in, will lead to reductions in appropriations hereafter that may possibly put us along the road to retrenchment. It is a conspicuous instance of official incompetency, and should be censured severely, if not punished by dismissal.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the matter at all. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the Senator has overstated the unexpended balance as reported—he gave it as $1,701, whereas it is $1,301—and that the last year's appropriation did not become available until the 1st of July, 1916, and that perhaps that is the reason for this.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me say, if the Senator will permit me, that I am sorry if I did this official the injustice of overstating the amount of his saving. I used the figures which were put in the Record by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] on Saturday. I wish to apologize to the official for making the overstatement of $400.

Mr. FLETCHER. That matter was all gone over Saturday, and of course I shall not take up the time of the Senate in discussing it now. The fact is, as I say, that the appropriation for last year was available on the 1st of July, 1916. The year has not yet expired. This appropriation will not become available until the 1st of July, 1917.

I should like to commend the spirit of economy and efficiency on the part of the agent, Mr. Lucien A. Spencer, who has been, in my judgment, a most excellent one; but there is no reason for the contention that because there was an unexpended balance when this estimate was put in last year the entire appropriation for last year was not needed at the time. It was needed, and the amount undoubtedly will be consumed in a proper way by the time the present appropriation is made available-July 1, 1917. Another reason that I gave on Saturday is that this agent is a chaplain in the Army, and has been absent on the border for some months, and has not been able to carry on the work as diligently as he otherwise might have done.

I simply wish, however, to refer to the discussion that was had on Saturday and leave the matter there, adding only a letter that I have from the agent, Special Commissioner L. A. Spencer, dated December 10, 1915, showing the character of the work that was being done. I ask to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, Miami, Fla., December 10, 1915.

Hon. D. U. Fletcher, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: When the work among the Florida Seminoles was started on March 1, 1913, they were an uncivilized tribe the members of which steadfastly refused to adopt our customs, speak our tongue, except when absolutely necessary, or be bound by any but

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: When the work among the Florida Seminoles was started on March 1, 1913, they were an uncivilized tribe the members of which steadfastly refused to adopt our customs, speak our tongue, except when absolutely necessary, or be bound by any but tribal laws.

The tribal laws forbid any member of the tribe attending school on penalty of having the ears cut off.

White doctors were barred from practice except by special tribal permission, and no Indian was permitted to work for white people without permission from his subchief.

In summing up the work of the past two and one-half years and noting the advance made, I would respectfully call your attention to the fact that a large number of the Florida Seminoles now recognize the United States Government and salute the flag. At a celebration held last spring at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., the color bearer in the parade was a full-blood Florida Seminole.

The Indian Office furnishes a white doctor, hospital accommodations, and medicines to sick Indians, and it is accepted by them. The tribal medicine men are recommending it. The medicine man of one cian has had every member examined for hookworm, and took the first treatment himself to set an example.

The ban on education has been removed, and while no compulsory system has been adopted we have four boys and four girls attending white schools. When we take into consideration the close supervision of females exercised by the tribe, the fact that girls are permitted to attend a white school shows in itself a marked advance in the work.

About 30 per cent of the Florida Seminoles have now adopted the dress of white people.

A large number of Indians have expressed a desire to move to reservation lands and, giving up the old life, become farmers. The Indian Office holds about 25,000 acres of land for these Indians, and if an appropriation sufficient to cover the cost of ditching, fencing, and starting farming operations were made I am sure that the Indians moving there would soon be self-supporting.

In

LUCIEN A. SPENCER, Special Commissioner and S. D. A.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say that I voted under an entire misapprehension as to the character of the motion before the Senate. I was under the impression that the motion was to reconsider the action of the Senate in agreeing to the amendment. I am now informed that that motion had been disposed of, and that the pending motion was to disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. No; to agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote came up on the question whether or not the Senate amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed that the motion was to reconsider. I would have voted otherwise had I known the exact situation; but I will allow my vote to stand, simply because the result will not be changed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. All of the increases so far have been defended by the Senator having the bill in charge on the ground that they have been estimated for, and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated that the amount was necessary. Now, when it comes to this item—the only item of reduction in the bill—the Senator having the bill in charge pays no heed to the estimate that was made, and pays no heed to the recommendations of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and votes for an increase, more than recommended by the commissioner and more than was estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator that I hope next time when an increase comes up he will not cite me to the fact that there was an estimate for it, and also to the fur-ther fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs feels that the ther fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs feels that the increase ought to be granted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Utah is attempting to be facetious, I have no quarrel with him. If he is attempting in any way to censure me—

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. ASHURST (continuing). Or to ask me to give any reason for the continuing of the property of t son for my vote, he will get a reply he might not wish to hear. voted according to the lights before me. As I say, if the Senator is facetious, I have no quarrel with him; but if he intends to censure my vote I will have a quarrel with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent on Saturday morning, when we passed over Minnesota. As we have disposed of the item under consideration when we adjourned on Saturday, if there is no objection, I suggest that we resume the consideration of the bill on page 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota requests unanimous consent to return to page 30. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 30, line 4.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 30, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 8. For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $45,175.

Sec. 9. For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; for domestic science cottage, $5,000; for addition to hospital, $6,000; for central heating plant, $16,500; for setting out trees, $500; for road and drainage, $1,000; in all, $75,175.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota if all these items have been estimated for?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; they have not been. I was out there myself and studied the situation there. I will say to the Senator that we formerly had two schools in Minnesota. It seemed to me that one would be sufficient, and I had the other abated some years ago, so as to save the expense of two schools. This one is a growing school.

As to the item of trees, of course I would not say that it was necessary; it was not estimated for, but the school is some distance from the city. It is on a sort of a treeless plain, and it struck me that $500 would not be a wasteful expense to beautify the place to the extent of setting trees along that highway from the school to the town.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the increase is $30,000.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wondered whether it was estimated for or whether the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had requested these appropriations.

Mr. CLAPP. The trouble about the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is this: Of course, the suggestion goes down the line to all estimates. The agents are somewhat restricted making their requests, and the consequence is that some of these were not estimated for, and especially the item for the trees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 6, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Minnesota upon the tribal and allotted land of the Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amount assessed against said tribal and allotted lands. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, to be reimbursable from any funds belonging to the individual allottees, or their heirs, from any funds belonging to the individual allottees, or their heirs, from any funds belonging to the tribes subject to be provated, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees, or their heirs, as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditches upon the payment of adequate damages therefor: Provided, That no patent in fee shall be issued for any tract of land under the terms of this paragraph until the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed for all assessments paid or to be paid on such tract under the terms hereof. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to do and perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions hereof into force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to take $5,000 of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota and pay the same to the proper authorities toward the construction of a bridge on Cass Lake Reservation upon the condition that the Forestry Service contributes $10,000 and the local authorities, State or county, contribute $10,000 toward the building of said bridge.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota about that paragraph. Why do we put in there the stipulation that this money shall be taken on condition that the Forestry Service contributes $10,000? The Forestry Service can not contribute any money like a private individual.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it can not do so directly; but the situation is this: Here, in the first place, is the Indian reservation. Then comes the forest reserve, through which this road passes; and then on each side of the Indian reservation, of course, are the counties. Now, while the forest reserve, of course, has no funds, the Forestry Bureau, by appropriation, will have to secure the $10,000. We felt that we ought not to take more than five of the twenty-five thousand dollars from the Indian If Congress does not make an appropriation from the Federal Treasury of $10,000, then the appropriation of $5,000 from the Indian fund, of course, fails.

Mr. JONES. Why not make a direct appropriation here out of the funds that may be available for the Forestry Service?

Mr. CLAPP. Because this is not the proper bill

Mr. JONES. We ought not to have a condition like this, then, in this bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, certainly. This condition simply applies to the $5,000 of the Indian fund.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the Senator that in my judgment we ought not to make an appropriation conditioned upon our making some other appropriation at some other time or in some other way.

Mr. CLAPP. We are not. We are taking out of the Indian fund $5,000 upon condition that Congress may hereafter appropriate $10,000 from the general fund of the Government. would not be the place, it seems to me, to make an appropria-tion of $10,000 out of the Treasury on account of the Forestry Bureau. That should properly come in the Agricultural bill.

Mr. JONES. Then, it seems to me, we ought not to say anything about it here. We ought not to take one sum of money from one fund with a condition that some other branch of our own Government shall appropriate some money. If we think it ought to be done, we ought to appropriate it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President— Mr. CLAPP. But, if the Senator will bear with me while I explain the matter, this is the only bill in which the taking of part of the fund of the tribe would be appropriately located.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I agree with that. That is true.

Mr. CLAPP. My colleague and myself have talked over this matter, and we feel that it would be perfectly just, in view of the conditions up there, to take $5,000 of their fund as a contribution to a $25,000 bridge. We do not here appropriate the $10,000 on behalf of the State, either.

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly. That is something beyond our control.

Mr. CLAPP. It is legislatively beyond our control-or, rather, out of the purview of the bill-to make the appropriation from the General Treasury in this bill. I think we would have been criticized if we had put it in here.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, the correction that ought to be made is to strike out "Forestry Service" and insert "Government of the United States" also to strike out the word "contribute," on line 19, and insert "appropriates," so that it will read:

Upon condition that the Government of the United States appropriates

Then it will be correct.

Mr. CLAPP. That would leave the matter just as it is. took up with the officers the question as to whether they would be warranted, under this language, in applying the $5,000 in case the other two $10,000 items were applied; and it is to meet their view on that question that this language was used.

Mr. JONES. I want to make this suggestion to the Senator: As I understand, we have a general law under which the Forestry Service has available a certain percentage of the receipts from sales in the forests of the country.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. JONES. They can distribute that percentage in the different forest reserves themselves, without any additional act by Congress.

Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. JONES. Now, they would take $10,000 under this provision, without waiting for Congress to appropriate.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know whether they would or not. they would, then the Senator's criticism that it is not all in this bill fails.

Mr. JONES. No; that is not the criticism. The criticism is that the legislative branch of the Government is taking a certain amount of money and making it available upon condition that some other branch of the Government itself shall contribute like an individual, putting it on the basis of an individual contributing an amount of the public money. If we are going to have this money available for this purpose, we ought to say so ourselves, and not leave it to the discretion of some bureau.

Mr. CLAPP. We ought to say so; but we ought not, it seems to me, to say so in this bill. I should be very glad, indeed, if no one would object, to cover the entire provision by this bill.

Mr. JONES. That is exactly what we are doing, in an indirect way, in this bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES. As I say, the Forestry Service, as I understand, under a general law, can apportion moneys that it receives from the sale of timber for forest reserves; and now we propose to say here: "If you see fit to use for this purpose $10,000 of the money that comes into your hands, no matter whether by direct appropriation or under general law, you can do it." think we ought to put a condition like that in a bill with reference to a bureau of the Government that is using the people's It is all right for us to say that we will take this $5,000, provided the State or the county or some individual will contribute a certain amount of money. That is all right, but to say that we will use this $5,000 if we ourselves will contribute, it seems to me, is something that ought not to be put in a legislative provision. If you want to have it read, "Provided, That there shall be made available hereafter, in appropriations made for the Forestry Service, $10,000 for this purpose," I make no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, at the Senator's suggestion, I move to amend the language so as to conform to the suggestion just

Mr. JONES. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to take $5,000 of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota upon the condition that Congress shall hereafter appropriate $10,000 to be contributed to the Forestry Service.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 33, lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "upon the condition that the Forestry Service contributes $10,000" and insert "upon the condition that Congress shall hereafter appropriate $10,000 to be contributed to the Forestry Service."

Mr. SMOOT. After naming the amount should we not say for this purpose? They may contribute $5,000 for another purpose.

Mr. CLAPP. For the purpose aforesaid.

The Secretary. "Upon the condition that Congress shall hereafter appropriate $10,000 to be contributed to the Forestry Service for the purpose aforesaid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota this question: It says that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to take this $5,000 "and pay the same to the proper authorities." Who are the proper authorities?

ithorities." Who are the proper authorities?

Mr. CLAPP. It might not be possible in anticipation to say who are the proper authorities. At present I presume it would be the board of highway commissioners of the State. State, as all States, constantly change the laws with reference to the more expensive highway projects, and in order that we may anticipate any change in the law by the legislature the words "the proper authorities" are used. I submitted the matter to the Indian Office, and they said they were satisfied that that would cover sufficiently the authorization.

Mr. JONES. Suppose that after we contribute this $5,000 they find that $25,000 is not enough to build a bridge. what will happen to the $5,000?

Mr. CLAPP. They will hardly do that.
Mr. JONES. I think frequently we have estimates for building structures that come far below the actual cost.

Mr. SMOOT. May I suggest to the Senator that there have been in the Indian appropriation bill many times appropriations for building bridges within Indian reservations, and, as I remember, in every case the Secretary of the Interior has been authorized to build the bridge?

Mr. CLAPP. He could not be authorized in this case. have to-day a law in our State under which we have a com-They are laying out one of the mission of State highways. principal highways from Duluth westward through this reservation, and it involves this forest reserve which we have established. In order that this might apply with a view to any possible changes in the State law I took it up with the Indian Office to see whether it would be workable with this language, and it was thought that it would.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if Cass Lake Reservation is a forest reserve or an Indian reserve?

Mr. CLAPP. Cass Lake Reservation is primarily an Indian reservation

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought.
Mr. CLAPP. Then we carved out of Cass Lake, the Winnebegoshish Reserve, a forest reserve. This road will be partly on the Indian reservation and partly on the forest reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. Where is the bridge that is to be built located, on the Indian reservation or on the forest reserve?

Mr. CLAPP. It will be on the Indian reservation, of course.
Mr. SMOOT. If it was in the forest reserve, I think under the present law with the money appropriated for roads in forest reserves the bridge would be provided for, but not if it is in an Indian reservation.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the particular locus of the bridge is outside of the forest reserve, but I would not be positive about it.

Mr. NELSON. My impression is that it is outside of the forest reserve and on that part of the reservation which is an Indian

Mr. CLAPP. That is my impression. Mr. NELSON. My colleague is correct in this. There was originally an Indian reservation known as Cass Lake Reservation. There was considerable pine timber on it, and that portion with the pine timber was set apart as a forest reserve, and interlocked, side by side, with the forest reserve is a part of what was the Indian reserve. This highway perhaps goes through both reserves, but I think the bridge is on that part which still remains an Indian reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator that if the bridge to be built is located on the forest reserve, I think the wording of the amendment would justify the Forestry Service in expending the $10,000, if in the judgment of the Forester he thought proper, because he has the authority now to expend certain money for building roads in forest reserves. However, I think if the bridge is on the Indian reservation, of course the wording is unfortunate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the bridge is to be built on an Indian reserve the Secretary of the Interior is the proper person to have charge of its building, and he can build it in any way he wants.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think under the State law it could be done in that way.

Mr. JONES. Does the State law supersede the authority of the Secretary of the Interior over an Indian reservation?

Mr. CLAPP. No; of course, we can authorize the Secretary of the Interior to build a bridge in any Indian reservation, but we want $10,000 for this bridge to come from the State and county authorities, and under the State law the commission must have charge of the construction of the highway, which includes the building of the bridge. I can not see why there should be any objection on that score.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that in appropriations of this kind heretofore we have provided for the construction of bridges on condition that certain State authorities would contribute so much, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the construction of the bridge instead of turning the money over to the local authorities.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. NELSON. This is not merely for the purpose of building a bridge for the convenience of the Indians of the Indian reserva-This is a State highway from Duluth in a western direction through the State, and the highway has to cross this watercourse. It is really one of the neadwaters of the River. Most of the money will undoubtedly be contributed by It is really one of the headwaters of the Mississippi the State, and therefore it is proper that it should have control of building the bridge under all the circumstances, because the bridge is not what you might call a local bridge, such as for a reservation, but we have a big State highway and the whole northern part of the State is interested in it.

Mr. JONES. As I said, primarily this is a State road, not for the benefit of an Indian reservation at all. The Indians will get possibly some little incidental benefit from the construction of the bridge, but it is necessarily a part of the State highway. The Indians possibly are indifferent whether the bridge is built or not.

I wish to say that I am glad to have this matter presented in this way, because I have a proposition of this very kind that is being urged now. Our people want to build a State road from North Yakima over to the Columbia River. It goes across the Yakima Indian Reservation. My people are urging that we should get some Indian money to assist in the construction of this State highway. They are putting it largely upon the ground that it will be a benefit to the Indians, however, and a benefit to the Indian reservation. Of course, as a matter of fact, they want to get the State highway built there, and they want to have a contribution toward the building of the bridge from the Indian fund. I will be very glad indeed to have a precedent like this established, but I want the Senate clearly to appreciate the situation, so that when I bring my proposition here I will have something back of it more than the general argument with reference to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 20, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay, out of any funds belonging to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, such amount or amounts as he may find to be due any person by reason of his or her name having been omitted erroneously from the rolls.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 34, to insert:

The next amendment was, at the top of page 34, to insert:

That the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the general council of said tribe to be held at Bemidji, Minn, beginning July 13, 1917, pursuant to the constitution of the general council of said Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, organized in May, 1913, and to pay the actual and necessary expenses of the members of the executive committee of said council when attending to the business of the tribe and to pay the expenses to Washington during the second, session of the Sixty-fourth Congress of the legislative committee appointed by the president of said council, and to pay the expenses to Washington during the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress of the delegation appointed by a council held on the Winnebegoshish Reservation, January 2, 1917, and to pay the expenses to Washington of the delegates elected by the council of the White Earth Bands of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, held at White Earth, Minn., December 1, 1916, to visit the city of Washington to represent the said bands and the Chippewas of Minnesota generally before the departments and Congress during the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, including the sum of $337.44 of the expense of William Madison and Gus H. Beaulieu in Washington, from March 18 to May 25, 1916, inclusive, said sum to be immediately available, and said expense of holding the general council to be approved by the president and secretary of the general council and certified to the Secretary of the Interior and, as so approved and certified, to be paid: and the expenses of the delegates to Washington to be paid upon certification by each delegate of his actual and necessary expenses, when approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 2, after the word "employees," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Blackfeet Agency. Mont., including pay of employees, $75,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator having the bill in charge if the $25,000 increase in this item was estimated for?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the Senator from Utah, if my memory serves me correctly—I have not turned to the House or Senate hearings—I think the estimate was for $100,000. The Senate committee, after a full hearing, believed that $75,000 was necessary. The House hearings on the subject appear on page 173.

Mr. SMOOT. The House provided $50,000, and the Senate committee increased the appropriation from $50,000 to $75,000.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. I wish to state that the estimate is $100,000.

Mr. LANE. On what page of the hearings is that, if the Senator please?

Mr. ASHURST. At page 173 of the House hearings the matter is discussed before the House committee.

Mr. LANE. I understood that Mr. Meritt offered a full justification. He says the amount asked for is $100,000.

Mr. JONES. Why should this appropriation be made immediately available? Did we not have an appropriation for the current year?

Mr. ASHURST. The language to be made immediately available was believed to be necessary by the commissioner and the committee.

Mr. JONES. What I wanted to inquire was if it is necessary?

Mr. ASHURST. So that they could use it at once.

Mr. JONES. Why do they need it at once?
Mr. LANE. I will answer that if the chairman will allow me. The Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation are said to be starving

Mr. JONES. Did we not make an appropriation for the current year?

Mr. LANE. We did. They were going hungry last year, and they will go hungry next year. They were going hungry the year before last, and will continue to do so until they are better cared for.

Mr. JONES. We did not appropriate enough money?

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me, we appropriated only $25,000 last year.

Mr. JONES. That was not enough.

Mr. GRONNA. It was not enough.

Mr. JONES. So this is really to take care of a deficiency that is absolutely necessary?

Mr. LANE. I do not know whether it is a deficiency or not, but I want to call attention to what became of the appropriation, not reflecting on anyone in the least.

The first item is for support and civilization of the Blackfeet Indians. If you will look over the items for a justification, you will find the amount expended was nine thousand and some odd dollars, for salaries and wages of agents, and they are whites.

That does not feed the Indians a mouthful.

Traveling expenses, $110.

That did not go to the Indians.

Transportation of supplies, $971.

That may have in part benefited the Indian.

Telegraph and telephone service, $92.42. Subsistence supplies, $2,387.67.

Out of $25,000.

Fuel, illuminants, lubricants, etc., $1,238.

I have an idea the Indian did not get any of that. He hustles for his own fuel.

Medical supplies, $49.19.

There is a tribe of Indians, a large majority of whom are ill from trachoma or tuberculosis, or both, and other diseases and subject to all the ills of ordinary men, and the amount expended for medical supplies was $49.19.

Implements, vehicles, tools, etc., $102.79-

To supply him on his farm so that he may become selfsupporting-

Sundry supplies, equipment, etc., $73.73. Seed, $229.17. Miscellaneous, $20.81.

In respect to the Seminoles, among the Florida items on page 151, who are said to be in a state of destitution, it is also said of them that they are about the only real aboriginal tribe of Indians left, being outdoor people who made their living by hunting and fishing until repeating shotguns were adopted by the whites, and not by any art or trade or science taught to them by white men. If you make an analysis of the expenditures which are furnished here, you will find on page 152 of the House committee hearings for this session the following statement:

Salaries and wages, $376. Traveling expenses, $125-

I am leaving out the cents-

Subsistence supplies, $54-

For a starving tribe of 578 Indians. Apparently they are solving the question of the high cost of living. They have acquired an art which all nations are now trying to learn, which is how to evade the high cost of living. Here is a whole tribe of people of 578 Indians who subsist for a year on $54.08. ought to hire some of them to come up and tell us how they do it and teach us, and to go elsewhere and teach others. They have got it down to the finest point I have heard of.

Dry goods, wearing apparel, etc., $24.24-

To keep them warm, I suppose.

There is another good item of useful information for 578 people.

Medical supplies, 55 cents.

They have got that down to a point that would please the senior Senator from California.

Educational, stationery, and office supplies, $72.20. Hospital and medical expense, $78.60.

Now, you see what the Indians get out of those items of support and civilization. It is the same, practically, and does not vary much from that of any of the tribes of Indians.

That is why I said the other day that this sort of system, so far as the Indians are concerned, ought to be changed. It does not reflect well upon the greatest legislative body of the world to have the people fooled by such a scheme.

It would be tiresome if I called your attention to any more of such appropriations; and what good does it do? One might just as well go out the door there and whistle down the east wind. It seems to be useless. It is almost heartbreaking. The whole scheme is founded upon bureaucratic methods which have grown upon the country and upon the Indians, with damage to the country to the extent of as much money wasted out of the National Treasury, and it has almost utterly ruined the Indians. It has left them helpless; it has confined them to a reservation in the bounds of a district fixed on purpose for their use for the reason that it had no value to the white man. They did that years ago. They put the Indian off into a far corner which was useless to him at the time, and he is now confined there. He has no help of any practical value; he is left to rot. No inspector who visits them, as I said the other day, dares make public the facts as he finds them.

I am not criticizing the officials for it. It has grown upon them until they have lost their bearings. Our administration perhaps is as good as yours was, and if you get back into power yours will be no better than ours unless you change the system. There can be no success until the system is changed. A good superintendent is no better off than the dependent nincompoop relative of some one who has had influence enough to get him appointed to that or some other place in the employment of the bureau. They have no right of initiative. If an Indian wants to buy a plow or put in 40 acres, we will say, of wheat in a country which will raise wheat, the request will be forwarded to Washington, and before the seed or the plow get back to the Indian in order to enable him to put in a crop the season has quite frequently passed, so long does it take to get supplies to him; the season has passed, the Indian is discouraged, and is rated as an incompetent. I have seen lands which were irrigable and on which water could be made to flow with a few days' work in ditching, and where the Indian had received assurance that he would secure water on it. The land was tilled, the seed sown, and before the water was given to him his crop dried up and died, and after it was dead and of no value the water came in a sufficient quantity to have raised him a crop and made him comfortable for the year if he had received it in time. I was reading an article the other day which some one handed me, apparently an open letter to Congress, if you please, on this same subject, and I am going to read it into the RECORD. I will say to the chairman of the committee that it is a long article, and I am going to read it slowly, and he had just as well look pleasant while I do so.

It is printed in the State, Columbia, S. C., Sunday, January 7, 1917. It gives the viewpoint of an unprejudiced man who has served in this work. The letter proves at least with what we know of the affairs of this Indian Bureau and our system of handling the Indians that the work is futile.

Mr. THOMAS. From what paper is it? Mr. LANE. I am reading from a paper known as the State, published in Columbia, S. C., on Sunday morning a week ago. I have only a couple of pages of it here. I do not know what sort of a journal it is, or what its standing, but here is the statement of a man by the name of W. H. Gibbes, formerly inspector. The headlines of the article were, I assume, written by the person who edits the paper, and it states:

THINKS INDIAN PROBLEM NEEDS RADICAL METHODS—W. H. GIBES, FOR-MERLY INSPECTOR, POINTS TO DEFECTS IN PLAN AND ADMINISTRATION WHICH MAKE GOVERNMENT'S MANAGEMENT HARMFUL RATHER THAN BENEFICIAL.

The open letter below relating to the Indian question has been addressed to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Indian Commission, at Washington, by Wade Hampton Gibbes, formerly inspector of the Indian Service of the United States. It should receive the attention of men and women everywhere in the country who are interested in the welfare of the Indians. Mr. Gibbes was at one time auditor of Richland County and subsequently mayor of Columbia. He needs no introduction to the people of South Carolina.

Would there be any objection to my having the Secretary read the article? He is more familiar with an exercise of the vocal chords than I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the Chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LANE. Or I will read it myself if there is objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

COLUMBIA, S. C.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary, Hon. Caro Sells, Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Having entered the Indian Service as an inspector with a sincere desire and purpose to aid in its betterment, I feel impelled to address you publicly with the same end in view. In the brief and only talk I had with Mr. Sells after appointment, he asked me to report upon the shortcomings of the office as well as of the field, and I have certainly done so according to promise, but have never had a word of approval or rebuke for the many radical faults I have found and reported in no uncertain terms.

At first, my field was supposed to be at large, but it was later limited to three States, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

In reporting my findings after full, careful, and close study of the 21 activities there, I do not wish to make any unkind criticism of men, for I have only the kindest feelings toward individual officers and employees in Washington and in the field. They tell me I saw the best of the Indian Service. If this be true, may Heaven help the worst.

In the matter of administration, I found the Washington office a stumbling block to the effective conduct of the agencies. The agent or superintendent on the ground, under heavy bond, is almost a puppet, hemmed in and limited by restrictions that leave little margin for the exercise of individual judgment and discretion.

This condition is evidently brought about by the slow, clumsy, and cumbersome movements of an administrative machine which has become topheavy through overgrowth, and inexpert through isolation.

Indian work in the field needs the prompt action on the field of an ever-present, alert, and sympathetic human body, brain, and heart, unhampered by perfunctory dictation of distant officials (oftentimes clerks), who, however able, can not grasp the issues of local emergencies. Each bonded superintendent should be a local executive in the full sense of the word with discretion limited only by reasonable business regulations designed to bring about the best and quickest results according to the approved experience of successful business affairs.

He should be the one to submit to Congress a report of his work and its needs which should not be left to languish through la tendents I have met who would be unable to measure up to the needed standards of ability and efficiency, and those few could be easily replaced.

Investigation will prove, I am sure, that the Indian missions conducted as here suggested discount the Government agencies in economy and equal them in efficiency.

The reduction in overhead expense in the Washington office and central warehouse alone would justify the change.

From association and contact with the Indian I have become convinced that his treatment by the Government is one of continued error heaped upon initial mistake. Originally segregated upon reservations in order to insure the safety of the whites who were thinly settled in outlying territory, the continuation of such a policy after the full attainment of its purposes has operated to delay the development, the amalgamation, and the civilization of the Indians in the fulfillment of their manifest destiny. This proposition is proved by the undeniable fact that those Indians who have cut loose from the Government have progressed far ahead of those who are still in serfdom as its wards.

This serfdom is a greater reproach to this Nation than was the slavery of the negro. The tenure of the title to his lands, and the holding of his funds by the Government, are sometimes used to coerce him into a compliance with Government requirements, thus sapping independence and undermining his character. Therefore, if there be decadence in the manhood of the old Indians thus treated the Government is responsible, and the Government owes support to those Indians it has ruined and education to their children to keep them from being ruined also. Its activities should stop there. The very plan of the Indian Office to encourage industry among the Indians by giving a few favored individuals the use of reimbursable funds without interest is an encouragement in the continuation of unbusinessilke methods.

Everywhere there are capable and competent Indians who ought to be Interest is an encouragement in the continuation of unbusinessilke methods.

Everywhere there are capable and competent Indians who ought to be free and independent citizens to-day, but usually the office keeps them chained to their stationary cotribal members.

The proud, sensitive, high-strung Indian often feels that hope for him and his lies not on this side of the grave.

The young and middle-aged adult Indians should be given their land and money and made citizens of America, and citizenship should be conferred on the minors as fast as they reach maturity.

If any squander their heritage it will be no more than our white citizens do and usually the school of adversity alone confers a valuable civic education.

Turn such Indians loose now under some well-considered plan and they, humanity, and civilization will soon be the gainers.

The office at Washington tends to unify the Indian problem, whereas each reservation and tribe offers a clear, separate, and distinct problem in itself, and the solution of one by no means involves the solution of the other. How may this Government pose as a potential solver of the Philippine problem when it has failed and is falling with its own Indians?

The emancipated Cherokees of North Carolina and Oneidas of Wisconsin have done more for themselves than the Government has done for any Indian still enslaved under its wardship.

The commissioner's desire appears to be to uplift the Indians through the slow processes of governmental administration. He can not do so by such wornout shibboleths as "save the babies" while clinging to archaic administrative methods that block the well being and progress of the potential parents of the babies, and while transferring utterly unworthy employees from one reservation to another, in place of purging the service by their dismissal. Such a task is too great for him or any other human, for it is based upon an unfit foundation.

VIOLATION OF STATE LAWS.

For six months I have called attention to the probable fact that Indian Office school regulations were directly causing the violation of the child-labor laws of the States, but I have had no word of recognition of the matter. Will it be allowed to fall by default?

These reforms in the interests of our native Americans can not be properly effected from the inside. Therefore, I appeal to you men in high place to help solve them from the outside and to allow this thing to remain no longer a reproach to the Nation.

Congress should provide boards of efficiency experts to study the various Government bureaus and displace their old, cumbersome, expensive methods with proven modern business rules and regulations. The handicaps encountered by England in a time of stress should warn America. Herein might be effected a saving of millions and a wonderful increase in the efficient dispatch of all public business. My severance from the service is voluntary on my part, partly from a feeling of hopelessness in going after real, progressive reform through the heavy machinery of the Indian Office. If field workers could talk for publication as I know they feel in the main, my points would be overwhelmingly sustained. As a rule they are faithful workers, and distressingly underpaid.

The reasons for my conclusions may be found in the facts and details in my official reports which should be open to the public, which are susceptible of proof and have never been excepted to by the office though often of grave importance.

Entering the Indian Service in the belief that the Indian Office was designed and conducted as a benefaction to the race, I am leaving it convinced that it is the Indian's "Old Man of the Sea," who will try to cling around his neck in a strangle hold forever.

This letter is given to the public because to do so seems to me to be a public duty, and because essentially the same statements made officially have had no official reply.

Permit me again to state that my criticisms are of methods and not men, and my hope the welfare of a race. The American people should give the Indian problem their attention.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. Gibbes, Formerly Inspector Indian Service, U. S. A., Columbia.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, that was an honest inspector whose conscience would not permit him to remain in the service. If other inspectors were to tell the true conditions, except in confidence perhaps, they would be in fear of losing their positions.

I have here [exhibiting] a press book and a great many reports on Indian affairs, letters written to the department by a former inspector, which told the truth, which narrated conditions as they were. This was in the time of President McKinley's administration, and that inspector was dismissed from the service for meddling in affairs which were of a nature too tender for the bureau to listen to from a subordinate. That inspector was W. J. McConnell, ex-governor of Idaho. Any man who looks into the condition of the affairs of the Indians, or who will go among them and see it and listen to their statements, and will check against them, will find that the same deplorable condition is pretty general throughout the country. Their lands are leased without their permission, and they have no voice in such affairs. They are in many instances forbidden to hold councils with one another so as to come to an agreement as to the proper handling They are often, as I said the other day, forof their affairs. bidden to visit with one another, even with their own relatives in different parts of the same reservation; and in some instances they are jailed if they do visit with them without a written permit. I have one of those written permits in my possession.

There are Indians in this city to-day who are here to counsel with the Senate committee on the management of their affairs and the disposition of their property, who told me confidentially that they dared not tell us the facts as they exist; that they are in fear that they will be punished if they do; but they have asked that we of the committee bring it about in such manner that they will be compelled to state the truth as in a court, and then they will disclose to the committee the conditions of want and of suffering of their people. The Indian is held as a ward; his property is managed by the Indian Bureau as his or her guardian. The Indian may not buy or sell or move from his location without the consent of that bureau; he may not, in many instances, live in the old tepee, which was really a sanitary building, and which could be moved from place to place, away from insanitary conditions, but he is compelled to live in a hovel of one room, many such hovels being without windows, for the reason that the Indian has not the money to buy glass; and if he had, it would be too cold to live in in winter. little box house, not a frame building, under conditionsit merely proves the Indians' enormous original vitality, that they are not all dead, that they have not died long since.

I will say-and sometimes these things are really laughablethat I was on one reservation where they were civilizing one Indian, among many others, and educating him. He had an allotment up in the mountains and he wanted to farm it, and made a request of the Indian Bureau, through the superintendent, for some farming implements. They answered his prayer by presenting him with four bales of barbed wire and a set of harness. Think of it! Think of going to farming, setting up a home on a farm armed with four bales of barbed wire and a set of harness, with no team, no plow, or anything else with which to work the ranch. His place was 35 miles from the agency; he could not carry the barbed wire on his back, and so he got one of the neighbors to carry it within about 11 miles of his place. The set of harness he hung up on the ridgepole on the outside of the cabin, as there was not room for it inside. That was the effort of the bureau to make a farmer of him; and right there we left him. I assume that he still has the barbed wire and that the harness probably has gotten into a pretty bad state of decay by this time. That was an individual instance,

The Indian Bureau entered into a scheme of raising cattle and in community herds— Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LANE, I yield. Mr. GRONNA. I should like to know if this Indian of whom the Senator from Oregon speaks was located on one of the irrigated reservations?

Mr. LANE. He was located on one of the irrigated reserva-

However, I desire to say, in justice to the Indian Bureau, and it is due to Senators from those States where large reclamation plants have been put in to say, that after you have established an irrigation or a reclamation system and leave it to the Indian to select his allotment, the land to be reclaimed lying on the level plains below the mountains is a place where the mountain Indians do not like to live. They like to be off up the stream, near the timber, near the headwaters of the stream. They do not, as a rule, select the more valuable allotments, but they take in preference those nearer the timber and where the game used to be.

This Indian was on one of those allotments well up into the mountains which had a stream flowing through it, and which could have been irrigated, but he could not make a farmer of himself with four bales of barbed wire and a set of harness. Anyone who has ever farmed would know how ridiculous that would be; and it would seem to him as if the superintendent had been playing a joke on him and had been guilty of an ironic treatment of his needs.

But take one of the other larger reservations, or take any one of them where they have issued cattle to the Indians. bought a herd for one tribe—a tribal herd, as they call it—the I. D. herd, the Indian Department herd. On this reservation they have now about 15,000 head of cattle.

This statement has been made to me by Indians who live on the reservation, and I assume that it is accurate, for they are usually a truthful people. Their lands, consisting of hundreds of thousands of acres of good grass lands, are leased to cattlemen, who range their cattle and sheep upon them. Under the agreement with the lessee the Indians must in preference sell the Indian hay on the reserve to the lessee who is ranging his cattle on the reserve. The lessee pays for it, or has been paying for it during this winter, at prices ranging from four to five dollars a ton, and the lessees have the first bid on it. the reserve, across the line, hay of the same sort sells for from $8 to $18 a ton, but it is too far for the Indians to haul it, and so the price is set and the measurement is made by the lessee. If incidentally the Indians' barbed-wire fence gets clipped some night, and the herd, consisting perhaps of 500 or 800 or 900 in a bunch, wander through the opening, very naturally the Indians will have no hay to sell, and when the lessee comes around to buy the cattle have already carried the hay off inside of them and it can not be measured. [Laughter.] The Indian, therefore, has nothing to sell, but the hay has gone to the lessee just the same and at a disastrous price to the Indian.

They tell me they have not been able to sell much of their hay to the bureau, but the bureau purchases hay elsewhere and pays a larger price for it. In other words, the Indian must sell his hay at the lowest possible price, while for the maintenance of his share of the community herd he is made to pay the highest price for hay. As a matter of fact, the cattle on that reservation are not on the reservation or even in the State at this time, but have been driven entirely out of the State. They had to be driven out of the State to keep them from starving to death, and they are now over in an adjoining State and not upon the reservation, for the reason that there is no grass upon which to subsist them, while at the same time thousands upon thousands—altogether 100,000—of the cattle of the lessees are ranging on the grass of the Indians, on their lands, at a remunera-tion to the Indians of, say, 10 cents an acre. The outlanders graze their herds on the Indian lands, which forces the Indians to rent grazing lands off the reserve, and even outside the State. This transaction is a good example of Indian Bureau business management. That is not an exception. There are other reservations

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how much per capita does it require to take care of the Indians?

Mr. LANE. I suppose, as to the majority of them, about 10 cents per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I mean including administration expenses and everything else, how much per capita does it cost?

Mr. LANE. We spend annually about $11,000,000 on them.

Mr. OVERMAN. What would that be per capita, according to the number of Indians?

Mr. LANE. Well, I have never figured it out; but the appropriations amount to between ten and eleven million dollars, and there are, say, 300,000 Indians, most of whom are denied any subsistence, for the reason that it is the theory of the bureau that the Indian must be made to become self-supporting. That would be a laudable purpose if the Indian were allowed to support himself; but he is restricted so that he has no opportunity

If you will look through the items in the bill providing for support, maintenance, and education of the Indians, you will find appropriations for balcksmiths and for one thing and another; and if you will check the figures over, you will find in many instances eight or ten thousand dollars for salaries, and, as in an item I quoted a while ago, allowances for subsistence of $150 or $400 or $500. That is the way it goes. This bill is not for the Indian; this bill is neither for his support nor for his subsistence nor for his civilization, in the main. It is for any and all other purpose under high heaven than these.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LANE. I yield. Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Oregon is very familiar with Indian matters, and has been familiar with them all his life. I notice by the Congressional Record that up to 1915 there have been appropriated in Indian appropriation bills about $220,000,000.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon allow me to say a word there?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator if he refers to the statement made by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas]? Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will answer that I do not know, as I have not been able to be in the Chamber during the debate on this bill until to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can answer that question. It was the Senator from North Dakota who gave me the information upon which I based the statement that something like $250,000,000 has been expended in the last 20 years. I may have misquoted the Senator, but that is my understanding of what he said to me one day before going away.

Mr. CLAPP. That is evidently a mistake, because the present bill, which I think is the largest one, only carries about $12,000,000, and 10 years ago I do not think the Indian appropriation bill ran over $6,000,000. So it would not do to take the present bill and multiply it by 20 as the basis of the expenditures of 20 years. More than that, it must be borne in mind that a very large proportion of the amounts appropriated have been to provide for the payment of sums due under treaties and treaty obligations that could not be charged properly to the care and maintenance of the Indians. When the Senator from Colorado made that statement I was disposed to call attention to it, but did not

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, the figures which I have include the amount carried in the Indian appropriation bill each year since 1891. The totals have been added together, making an aggregate sum of over $218,000,000. That does not include the 1915 appropriation bill, I believe; but I think the Senator from Minnesota will find the figures absolutely correct. I tried to make it correct, and I think he will ascertain the figures to be accurate.

What I wanted to ask the Senator from Oregon was how much real good he feels that the appropriation of that enormous amount of money has been to the Indians generally?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon; was he addressing me?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. LANE. I have just been reading an item concerning the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche Indians, on page 218 of the hearings of the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the other House. The Apaches and Kiowas have—I do not remember the exact figures—in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. We appropriated, out of their funds for 1917, $25,000, and an analysis of the expenditure shows the following:

Salaries and wages	$19, 314, 10
Traveling expenses	368. 29
Transportation of supplies	56. 34
Heat, light, and power (service) Telegraph and telephone service	545, 80 340, 08
Subsistence supplies	8. 36

It would be difficult to find a better illustration of the workings of the system than that. It may be a little extreme, and I do not want to be unjust, but that is somewhere about the proportionate rate and the proportionate amount of benefit and the proportionate amount of civilization and subsistence which the Indians get.

The bill is a humbug, if that language is parliamentary; but the appropriations and expenditures which our friends ought to criticize and make themselves merry with are the fixed and standing appropriations which give power to a certain bureau to execute their will, if you please, on the Indians. That bureau refuses to give the Indian the right to sue for either their rights or property in a court of justice; they can not employ such an attorney without the consent of the bureau, and that attorney must be one who meets with the bureau's approbation. terest of the Indian is not considered in the matter at all; and what condition does that place the Indian in? It allows the defendant, the bureau, to select the attorney who is to prosecute it in court.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—— The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LANE, I yield. Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I hold no brief for the Indian Office, but the reason the attorney has to be approved by the department is because Congress has so decreed.

Mr. LANE. But Congress acted on the request of the bureau. Mr. CLAPP. The Indian Office has no power to authorize a That can be done by Congress alone, and, in the main, I have not found the Indian Office hostile to bills authorizing Indian tribes to institute proceedings when they have claims against the Government. It does seem to me that we ought not to blame the Indian Office for not doing things which it has no authority to do.

Mr. LANE. I want to say for the Senator's information that I have found the bureau doing that identical thing. It is a matter of record-and I will send and get it for the Senator if he is anxious to see it, and call his attention to it later-that they do object to the employment of attorneys and forbid the Indians or discourage them from bringing suit on just claims before the Court of Claims, and at times, I am reliably in-formed, refuse to pay the expenses of attorneys in cases where they attempt to do their full duty by the Indians. That is matter of common knowledge among attorneys, and must have come to the attention of the Senator, it seems to me, he having been on the committee many years.

Mr. CLAPP. It has, but the other fact has come to the Senator's attention, that Congress in the main lays down these restrictions.

Mr. LANE. But at the request and solicitation of the bureau. It has been done since I have been here.

Mr. CLAPP. Not in all cases.
Mr. LANE. In mighty nearly all of them.
Mr. CLAPP. It is very easy to find fault with the bureau, but they have to be governed by the laws that we pass.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, the only object I had in asking the question I did of the Senator from Oregon was to illustrate, as I understand, the immense amount of money that has been spent by this Government for a purpose that I do not believe to be of much benefit to the Indian. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon if he thinks that there will be any improvement in the Indian management as long as the present system exists?

Mr. LANE. In my opinion there will be no improvement.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The statement made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] with regard to what the Indian Office has done is correct, so far as I know, and that is the very question that I am going to try to raise on this floor a little later on, to see if Congress will not recognize what they are doing, will not recognize that they are responsible largely for the condition of the American Indian to-day by passing these things over and ignoring conditions as they are.

Mr. LANE. I would reply that Congress—and I have said so at all times—is responsible for it; that it is responsible for creating a creature which flouts the laws it makes; that it has given power to its own creature to carry on the affairs of the Indians in a manner which means ruin to the Indians and an immense and unnecessary expense to the people of this country, which will eventually wipe the Indians out of existence, which hangs on their backs, as that inspector said whose letter was read awhile ago, like the old man of the sea, and I think will never let go as long as it can bring influence to bear on this body and the other one to continue its existence and its strangle hold on those people; that no good can come out of it; that no good ever did come out of it; that it is the wrong system.

The Indian, to begin with, was a man who was used to the utmost freedom of action, and went as far over the hills and plains as he dared go or until he met resistance from a hostile We locked him up, or, rather, we fenced him in on a tribe. limited area of land, given to him only for the reason that it was of no value to the whites-and, in our opinion, it never would be of value to us or anybody else-and also in order to keep him where he could be guarded from attacking the whites in warfare; and the Indian never will come out of it with any advantage to him.

We give blanket grants to our creature—this bill contains many of them—to be exercised under such rules and restrictions as may be willed by the Secretary of the Interior, who receives his information from the Indian Bureau under him.

I have a bill which I will present after a while which was submitted by the Indians themselves for freeing them from these conditions; but we can never free them so long as we keep tying them into the existing conditions and adding power to the hand which holds them within its inefficient grasp.

Referring to the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota that the Secretary of the Interior is largely governed by the acts of Congress which prevent the employment of attorneys I will say that that is true; but the bureau always seeks the power. The other statement that he grants any freedom in the Indians' choice of attorneys in going to the Court of Claims with just claims is a matter about which I have my doubts. I say that for the reason that I presented here the other day a bill which allowed a certain tribe which thought it had been damaged to the tune of millions-and it has, and I believe it can be proven-and the Secretary made a report adverse to the employment of such attorneys in that case. told by a reputable attorney that as high as $50,000,000 of Indian property was wasted and lost, too, and more is to come. They can not have an attorney; and here are the Crow Indians, whose lands were leased illegally and allowed to go to private persons for nothing to fortunate lessees without a cent of return, either to the Indians or to the Government; and they want to Can they do it? Will you help them and support it? Will you help me in getting a bill through?

Mr. CLAPP. Why, Mr. President, I think it is one of the grotesque spectacles of our times that we assume the rôle of guardian, relegate the Indian to the rôle of ward, and then refuse the Indian access to a tribunal of our own creation.

Mr. LANE. I do, too. Mr. CLAPP. I have no sympathy with that.

Mr. LANE. I am with the Senator on that.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 6, after the name "Montana," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance and operation, including repairs, of the irrigation systems on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, $30,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, was the last amendment acted on? I have not heard any ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is informed that the amendment was agreed to when his predecessor, the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], was in the chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the amendment on line 6, page 36, agreed to? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment increasing the appropriation from $20,000 to $30,000?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was, while the present occupant of the chair was here.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose that is in line with all the other increases, is it not?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that was estimated for at $30,000. After considerable discussion, the committee agreed to it at $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah wish to make further objection to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is no use in doing so.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 37, to strike out: For the support and civilization of Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas, and other indigent and homeless Indians in the State of Montana, including pay of employees, $5,000.

For the support and civilization of the Rocky Boy Band of Chippewas, and other indigent and homeless Indians in the State of Montana, including pay of employees, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 2, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 2, to insert:
That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $22,400 from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, in the purchase of lands embraced in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, described as lots 3 and 5, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, section 34, township 32 north, range 13 west, together with all the improvements thereon, in consideration of the relinquishment by the allottees of all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands and improvements, and of their right to select lieu land under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855, 859), and the release of all their claims whatsoever against the United States or the Black-feet Tribe of Indians by reason of said lands being required for reservoir purposes in connection with the irrigation system on the aforesaid Indian reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a member of the committee asked me, if he should not be in the Chamber when this item was reached, to inquire in relation to the item and ask whether it was estimated for, whether there were any hearings in the House upon it, and whether there were any hearings in the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can the Senator in charge of the bill supply the information?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. He stated that he knew nothing about it until he saw it printed in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I venture to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Utah. The last appropriation bill carried this item.

Mr. SMOOT. It went out in conference, then?

Mr. WALSH. It went out in conference; and the justification for the item is found in the report of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. At page 19. Mr. WALSH. At page 19. Mr. SMOOT. The report on this bill, or the report on the bill a year ago?
Mr. WALSH. This was on this item.

Mr. SMOOT. A year ago?

Mr. WALSH. In the bill of a year ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator read for us what the justification is?

Mr. WALSH. I will read what is said here. This is a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee by the Secretary of the Interior under date of May 26, 1916, as follows:

Mr. WALSH. I will read what is said here. This is a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee by the Secretary of the Interior under date of May 26, 1916, as follows:

My Dean Senatoric Receipt is acknowledged of your favor of May 10 regarding Senate bill 5912, Introduced by Senator Watani, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, to authorize the expenditure of $22,400 in the purchase of lands, together with the improvements thereon, in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, allotted on the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., which was needed in connection with the construction of an irrigation system.

It appears that the lands in question were selected by George W. Cook attracted thereon a sawmill and other valuable improvements.

An order withdrawing these lands for the Lower Two Medicine Lake Reservoir was prepared and approved on January 21, 1911.

Subsequently the claimants brought suit in the United States District Court for the District of Montana, and on April 2, 1914, said courtenered a decree in the case, holding that the selections of Cook and La Breche were valid of date not later than July, 1909, and that the order and owners in fee alms was void and that the claimants as allotted and owners in fee alms was void and that the claimants as allotted and owners in fee alms was void and that the claimants as allotted thereunder. This decree reads, as to both George W. Cook and David La Breche, as follows:

"And that he was, at the time of commencement of this suit, the owner of the said premises and entitled to the occupancy of the same without interference on the part of said defendants or anyone acting in their behalf, and that he is entitled to letters patent for said premises, as provided by law in such cases; that the said plaintiffs premises, as provided by law in such cases; that the said plaintiffs of the month of the said premises and content of the fact that one of the items was a purchase of land for which specific authority of law is required, it was found impossible legally mended that they be given lands in addition to money. By reason of the peculiar value of these lands this would be a considerable item. There was testimony introduced showing that for chalet purposes the lands in question are worth from $50 to $150 per agre.

For the reasons herein indicated I am heartily in favor of the passage of this legislation in order that a controversy of long standing may be terminated.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Now, I ought to correct myself, Mr. President. The item was contained in the appropriation bill, and passed the Senate, but went out in conference, the House conferees saying that they objected to a claim of this character on the general appropriation bill. Accordingly, a separate bill was introduced, and the letter which I have just read is the letter of the Secretary in response to an inquiry made with respect to that bill. bill then came before the Senate and was passed by the Senate and went to the House, and is now pending in the House; but we have not been able to make any progress whatever upon it. Notwithstanding assurances from members of the conference committee that they had no objection whatever to the item except that they objected to its being put upon the general appropriation bill, no relief has been secured, and so we ask that it go again to the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to expend the sum of $22,400 from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana. I understand that the irrigation fund for the Blackfeet Reservation has been expended. They are appropriating additional money in this bill; but does the Senator believe that it is a good thing to take $22,000 out of that irrigation fund when it will take all but $2,600 of the fund appropriated this year for irrigation purposes?

Mr. WALSH. The Secretary has advised that this is the thing most needed to be done with the money. I might say to the Senator from Utah that this story, if it were told in detail, would furnish material for another novel by Helen Hunt Jackson. These Indians, after having been deprived of their lands by the action of the department, were obliged to go into court to assert their rights. They did so, and the court adjudicated that the land belonged to them and that the Government had no right to take it. The Government finally acquiesced in that, and said, "We will pay you for the land," and an arrangement was entered into by which they were to be paid the sums speci-fied in this amendment, after long negotiation and after two hearings, testimony being taken at some considerable length. These people are out of the use of their land; their sawmill property has been destroyed, was destroyed seven years agoseven years ago !- and they have been pleading, pleading, pleading from that day to this for reimbursement.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment. It looks to me like a farce to appropriate $25,000 for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation in one part of the bill and then, a few pages further on in the bill, to take away $22,400 of that appropriation for paying two Indians. It seems to me that the proper thing to do, if the Blackfeet Indians owe this $22,400, would be to make a direct appropriation to the parties and take it out of the Blackfeet fund, if they have any, or, if they have not, to make it reimbursable.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps I ought to make a little further explanation, for the information of the Senator from Utah.

The land in question, to which these Indians have trust patent, is at the lower end of Lower Two Medicine Lake. A part of the irrigation project is now actually on the land. A part of the project is a dam constructed upon their land for the purpose of reservoiring the waters that come down for use in the project, the reservoir created flooding these lands, so that the Government has actually taken the lands as a part of the project. It is not a claim, the Senator will understand, quite separate and apart from this project. The money is used for the purpose of acquiring the necessary land in connection with the project.

Mr. SMOOT. I am glad the Senator gave me the explanation, because that does, in a way at least, account for the land itself, or the destruction of the land, being coupled up with appropriations for an irrigation system.

Mr. WALSH. I quite agree with the Senator that it would be idle to make an appropriation of $25,000 for an irrigation project and then use a lot of it for some other purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that kind of legislation did not look right

Mr. WALSH. That is the situation. Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Montana if this is not in the nature of a claim on the part of the parties named in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it is not just exactly in the nature of a claim, because the Government desires to acquire title to this land which belongs to the Indians. The Government has actually taken possession of it, but it has no title to the land. It desires by this method to acquire the title to the land as a part of the irrigation project; so that really it is not in the nature of a claim such as would ordinarily arise.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, the Government, or those who are building this irrigation project, have already taken possession of the land, and this appropriation is for the purpose of paying Mr. Cook and Mr. La Breche. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is right. The Government has taken possession.

Mr. GRONNA. The reason why I am asking the Senator for full information is this: The Committee on Indian Affairs agreed unanimously, I think, that no claim exceeding $100 should be put on this appropriation bill; and I ask the chairman of the committee why this claim was put on the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the question, I wish to state that when the matter was presented to the committee that very question was raised, and it was ascertained not to be a claim against the Treasury of the United States, but, if a claim at all, a claim against an Indian tribe; and it is reimbursable to the Federal Government, hence not in the strict legislative sense a claim against the Treasury. That undoubtedly is the reason why it was not subject to the rule of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. It would, however, be a claim against the Indian funds, which of course are under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, it was determined that the rule did not apply.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. Mr. WALSH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that there is a very considerable appropriation made here for the relief of Gov. Johnson, but in the same way—not out of the Treasury, but out of the tribal funds of one of the tribes in Oklahoma. I will call the attention of the Senator to it.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know that I shall object to it, but it is news to me; I did not know that it was in the bill. I want to ask the Senator from Montana if he has any objection to letting this matter go over for to-day, so as to give me an opportunity to look into it? It was not considered when I was in the committee. I was not present at the time.

Mr. WALSH. I could not offer any objection at all to a request of that kind coming from the Senator from North Dakota, but the item has twice received the approbation of the Senate upon thorough consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be glad to refer back to it to-morrow; but I should like to have an opportunity to look into it, because have not looked into it before.

Mr. WALSH. I merely say this to the Senator: I have no objection to his request if he feels that he would like to take the time.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I would like to.
Mr. WALSH. But we may be able to finish the bill to-day.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the desire of the Senator that this item go over, then?

Mr. WALSH. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the item will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 38, to change the number of the section from "10" to "11," and in line 26, after "$2,500," to strike out "for purchase and erection of steel water tank, $2,400; in all, $81,200" and insert "for employees' quarters, $7,120; for purchase and erection of steel water tank, $2,400; in all, $88,320," so as to make the section read. section read:

SEC. 11. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $7,500; for addition to hospital, $2,500; for employees' quarters, $7,120; for purchase and erection of steel water tank, $2,400; in all, $88,320.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. In line 3, page 39, after "$2,400," I move to insert:

For the purchase of additional land, $41,600.

Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee particularly. They have at this reservation a farm of 320 acres which has been in successful operation for quite a number of years, and I understand that it is one of the most profitable and promising investments that the Government has a recommend in promising investments that the Government has a recommend in the contract of the con ernment has ever made in any way at any Indian reservation. I have here a letter from the superintendent, Mr. Davis, in regard to several items, but I want to read what he says in particular about the acquisition of additional land. He has not enough land. He needs more land. As to the land in that vicinity, while I am not personally acquainted with the particular land that he has in view I bear that the land that he has in view, I know that the land there is very valuable, and is increasing in value every year. He says in his letter:

increasing in value every year. He says in his letter:

It is conceded by all that this institution has bred and now owns the greatest dairy herd, the finest swine herd, the best Percheron horses to be found in the possession of any Government institution. No Indian school or agency farm of similar size produces greater quantities of grain and vegetables. The only drawback to the farm is its size. It is too small. I do not at this time recall a single nonreservation school that has not a larger farm. Some of them not so large in pupil capacity own two or three times as much. More land is much needed. This school is spendidly located to teach and demonstrate agriculture. More land is required in order to produce more food supplies for pupils and stock, thereby reducing the running expenses. A haif section lying just north of the school can be purchased for $41,600—

That Mr. President would be $130 an acre—

That, Mr. President, would be $130 an acre-

The school would in 10 years make enough net profit to pay for the farm after meeting all operating expenses, such as farmer's salary, hire of other help, etc., to operate it.

He says, further along:

Buying a farm is altogether unlike appropriating money for construction of new buildings. The building has no market value, while the farm will continue to enhance in value. Money appropriated to buy a farm for this school would be the same as advancing money to a certain tribe that would reimburse it. There would be more assurance of getting the money back. A farm here is as good as gold reserve stored in the United States Treasury.

Mr. President, I have here a letter written by a member of the House Committee on Indian Affairs. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it, except to say that he speaks of several other things. He has been there, although he is not a resident of that State. He was there and visited this farm, went over this reservation, and he-

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a few questions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. I certainly do. Mr. ASHURST. I should like to ask the area proposed to

Mr. NORRIS. Three hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. ASHURST. I want the Senator to understand that I am not at all hostile to his amendment-in fact, I am rather inclined to favor it-but the bill has been subjected, and properly so, I think-I have no objection-to a galling, raking fire of criticism because of the increases that the Senate committee has made. I am not objecting to the criticism we have sustained; but I believe at the present time, in view of the extreme criticisms that have been made, that the Senator's amendment would not be agreed to.

Let me suggest to the Senator that I am willing to vote for the proposal in this form: Let the Senator propose an amendment, "That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the necessity, suitability, and feasibility of purchasing this farm and make a report to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1917." I believe that ought to be done rather than purchase out of hand, without further investigation, a farm costing $41,000. I make that suggestion,

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I realize what has been done and the anxiety of the Senator to have the appropriations kept down as much as possible. I agree with the Senator that that is the proper thing to do; but I have not in the amendment provided that this particular land shall be purchased. I have not provided that we must buy this or that land or must pay this price. I would not want to do that myself, although I have an abundance of information here in the shape of letters from men who live in that vicinity, and who know, who say that the price is cheap. In a general way I know that, although I think I have never seen the land. know the locality where it is, and I know that land there is selling as high as that.

I presume the bureau could make this investigation without any appropriation. I would have no objection to modifying the proposition so that they would not have to purchase. I think under the language as I had it they would not have to pur-chase any land if they did not want it, but leaving it to their discretion to purchase. There is nothing in the amendment, I will say, that would require them to purchase this particular land. I only mentioned it because in the letter of the superintendent he calls attention to this particular land, and in another part of the letter he says unless it is purchased pretty soon undoubtedly the land can not be obtained at that price.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be quite true. Another thing I fear is that the conferees on the bill are going to have a good deal of difficulty in composing differences because of increased items, and if an amendment should be adopted and I am on the conference I shall try in every honorable and proper way to secure its adoption by the conferees, but I am inclined to doubt at this session whether it could be done. I would not want the Senator to feel that he had been treated in bad faith.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I would not be. I have the utmost faith that the Senator would try to retain it, and I hope the Senator will let it go on the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it go on.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator interrupted me I was about to call attention to a statement made by a member of the House committee who may be on the conference. He called attention to the fact that this ought to be done, and it ought

Mr. ASHURST. Let it go into conference.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The Supergraphy On pages 29, line 2, chappe the total by

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 3, change the total by striking out "$88,320" and make it read "$129,920."

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 9, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$50,430; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; for new dairy barn and equipment, $5,000; for purchase of live stock, $2,000; in all, $67,430," and insert "$52,100; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; for additions to devolve the stock of the st for additions to dormitories, $30,000; for new dairy barn and equipment, $5,000; for purchase of live stock, $2,000; in all, $99,100," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 290 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., including pay of superintendent, $52,100; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; for additions to dormitories, $30,000; for new dairy barn and equipment, $5,000; for purchase of live stock, $2,000; in all, $99,100.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the committee made a slight raise in this item of $30,000 to build dormitories and $5,000 for dairy barn and equipment.

I want to say that in the last Indian appropriation bill there was an item allowed by the Senate committee of $25,000 for these dormitories, and it passed the Senate and went into conference. In conference it was not agreed to. I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say that in conversation with various conferees they stated that had the facts been called to their attention while they were in the first conference this item would have been allowed.

I want to read. In the first place, I will read from the report of the House committee hearings. I will state that this was estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is no increase upon the estimate. Here is the estimate made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

The hearings include the estimate of the commissioner, and in justification the commissioner continues as follows:

In the State of Nevada there are nearly 8,000 Indians, of which number 2,819 are under the jurisdiction of six superintendents. For the Indians under these six superintendents there are reservations or tracts of land. For the 5,000 Indians or more under a special agent, with headquarters at Reno, Nev., there is no land except such as is to be purchased under the $15,000 appropriation contained in the Indian act for this fiscal year and such homesteads as the Indians may have acquired, and which, it appears, are worthless for agricultural purposes. Water is the all essential for cultivation of crops and stock raising, and items for the irrigation system are also included.

The total income of the Indians in that State for 1915 was $266,223, of which more than half was obtained by day labor. The value of the crops was but $66,366, and the value of the stock sold $22,594. The Indians cultivated only about 10,000 acres, and this was done by 777 Indians. But $150 was received from the leasing of land for agricultural purposes and $4,755 for grazing purposes. There has been a gradual increase both in the number of persons engaged in agriculture as well as the acreage.

It will be necessary under the circumstance.

gradual increase both in the number of persons engaged in agriculture as well as the accreage.

It will be necessary under the circumstances to continue the supervision of the affairs of these Indians, to furnish many with rations, to supply equipment in many instances, in order that the Indians may start or continue their activities.

Now, getting down to this particular increase in the appropriation over the House appropriation, because the appropriation contained in this bill is not in excess of the estimates but is in accordance with the estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, reading from the bottom of page 190, we find this comment by the representative of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Affairs:

The support fund of this school is increased from $50,430 in 1917 to $52,100 in 1918, an increase of $1,670, to provide for the support and education of 10 additional pupils.

The fund for general repairs and improvements is increased from $8,000 in 1917 to $19,000 in 1918, to meet urgent needs. Many of the buildings are very old and in a dilapidated condition. Two of the cottages used as employees' quarters were built in 1859 and 1876, respectively. The main buildings was constructed in 1890, and several of the important buildings were completed between 1890 and 1894. The school plant has therefore been in use for many years and requires constant care at increased expense. The heating system requires new bollers, radiators, conduits, etc. An addition to the domestic-science cottage is necessary; also additional quarters for employees. The advanced cost of all classes of building materials and labor and the extensive general repairs required necessitate the increased estimate.

A very large Indian population in the locality is without school facilities; to meet this need it is desired to increase the capacity of the dormitories, and the sum of $30,000 is estimated for this purpose. Provision has been made for irrigation of the school farm, and the school will provide thorough instruction in farming much of certain classes of subsistence supplies, including dairy products. A dairy barn is a necessity, and is estimated for in the sum of $5,000. The required dairy cattle are asked in the estimate of $2,000 for the purchase of live stock.

That is an increase of over $30,000 for that school. The current Indian appropriation act carries an appropriation of $62,430.

These improvements are very much needed at that school. We are not able to take care of all of the children in Nevada with the present school facilities, and we have a very energetic superintendent, who is trying to build up that school to a proper standard, and we would like very much to have these improvements which are requested.

Then going on further in the heavings we find the following:

Then, going on further in the hearings, we find the following:

Then, going on further in the hearings, we find the following:

The Chairman, I see that you have raised the number of pupils from 290 to 300 in that school.

Mr. Meritt. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. How many Indian children have you there now in daily attendance? I would like to know the necessity for this increase. What is the present enrollment?

Mr. Meritt. They have an enrollment there of 273.

The Chairman. Well, you are entitled to 290. Now, what explanation have you for wanting the number raised to 300?

Mr. Meritt. We have made certain repairs at that school which will enable us to increase the capacity.

The Chairman. You want to increase it only 10. Would the increased benefit be sufficient to justify the increase of appropriation?

Mr. Meritt. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. All right.

That covers the report and hearings as given before the House committee.

Now, then, I want to read a letter from Mr. James B. Royce, the superintendent of that Indian school:

JUSTIFICATION.

JUSTIFICATION.

I am now building sleeping porches on the large girls' building, which will equip us to care for 50 additional pupils. There are in the State of Nevada some 600 pupils out of school and they have no place to attend, and this school should be built up to at least 500 as rapidly as possible in order that pupils now out of school may be accommodated. Since this is the only nonreservation school in the State, it naturally follows that this school should be built up. There is no question as to having the required number of pupils; the only question is to have room for them.

The amount asked for repairs and improvements is badly needed, because our buildings are all frame and have been badly neglected in the past, and it will require several years to put them in reasonably good repair. In addition to necessary repairs, we also need some minor buildings, such as coal shed, chicken houses, machine shed, hog house, etc.

At this time the small boys and small girls, numbering some 125, are quartered in what is known as the old main building. This building was erected when the school was first established, many years ago, and it is in a very bad state of repair, and the expense of putting it in good condition is prohibitive; and even if it were done the building would not then be safe as a dormitory, because in this same building are located the school dining room and kitchen and bakery, and, there fore, there are many chances of this building catching fire. In fact, since I have been here this building has been after three different times, and only by prompt action were we able to prevent it from burning. This building is frame and is about 30 years old, and should same catch fire at night it would burn very quickly and the chances are that some of the small children would be burned up before we could get them out, although we are taking every precaution against fire. Since I have been here I have placed on this building six new fire escapes.

The dining room and kitchen and bakery are not adequate to the needs of the school, and are very poorly arranged and are not what we need by any means. This entire building should be torn down and should be replaced by a new building. This new building should consist of a large commodious dining room, kitchen, and bakery on the ground floor, and on the second floor should be room for domestic science and domestic art, and also several rooms for employees, as the cook, dining room matron, and baker should have their rooms in this building.

ence and domestic art, and also several rooms for employees, as the cook, dining room matron, and baker should have their rooms in this building.

If we can secure the appropriation of $30,000 for the additions to the dormitories, it is my desire to build an addition to the large boys' dormitory and one to the large girls' dormitory and 200 girls in the large gbris' dormitory. This would increase the capacity of the school to 400 pupils. After this appropriation has been secured, then the next year we could probably secure an appropriation of about $25,000 to build the new dining room, bakery, and kitchen. When this appropriation is secured the old main building could be forn down and replaced with a new modern building. This change would make a wonderful improvement in this school and should be secured at the earliest possible date.

The $15,000 asked for the central heating plant is very essential and should be secured the coming session of Congress, if possible. At this time four large buildings have individual heating plants and all the other buildings have stoves. This is a very unsatisfactory arrangement and makes the danger from fire very great and also makes the cost of fuel much more than it would be if we had a central heating plant. If we secure this appropriation we can install a central heating plant for using oil as fuel instead of coal. I am advised by parties who use oil that it is about 50 per cent cheaper than coal and it is much more satisfactory to use in an institution of this kind, as the hauling of coal and hauling away of ashes causes us considerable labor, which is without any profit to the school or any benefit to the pupils.

At this time our dairy barn is entirely inadequate and is not up to date by any means. We should have a new dairy barn with a capacity for about 40 head of cows, because a school of this size needs a dairy hered of at least that many to furnish the proper amount of milk.

If we get an appropriation for a new dairy barn, we should then

There is no cheaper way to light tuberculosis than to use pienty of milk.

If we get an appropriation for a new dairy barn, we should then have about 10 or 15 head of first-class dairy cows. We now have 15, but several of them are very poor grade and should be sold, as they do not give sufficient milk to justify us in keeping same. Since I have been in charge of the school we have been able to get in considerable alfalfa and by another year I think that we will be able to raise sufficient alfalfa for our own use and probably enable us to properly care for 40 head of cows. We are getting land ready for alfalfa and for pasture just as fast as we can.

Our water supply here is rather limited and it is absolutely essential that we do everything possible to conserve what water we have. The soll here is sandy and authorities agree that about 35 or 40 per cent of the water is lost by carrying same in open ditches. While we have an appropriation of $4.000 this year for irrigation purposes, it is not sufficient to put in all the pipe we should have, and in addition to this fact, I would like to install one or two pumping plants to see if we could pump water to supplement the flow of the stream during the period when the water is very low.

Mr. President, I think that this appropriation is thoroughly justified. I will say that in the last Indian appropriation bill this matter was thoroughly discussed before the committee, and the committee allowed the appropriation for the dormitories the same as the committee has now done. It not only allowed it, but it came on the floor of the Senate and It was then discussed before this body just as it is being discussed now, and this body agreed to the amendment then. It went into conference, and I do not feel that I violate the confidence of the conferees when I tell you that the members of the conference on the part of the House stated that if they had known the fact at the first conference the item would have been kept in the bill.

Now, we come back to you with an estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He estimates that this sum is required. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate says it is required. The superintendent in charge of the work on the ground says it is required, and I tell you of my own personal knowledge that it is required. I know it was required long before this time. It is a crime to keep little children in the character of buildings they are living in now in the State of Nevada. They have a frame building that was built 30 years ago. The floor is sagging, the walls are breaking down. They have old stoves there for heating purposes. It has caught on fire three times in the last few years. It is a regular fire trap. It is unfit for any person on earth to live in. Yet we have begged and pleaded time area time area to be seen that they had been also beginned to be seen they are the time and time again to treat these Indians there as though they were human beings instead of animals.

I will admit that the Senate has done its part in the last appropriation bill and in this appropriation bill. I am now convinced that the House will do its part, because the House con-ferees on the last appropriation bill stated after the matter had gone into conference and been disallowed if they had known the fact that item would have been kept in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has informed the Senate as to why the appropriation of $30,000 is necessary for the building of additional dormitories. I take it for granted that there is no necessity to ask any further questions on that item, but I notice in this provision there is an increase of $1,670 for the support and education of 290 Indian pupils, including pay of superintendent. The House provided $50,430 and the Senate committee has increased it to $52,100.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. ASHURST. In line 7, page 39, the words "two hundred and ninety" before the words "Indian pupils" should be stricken out and "three hundred" inserted in accordance with the

The per capita cost is $167, and therefore in accordance with the view of the committee and its action on the matter, 300 Indian pupils should be provided for, as that is the number. It is just a typographical error in regard to the number.

Mr. SMOOT. That adds 10 Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that was the action of the committee, but there is an error there. It reads "290," when it should be "300,"

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator intend to move that amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I offer that amendment now. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, lines 7 and 8, strike out "290" and insert "300," so as to read "300 Indian pupils." Mr. ASHURST. It does not require a change in the amount.
Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that. Then the increase of $1,670 is for the extra 10 pupils?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, it costs $167 for each pupil? Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 39, line 24, to change the number of the section from "12" to "13."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 16, after "$15,000," to strike out "said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing work on the Indian highway extending from the Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup, N. Mex., on the Navajo Reservation, $15,000: Provided, That such sums shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times and places as he may deem proper, and in the employment of Indian labor as far as possible for the construction of said highway.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why that provision for the reimbursement of the $15,000 is stricken out? If the appropriation for $15,000 for continuing work on this highway is for the benefit of the Indians, then the money ought to be reimbursed, at least if we follow the policy we have pursued in reference to many of the other reservations. If it is not for the benefit of the Indians, then why should we appropriate $15,000 to apply on a public highway? We passed a bill at the last session providing for C. We passed a bill at the last session providing for Government aid to good roads, and it is supposed that that act will take care of the situation as far as Congress deems it advisable for the National Government to go.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I advert to page 82 of the Senate committee hearings wherein this matter is discussed. I read a part of the statement made before the committee:

read a part of the statement made before the committee:

Senator Gronna. There was no estimate for this.

The Chairman. No. It is discussed in the Congressional Record at page 200, the clerk says.

Mr. Meritt. If this appropriation is to be made, the commissioner is anxious it shall be a gratuity rather than a reimbursable appropriation.

The Chairman. You remember last year they asked for $54,000, the total expenses of the road, and we gave them $15,000, and thought we would give them that amount each year. Senators Shafroth and Catron argued they should have the whole sum, but the committee allowed only $15,000.

I think we ought to strike out the reimbursable feature.

Mr. Meritt. Beginning at line 23, page 33, after "$15,000," strike out down to line 2, page 34, ending with the words "credit of said Indians."

The Chairman. Yes; strike out that reimbursable feature.

Senator Curtis. You made it reimbursable last year. I am against the reimbursable feature myself.

The committee felt that the lands of these Indians should not be pledged or bound in any way to repay this amount, and so voted. There is quite a wide divergence of opinion, of course. I assume that a great many Senators take the view that in light of the facts these Indians have a large reservation upon which there is considerable coal and copper it is nothing but proper that the reimbursable features should be written in the law.

But I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that at the present time that reimbursable feature on the Navajo Reservapresent time that reimbursable leature on the Navajo Reserva-tion is only a fiction. It is only a fiction unless Congress will pass a bill providing for the opening of the mineral land, the coal lands, of these Navajos and sell or lease them. It is only a fiction, and there is no use for us to be dealing in fictions, in other words, fooling ourselves.

Mr. JONES. I find in the very next provision of the bill where $25,000 is appropriated for the building of a bridge, and it provides that it shall be reimbursable out of any money that shall come into the funds of the Navajo Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, no man living can solve the complexity and the apparent inconsistency of the views of men. A man might be willing to make an appropriation for a bridge reimbursable but have a very good reason why he would not make an appropriation for a road reimbursable.

Mr. JONES. I am not asking the the question because I am opposed to the item. I am just asking to get information. want to know why we should appropriate $15,000 for this highway. They call it an Indian highway. Is it a public road or is it for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in a moment to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall], who is more familiar with the situa-tion than I am. It is an Indian road. Mr. JONES. It is entirely on the reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. Not entirely. In the West we are a very peculiar people. We find in the West when a man comes to a raging, roaring river full of quicksands he will insist upon proceeding over a road built by the Government for the benefit of the Indians rather than going around where there is no road. Of course the white people are using it.

Mr. JONES. I have some knowledge of western lands.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator has. It is for the benefit of the Indians; but there is no reason why the white people should not use the road. They will use it, and they ought to use it.

Mr. JONES. But the Senator certainly did not understand me to suggest that the white people should not use the road built on the reservation. What I am trying to get at is whether it is primarily for the Indians and for the benefit of the Indian reservation, or whether it is part of the public highway system that is being constructed throughout the country. That is what I want to get at; and I am asking for this information, not in the spirit of criticism but for the purpose of getting light with reference to the matter.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I do not know that I can shed very much light on the subject, but I can at least make a short explanation.

The Mesa Verde National Park is a Government national park. There is a road extending from Gallup, N. Mex., to the Mesa Verde National Park, which, as I say, is a Government reservation. A portion of this road extends through the Navajo Reservation along a highway now used by the Navajos. The object of this appropriation is to construct a road through a portion of the Navajo Reservation, the road aside from the Navajo Reservation having been largely constructed by the people and the counties of New Mexico as a public enterprise of that State, the Government doing what little it could.

The Senator from Washington will remember that the appropriations med for the good and the counties of the senator of th priations made for the good-roads system, aside from post roads, only provided for roads on forest reservations. This is not a forest reservation, but this is a national park—the Mesa Verde National Park. In going to the Mesa Verde National Park it is necessary for people to go across the Indian reservation. They follow for a portion of the distance the highway which is now followed by the Indians for their own purposes. The construction of this road will not be purely or very largely for the benefit of the Indians themselves, but it will be for the benefit of the people of the United States in reaching one of their national parks. The $15,000 which is to be spent on this portion of the road is only a very small portion of the cost of the road.

Mr. JONES. Is Gallup on the reservation?

Mr. FALL. Gallup is off the reservation, in the State of New Mexico.

Mr. JONES. How far is it from Gallup to the reservation? Mr. FALL. It is quite a distance, possibly 25 or 30 miles. Mr. JONES. How far is it across the reservation to the national park?

Mr. FALL. It is 25 or 30 miles, according to my recollection. Mr. JONES. Does the reservation come up to the line of the national park?

Mr. FALL. The national park is practically within the reservation or on the line of the reservation.

Mr. JONES. Can not this road be built under the terms of the good-roads act, which we passed at the last session?

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator refer to the national good-roads act with reference to the general public highway system?

Mr. JONES. Yes. Mr. FALL. I do not think the amounts appropriated there would be available for use on an Indian reservation. I wish the Senator could get that construction of the good-roads act.

Mr. JONES. Well, the amount would be available for that part of the road outside of the reservation.

Mr. FALL. For the road outside of the reservation we are not asking anything. There is no appropriation for any portion of the road outside of the Indian reservation, and the general appropriation does not apply to Indian reserves-at least, the department has been construing the law to that effect.

Mr. JONES. This is a direct appropriation out of the Treasury for the continuance of a public highway over an Indian reservation.

Mr. FALL. To get an outlet from the Government national park through the reservation. You can not get to this national park without going across this reserve. I do not think it would be exactly fair to make the Indians pay, if they ever have any funds with which to make such payment, for this road, because it is primarily for Government purposes and to reach a national

Mr. JONES. If that is the case, of course, the Indians ought not to pay it. Mr. FALL.

That is the fact, and the road ought to be built.

Mr. JONES. I am very glad, indeed, to have another precedent here that will support a proposition that I shall later take Mr. JONES. I had not supposed that the National Government would go into further appropriations for items for the building of specific roads throughout the country, in view of the passage of the good-roads law at the last session; but some of my friends in my own State have been urging me to try to get an appropriation for a State highway that will open up a large section of our State. A good part of it passes over an Indian reservation, and I have thought that we should have to take care of that through the good-roads law, especially the part outside of the reservation; but I am very glad to see this evidence of liberality in these times when the Treasury is overflowing with money, when the demands upon it are very slight, and when it is not necessary to have special measures taken to get Congress to act with reference to legislation that is deemed necessary, and that the Congress is appropriating money to assist in the construction of these good roads, of which I am heartily in favor.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TONES Control

Mr. FALL. I think, if I understand the Senator from Washington correctly, that he and I are in very thorough accord about this proposition.

Mr. JONES. I think so.
Mr FALL. In other words, if under the general law the Government funds can not be used for the construction of a road within an Indian reserve, and it requires a special appropriation to construct a road there, which is a part of a highway, the Senator is in favor of that appropriation?

Mr. JONES. I am. Mr. FALL. So am I

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on that subject. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] rather jibed the committee or its chairman for opening the door looking toward appropriations for roads through Indian reserves

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Arizona is entirely mistaken if he thinks I intended to jibe him or the committee. That never entered my mind.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I withdraw that statement; but we can not escape the issue that is going to be raised here. It is going to be raised by western Senators, and it ought to be raised. I presented a memorial here which had been unanimously adopted by both houses of the Arizona Legislature only last Thursday or Friday, calling attention to the fact that the good-roads law, which was a beneficent measure, totally failed to make any provision for the construction of roads across Indian reservations.

Take, for instance, the State of Arizona. Nearly 50 per cent of that State is withheld and withdrawn from the people. The people at their own expense are gridironing that State with good roads. The Navajo Reservation, embracing 30,000 square miles, has precluded the transport of goods and persons over that reserve because of the lack of roads, and yet Congress has declined to construct roads upon Indian reservations.

I hope the Senator from Washington, and I hope all other Senators, will join with me in a movement, which I am soon going to inaugurate, to make appropriations from Indian funds, if they have them, or from the Federal Treasury if the Indians have them not, to bring the remote parts of our western country into close proximity. As to the construction of roads upon Indian reserves, I am glad to have the support of the Senator from Washington. There is no reason why those parts of our country should be separated by impassable barriers in the shape of Indian reserves. I have introduced a bill-and a favorable report has been made on it by the Committee on Indian Affairs providing for the leasing of valuable mines belonging to the Indians, with a splendid and generous royalty to go to the Indians, in order that a fund may be created which we may take and use for the construction of roads on the Indian reserves.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, to hear the Senator from Arizona say what he has said. I do not understand him to suggest that the Indians should bear anything like all of the expense of constructing roads across their reserves, but that they should bear a just part of that expense, a part commensurate, as nearly as it can be ascertained, with the benefits that will come to them and their lands by the construction of these highways.

I know by experience in my own State of the character of the barrier that these reserves are in the building up and development of sections of country in that State. a letter only this morning urging assistance by Congress with reference to the construction not only of a bridge across a river that separates an Indian reservation from other territory of our State, but also to aid in the construction of roads across the reservation lands. The construction of such roads is very urgently needed in order that the country may be developed. Yet by the construction of roads the Indian lands will be greatly benefited. Ninety per cent of the territory through which the road would go is Indian land that can not be taxed by the county or by the State and upon which no burden for the construction of roads can be imposed. If those roads are to be constructed, either the other 10 per cent must bear all of the burden or Congress must assist in the work either by a direct appropriation from the Treasury or by an appropriation of money that will be reimbursable from Indian lands.

I think that the Indian lands ought to bear part of the burden under such circumstances. As I have said, the Indians are going to get the primary benefit, they should be made to bear a part of the burden, and the development of the country should not be held back because these lands are not subject to taxation. Then, in addition to what the Indians' land should bear, whatever just burden there may be which under other circumstances would fall on private lands, should be borne by the Federal Government in order that proper roads may be made over these lands, so as to promote development.

I am very glad indeed to hear what the chairman of the committee has said. I think I am pretty well in harmony with the thoughts he has expressed, and I am glad to learn his attitude, because it will help, I think, to meet a situation in my State that has been troubling our people very much; that I have thought ought to be remedied in some way, and as to which we have thus far not been able to get assistance.

I think I will take only a moment or two further to state the conditions to a certain extent as affecting one of the Indian reservations in the State of Washington. We have an Indian reservation within 4 miles of the city where I live. The lands have been allotted in a different way from that stated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane] a while ago. dians have not been allotted land up in the foothills and on the higher ground, but the allotments have been made on the lower Possibly 120,000 acres of these lands will be irrigated, and 50,000 or 60,000 acres of them are now irrigated. The lands in these allotments in a raw state are worth from seventyfive to one hundred dollars an acre, and they have sold for that in the market, they are selling for that, and they will continue to sell for that, and when the lands are improved they are worth from $150 to $250 an acre. Many thousands of acres of these lands are improved, and yet we can not impose a single dollar of taxation upon them for the improvement of roads over the reservation. The county has spent thousands of dollars for the construction of roads; the Indians are getting great benefit from that construction; the lands are increasing in value by reason of this expenditure, and yet we have been unable to appropriate a single dollar, even reimbursable, to assist in the construction of roads upon this reservation. So, I am hopeful now, in view of what is being done, that that situation can be taken care of in the very near future.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Arizona to another class of land withdrawn in his own State and other Western States that is in the same situation. In Arizona there are a number of withdrawals for national parks and national monuments. There is no provision in the law granting assistance to the States in building roads that will allow a portion of the money credited to a particular State to be used for the building of roads through a national monument or through a national park. The restriction applies to those two classes of withdrawals, just as it applies to Indian reservations. Of course, on an Indian reservation there are Indians who own property and they can pay a part of the expense, but the only way a road can be constructed through a national park or through a national monument is to secure an appropriation for it and authorize the Secretary of the Interior to build the road. If the State wanted to build a road through a national monument or a national park, there is no authority granted to the State to do so; but it must come to Congress for the authority to build the road. I presume, too, that it would have to receive an appropriation from Congress in order to secure the building of that road under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 40, after line 23, to insert:

On page 40, after line 25, to linsert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a steel bridge across the San Juan River in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, at the best and most available location west or southwest and near to the town of Farmington, in said county and State; and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expense and cost of constructing said bridge: Provided, That said sum is to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians of the State of New Mexico.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is nothing in that amendment to indicate whether or not the bridge is on a reservation except the provision that the money shall be reimbursable. There is nothing to indicate that it is for the benefit of the Indians except that. I should like to ask either the chairman of the committee or the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] whether or not this bridge is on a reservation or is for the benefit of the Indians? Mr. FALL. Mr. President, one end of this bridge is on the New Mexico side of the San Juan River and the other is on the Navajo side. The situation is this: The Navajos living opposite Farmington, numbering something over 1,500, are engaged largely in agriculture and sheep raising, and are compelled to go down the San Juan River 35 miles to a bridge built by the people of New Mexico across the San Juan, and to come up on the opposite side about 35 miles additional to get to a shipping point for their sheep and for their other products. people of San Juan County, which is a comparatively new county, built a bridge several years ago at their own expense but it was washed away. The San Juan River is a large stream and a very treacherous one. I think the people have spent $25,000 of their own money in building bridges, very largely for the benefit of the Indians, although, of course, for the benefit also of the people of the town of Farmington, who are able to do business with them. All the mercantile business of the Navajos, however, is done by Indian traders who are located within the Indian Territory and the merchants of the town of Farmington, which is a small town of about 800 inhabitants, derive very little benefit from the Indian trade The Indians themselves go to Farmington, which is the terminus of a railroad, for the purpose of making their shipments. To do that they must have some method of crossing the San Juan River or have to travel about 75 miles out of the

The agent is establishing an Indian school and a subagency on that portion of the reserve across from Farmington, and also an Indian hospital is being established there. It is impossible at many seasons of the year to cross the San Juan at all, because it is a rather large and a very treacherous stream, and much quicksand is found along its course; so that two-thirds or threefourths of the time it is necessary for any traffic with this portion of the reserve to come in by way of the La Plata bridge, as it is called, which was built and has been maintained by the people of Farmington and of San Juan County.

San Juan, one of the newer counties in New Mexico, is almost entirely within an Indian reserve. Since the county of San Juan was created extensions of the Navajo Reserve have been made over that county by Executive order to such an extent that not one-third of the public lands in San Juan County to-day remain accessible to those who desire to locate homesteads and become citizens of San Juan County, and not one-third of the public | area of San Juan County can ever under the present system produce one dollar of taxation for the support of government because Executive orders have been extended over that county, taking in the public domain and withdrawing lands from taxpaying purposes and incorporating them in the Indian reserve.

The Indians themselves ask that this bridge be built. agent of the Indians, Mr. Stacker, requests that it be built. A special bill for the construction of this bridge was introduced in the Senate by my colleague [Mr. Catron] and passed this body, after it had been approved by the Indian Bureau. When that bill reached the House it was reported back favorably by the House committee, and by the members of the House committee themselves the suggestion was made that, as the House had passed the Indian appropriation bill, this item be brought over to the Senate committee and by the Senate committee be placed in the bill.

This bridge being almost entirely for the benefit of the Indians themselves, that they may be enabled to reach a shipping point, it is to be constructed and the funds are to be reimbursed out of any funds thereafter coming to the Navajos.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the Senator has made a very good showing for this item. As I understand, it is not for the continuance of any public highway or anything of the sort. I want to ask the Senator a further question with reference to the probability of this amount ever being reimbursed. The chairman of the committee suggested a moment ago that that was largely a fiction, especially with reference to the Navajo Indian Reserve. I ask the Senator how large this reserve is, and what the probabilities are of any money coming to them out of which this amount could be reimbursed?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there are between thirty and forty thousand Navajo Indians. From time immemorial the Navajo Indians have been engaged in the sheep industry. They are among the largest producers of wool on the American Continent. They have the greatest sheep herds of which I have any knowledge among any one class of people. They have now over 11.000 acres for each Navajo Indian on the Navajo reserve, and yet 9,000 of them have been located off the Navajo reserve and upon the public lands of the United States in my State, in Arizona, in Utah, and in Colorado. Although the Congress of the United States three years ago prohibited the location until a further act of Congress of any other Navajos outside of their reservation, the President of the United States within the last few days—I think it was on the 15th of January—has withdrawn in McKinley County, N. Mex., from 60,000 to 70,000 acres—I have not in mind exactly the acreage—from the public domain for the purpose of locating Navajo Indians upon the land. This bill itself carries an appropriation of $15,000 more for the purpose of acquiring railroad lands from the old Atlantic & Pacific Railroad grant in McKinley County, N. Mex., for the Indians. These locations and withdrawals were made for the Navajo Indians as a tribe, and the consequence is that the lands never will be taxable. Thus just so much of this property, which ultimately would be subject to taxation and help support the government of McKinley County, municipal government, and the State government of New Mexico, has been withdrawn from the people of New Mexico forever.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

With pleasure. Mr. FALL.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator, in his very interesting address, complains of the withdrawal of 70,000 acres. Mr. President the Arizona delegation about a year ago requested that a small reservation be created for the Papago Indians, assuming that some 70,000 acres would be set aside; but when action was taken we found that 3,000,000 acres, embracing two-thirds of one of our counties, were set aside, so the Senator has no real complaint.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is mistaken, Mr. President. The two reservations are not in the same class. The one reservation is a general reservation on which locations or allotments may be made from time to time; and as has been the history in the case of Executive orders of exactly the same character, the other lands, aside from the specific locations, can be restored at any time to the public domain. The particular reservation in New Mexico, however, to which I have reference, is a withdrawal of the public lands now existing by sections and quarter sections, all previously available for settlement, scat-tered around through a portion of the county which is used for stock-raising purposes, and almost inevitably covering springs or water holes or adjoining the ranch of some man who is paying taxes to support the county and State government in New Mexico.

If, as is the case, or has been the case in some instances, the ranchman could buy the Indian out and get rid of him, so that he would not interfere with the ranging of stock which pay the taxes upon the adjoining land, we might see some benefit to be derived, or at least some light in the future; but that can not be the case, for the Indians are not to get these lands by allotment and then to be dealt with as citizens of the United States; but these lands are reserved for these Indians, not allotted to them, by the President's proclamation. They are reserved for the use of the Navajos and such other Indians as the department may see fit to place upon them.

These are the conditions generally that we in the West are combating, and I may say that it is because we are insisting not that any property be taken from the Indians but that the Indians be not allowed to take from the States or the counties or the municipal subdivisions of States the tax-paying property within their counties, that some of us have the reputation with the Indian Rights Association and others of attempting to deprive the noble red man of that which is justly his due.

Now, I will get back to the specific question about which the Washington asked information unless he has Senator from something else along that line which he desires to ask.

Mr. JONES. I was going to ask the Senator whether there is any reason, based upon the conditions existing there or the character of the Indians or the character of the lands or other wise, why those lands should not be allotted to the individual Indians, so as to make them citizens, or hold out the hope at least some day of having their lands subject to the burdens that must necessarily fall upon the State and the county

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there are no reasons for not affording us as much relief as could be afforded us, except simply the misinformation, or lack of information, or woeful ignorance existing in the minds of people who have to deal with the Indians and the Indian subject generally. There are no reasons. I will say to the Senator that within the last 10 years these Executive orders have been issued withdrawing more than 3,000,000 acres of land in New Mexico for the purpose of further allotting lands to Indians. Some of these withdrawals were in this very county of San Juan, where the bridge is of which we are speaking. Later it was discovered that the In-dians had ample lands after additional allotments had been made; and President Roosevelt canceled these withdrawals, restoring the land to public entry, so that the people of New Mexico or the homesteaders of the United States coming into New Mexico might find homes. So in that instance the original withdrawal was revoked, affording us some relief.

What was the agricultural character of these Mr. JONES. lands generally?

Mr. FALL. What does the Senator have reference to-these particular lands?

Mr. JONES. The lands that have been set aside for these Navajo Indians.

Mr. FALL. I will say to the Senator that they are principally valuable for grazing purposes. Under the theory of the 640-acre homestead bill which we have just passed they would be classed as lands susceptible of raising forage crops.

Mr. JONES. In the judgment of the Senator, how much land would be sufficient to make reasonable provision for the livelihood of an Indian family?

Mr. FALL. As I have said to the Senator, within the Navajo Reserve itself, counting every Navajo Indian on and off the reserve, there are 1,100 acres to each Indian. That is over twice as much as any white citizen of the United States can Every Navajo Indian alive-man, woman, and childon and off the Navajo Reserve to-day has a right to 1,100 acres of land within the Navajo Reserve; and they are still extending the Navajo Indian's rights to the public lands of the United States and holding the white citizen of the United States down to the acquisition, under this most recent bill, of 640 acres.

Mr. JONES. But I understand that even with that allowance there have been no allotments made to the particular Indians, but that the whole amount is held in common.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is mistaken in this respect-that within the exterior limits of the Navajo Reserve individual al-Iotments have been made, but no muniments of title have been issued. In other words, this Indian or that Indian or the other Indian has had pointed out to him, and he has been allowed to take possession of, certain lands within the reserve. Now, instead of taking the Indians on the outside of the reserve and putting them back on the inside of the reserve and allotting them the excess lands, they allot them lands on the public domain, and hold in common for the tribe all the unallotted lands within the exterior limits-and this, I may say to the Senator, is a matter of history-in the face of a solemn treaty by which the Navajo Indians acquired their present reserve in 1868 under a pledge that they would not avail themselves of the privilege extended to other Indians of acquiring homes or lands upon the public lands of the United States.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, there are about 30,000 of the Navajo Indians.

Mr. FALL. Between 30,000 and 40,000.

Mr. JONES. And within the exterior limits of the reservation there are Eleven hundred acres for each one.

Mr. JONES. Eleven hundred acres for each one. That would be some 33,000,000 acres. Now, how much outside of the exterior lines has been allotted to these Indians?

Mr. FALL. At one time there were 168,000 acres, out of a withdrawal of something like 1,200,000, and then the excess was thrown back into the public domain. At another time there was some 40,000 or 50,000 acres. There have been so many locations made of the same character that I spoke of here a few moments ago that it is impossible for me to keep them all in mind; but I should say that there have been allotments in small quantities for individual Indians amounting to three or four hundred thousand acres more on the outside.

Mr. JONES. What sized allotments are made outside of the reservation to individual Indians?

Mr. FALL. Under the laws of the United States the individual Indian is only supposed to be entitled to the same amount of land as the individual white man; that is, 160, 320, or, now, 640 acres. In spite of the treaty, in the face of the treaty agreements by which he got that which he has in his reserve, he now can take up 640 acres of the public domain and still own his 1,100 acres within the exterior limits of the Navajo Reserve-a total of 1,740 acres to an Indian, and 640 acres to a white man,

Mr. JONES. How many of the Indians have gone outside of the exterior boundaries?

Mr. FALL. Something like 9,000, and they are still locating them in New Mexico.

Mr. JONES. Leaving about 20,000 occupying these 33,000,000

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico vield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. I do. Mr. WALSH. That seems a very large body of land to give to a single individual-1,100 acres. I call the attention of the Senators, however, to the fact that every Indian on the Crow Reservation in my State owns an undivided interest in 1,435 acres. I have been vainly endeavoring to get the Indian Affairs Committee to see that that is too much land for the Indians; and I dare say, although I do not like to institute any invidious comparisons between the land in New Mexico and the land in Montana, that, acre for acre, the land in this Crow Reservation is about as good as the land in the Senator's State

I have no doubt that as an agricultural proposition the land there is very superior to the greater part of the land in my poor State.

Mr. President, just along the line of the value of these lands, it is estimated-I have seen the estimates from the Geological Survey, I believe, of the United States Government-that there are 180,000,000 tons of coal in sight on the Navajo reserve today; and still we complain of the high price of coal in the United States. No man can work any coal on the Navajo re-The Navajos will not work it. No white man can go in there. The department will not favor a bill to lease it to them, so that it can be developed. The Navajos get nothing from it. As a matter of fact, if their lands were developed the Navajo Indians to-day would be among the richest Indians in the world, or among the richest men in the world. Navajo Tribe of Indians to-day in potential wealth are wealthier than the same number of American citizens residing in any State in the United States; but they are not allowed to, or at least do not, under our beautiful system of government receive any benefit from their wealth except as they use the surface of the ground for grazing sheep. That is practically their in-dustry. They are also makers of blankets and are silversmiths of no mean ability. From the time of the coming of the Spaniards into the country the Navajos have understood the trade of silversmithing as well as any people in this country. They do some mining, on a small scale, for the purpose of finding gems with which to set their silver work. Aside from that, no mining is done. The copper and silver and gold wealth on the Navajo reserve is estimated at fabulous sums; but of course, as we know in the West, matters of that sort are generally exaggerated, and I spoke of the coal simply because, as I say, we have Government reports showing something like 180,000,000 tons of coal in sight, now entirely undeveloped, and nobody allowed to touch a pound of it.

There is no necessity for moving the Navajo Indians on the public domain anywhere in the United States. The Navajo Indians are self-supporting. They need no appropriations, reimbursable or otherwise, from the Government if the Government of the United States can succeed in placing some man with a little common sense at the head of the Indian Bureau and having it run as a business matter.

That is all in the world that is necessary in New Mexico. The Senator speaks of the acreage. Why, the Mescalero Apache Indians, largely in my county in New Mexico, have 641,000 acres to 424 Indians; and still they are so beautifully managed that other Indians have been brought in as prisoners of war from Fort Sill and planted among those Mescaleros and allotted lands belonging to the Mescaleros themselves under the beneficent action of the Indian Bureau here, and now are receiving a portion of the proceeds of the rentals of the Indian lands where the Chiricahau Indians themselves do not use them for stock purposes. They are not akin, not the same people; but Apache Indians from the Chiricahau and the Warm Spring Reserves in the State of Arizona have been brought into New Mexico and set down at Mescalero and one-third of the property belonging to the Mescalero Indians given by an arbitrary act of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Fort Sill Apache Indians

Wealth? Untold wealth-coal, timber, iron, copper, gold, and silver-lying at the doors of the white man, lying on the railroad, within 3 to 5 miles' haul of the railroad in New Mexico. Not a pound of coal can be extracted; not a pound of ore or iron or copper or gold or silver can be extracted for the benefit of the Indians or for the benefit of the community. Millions and millions of dollars of property are locked up, so that the white man can not obtain one dollar of it for the purpose of paying taxes; and still the people of the surrounding counties of Chaves, Lincoln, and Otero, in New Mexico, are compelled to support the governments, pay the county officials, pay the sheriffs for preserving peace and protecting the Indian property, and pay all the expenses of running the government, while the Indians, with millions of dollars of property locked up, of no avail, no good to themselves, contribute not one dollar in taxes to the white man's Government or for their own protection. Then, when we build roads, bond ourselves, place a mortgage upon the future of our children and upon our present property and prosperity, and build roads up to each line of the Indian reserve, 60 or 80 or 90 miles square, we are stopped at the borders because we have no authority to enter, and the United States Government, except by special request, possibly after years of work, will not contribute one dollar to help construct a highway across the reserve.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 10, to insert: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to lease for the benefit of the Navajo Indians in New Mexico such railroad lands as he may deem necessary for their weifare, $15,000, to be immediately available, and to be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, was this item recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ASHURST. It was not estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that it was not estimated for; but was it recommended by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. ASHURST. The assistant commissioner presented a statement embracing the legislation he wished; but it was not, I presume, according to the strict letter of the law estimated for, and is one of the very few items in the bill which are not esti-There are a few of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought it was rather an innovation to appropriate money in an Indian appropriation bill for the purpose of leasing lands from railroad companies.

Mr. LANE. Is it not largely to secure water? I have seen the statement made that they have been using these lands for many years, and water holes are very few and far between, and then ranging back on their reserves; and it is for the purpose of securing water.

curing water. That is my understanding.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the wording of the amendment is very unfortunate, because it says:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to lease for the benefit of the Navajo Indians in New Mexico such railroad lands as he may deem necessary for their welfare, $15,000.

Mr. ASHURST. I can explain that, if the Senator will permit me. The grant was made to this railroad company in 1866.

Long anterior to the time the grant was made the Indians did use these water holes, and, following their ancestral traits, they do not like to leave them. The Government wishes, if it can make the arrangement with the owners of these lands, to lease these various water holes, as we call them in the West, or watering places, for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] to say that the number of sheep owned by the Navajo Indians was such that it required a greater area of land for grazing purposes, and he referred to this item particularly as showing the necessity of it. What I wanted to get at, however, was this: $15,000 is 3 per cent on $500,000. Senator think that the railroad lands in which these water holes are located are worth $500,000?

Mr. ASHURST. I could not pass any opinion on that matter,

Mr. President.

I want to be courteous in the statement I am going to make, but I think the time has arrived when I ought to say a few Men whisper around this Chamber, in words they do not dare to say in public speech, that there is something wrong with this bill. Mr. President, the only thing wrong with this bill is that the poor, unfortunate wards who are going to be taken care of in this bill can not vote. If the Indians whom this bill seeks to take care of could vote, Senators would be rushing forward with amendments asking for increased appropriations. since these poor, unfortunate wards, whom we have dispossessed many times against their will, and whose will we have overridden, can not vote, Senators are very touchy about the Public Treasury

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Did not the Senator recently make rather a campaign in his State against this great withdrawal of 3,000,000 acres?

I did not understand the Senator's question. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. FALL. The Senator speaks of somebody objecting to expenditures, and of the fact that these Indians can not vote. I ask the Senator if he did not discuss this withdrawal that he said was made in his own State for the benefit of the Navajo Indians, and if he did not do all that he could against it?

Mr. ASHURST. I did, because the withdrawal was too large.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. The Senator was after votes at that time, was he not?

Mr. ASHURST. I was; and while the Senator is talking about votes, I will say that a Western Senator who comes to this Capitol and attempts to urge anything in behalf of the Indians or their rights puts himself in jeopardy. Because I happened to vote for and insist on a small appropriation for the benefit of a little, obscure tribe in the Salt River Valley certain newspapers come out with flaming headlines:

Astounding! Senator Ashurst grabs water from vast acreage in the Salt River Valley and gives it to the Indians!

Mr. President, as I say, I do not want to be discourteous; but it is getting tiresome to hear Senators continually inveigh and inveigh against items in this bill. Senators have a right to their opinions, and I hope that I have not offended the proprieties; but I answer that if they are going to be economical they should select something other than the wards of this Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that any newspaper article that might reflect upon the Senator from Arizona would not be considered for a moment by any Senator in this body. I want to say to the Senator that I believe that he himself, chairman of the committee, believes that there are items in this bill that never ought to have been there.

Mr. ASHURST. Why, certainly I think so; but, Mr. President, every piece of legislation that ever passed this body has contained some features that I did not like. There are some features of all legislation that we do not like. That is quite

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator does not take anything I have said as a personal affront, or think that what I have said casts any reflection on him. Far from it; because I want to say right now that this is the best Indian appropriation bill that has been reported to the Senate since I have been in the Senate, for 14 years.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say, however, that there are a lot of items in the bill that never ought to have been there, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Take this item that I have just asked about. What we ought to do when we are looking after the wards of the Government is to look after their interests and the interests of the United States at the same time, just as we would do if it were a business proposition between the Government and any other corporation or individual. I know the Senator will agree at least to that much; and I may go on and say, further, that we ought to be more particular about looking after the Indian as a ward than we are with a corporation or an individual that can take care of himself. But here is a new thing, a new policy; and I was trying to figure out whether or not it was a good policy, for instance, to appropriate $15,000 to be reimbursed out of the Indian funds for the purpose of leasing lands owned by railroads. I called the attention of the Senator to the fact that $15,000 meant the interest on $500,000, at 3 per cent; and I asked him, with all sincerity, whether he thought that the lands on which these water holes existed, and which were owned by the railroads, were worth $500,000, or whether it was not possible that we were appropriating too much money

Mr. ASHURST. That all may be. The department presented the legislation. It was discussed at some length and was finally agreed to. Possibly it may be a little large. If it could be reduced, I presume there would be no objection. I do not know the lands that are proposed to be leased, save and except that the department said that they are certain lands upon which there are water holes which the Indians had used for a great number of years anterior to the granting of the lands to the railroad. If the Senator feels that the item ought to go out, I shall not object, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to consent that it may go over for the day, and I will try to learn a little more about it.
Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; let it go over.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah takes his seat let me say that he referred to a departure and the inauguration of a new policy.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If this appropriation evidenced the policy of leasing railroad lands for the purpose of allowing them to be utilized by Indians generally, it would, of course, interest all of us living in those States in which great railroad grants have been made; but I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not understand that it evidences anything like a general policy. The conditions in this particular place seem to be peculiar. was represented to us that a considerable portion of the lands within the reservation-I speak now of the representations made to the committee-that would be available for grazing purposes would be useless to the Indians if they were not able to hold the water holes outside; that the railroad lands were rapidly being disposed of by lease or by sale to stock raisers; and that there was a likelihood that these water holes would pass out of the control and use of the Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me right there?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not a pleasant history when we reach this particular part of the Indian country lying, we will say, if the Senator will pardon me, between Gallup, N. Mex., and the town of Winslow, Ariz. Ever since I can remember there have been disputes over the water holes. I especially ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] on this point, right here.

Mr. SMOOT. I am listening to every word the Senator says, Mr. ASHURST. In 1879, 17 families—as fine a set of families as live in any State—went upon what they thought was public domain. The maps of the United States showed the country there to be public domain. Those men and women—some of the most distinguished citizens of the State of Arizona, some of them now citizens of Utah-settled on those lands. Later the Government came to the conclusion that it wanted those lands for the Indians. Those 17 families, in the wintertime, without having had an opportunity even to gather up their cows and their horses and their chickens, were ejected in the snow and were required to wander over the face of the earth for some years, and were never paid any damages by this Government. I have here a bill-and I am going to press it-to reimburse those people. So, Mr. President, the differences are being composed. The Indians have always insisted upon a large part of the lands lying between Gallup, N. Mex., and Holbrook, Ariz. The Government has made great exchanges of land for the benefit of the The railroad company has given up a large part of its grant and taken lieu land elsewhere. The Government insists that some of these lands are still necessary for the benefit of the Indians. This relates to the State of New Mexico. The Senator from New Mexico is familiar with the lands. The department insists that the lands should be leased for the benefit of the Indians, and the committee took that view.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. What information did the Senate committee -I was not present when this item was discussed—as to the term of the lease?

Mr. ASHURST. Why, Mr. President, the Senate committee had no information, except this: It believed-of course, it had a right to assume that the leases, if any were made with the owners of the land, would be for a term of years. I presume no time was mentioned, but a sufficient length of time to guarantee some permanency. Indeed, I do not recall that the com-missioner stated to the committee that he could effect a lease at all.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, just exactly the explanation which is being made with reference to this lease has caused the criticisms which are directed at every session at this appropriation bill. The matter that the Senator referred to a little while ago is the common argument among some short-haired women and long-haired men in the United States, that those of us in the West who are engaged in looking after the interests of our own constituents, whenever an Indian is mentioned are trying to steal something from the Indian. I have heard that argument a good many times before. I was very much surprised to hear it even suggested by the Senator from Arizona; and for that reason, and that reason alone, I asked him as to his attitude before the people of his State with reference to a matter of exactly this kind. That was my only object.

was very much surprised to hear the Senator from Arizona join in this talk to the effect that if the Indian had a vote the Senators here who were trying to do something against the Indian would be in favor of the Indian. There is no Senator on this floor, in my judgment-certainly no Senator from the West-who has not at heart the true interests of the Indian; There is not one who would see injustice done him, The Senator from Arizona, in my judgment, would not see injustice done the Indian by this Congress if he could throw light upon the subject. The trouble about it-the criticism about itis that the Senator brings in a bill here, and when an item is questioned, when he is asked for information about it, when he is asked what the term of the lease is, when we are asked to appropriate $15,000 for an unlimited, unknown amount of land, with no term of lease, no character of lease, what is the Indian to get for the money? But when we ask questions about if, then we are told that "if the Indians had a vote you would be willing and objections to appropriations of this kind would not be made."

Now, as a Senator from New Mexico I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that I have no objection to this appropriation, but before the Senate votes $15,000 of the people's money away from them I want to know what it is for; I want to know whether the Navajo Indians are going to get any benefit from it, and I do not want to leave it simply to a clerk in the commissioner's office here to spend the money as he pleases.

Mr. President, some land in New Mexico leases for 3 cents per acre per annum. Lands on the forest reserve lease for $1 per head per cow per annum. There is a basis upon which any man in the Indian Department knowing anything under the heavens about the character of these lands and about the necessity of acquiring them for the Indians can form an opinion as to what price should be paid for a certain term for the use of the lands by the Indians.

The Senate has absolutely no information upon the subject. This entire appropriation of $15,000 can be expended in the discretion of a clerk in the Indian Department for the use of 160 acres or 10 acres of land for one year or for one month.

Has the Senator any information to the contrary?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the speech of the learned Senator, I wish to say that I think a part of his criticism is just in this respect. The Senate committee-that is, I speak for myself as chairman of the committee, and I will say that I am not in the possession of as much information on this item as I would like to have. The only information of which I am possessed is that when we had just about concluded the bill the department sent, through its assistant commissioner, a statement to the committee that owing to the fact that a large number of the Indians had lived for years upon certain lands that were subsequently granted to a railroad company the department wished if it could to enter into a lease with the owner of those lands for the benefit of the Indians, so that the Indians might occupy the land.

Mr. FALL. The Senator may remember that he insisted on passing a bill last year exchanging with the Santa Fe Railroad, or the Atlantic-Pacific land in McKinley County, N. Mex., and one of the counties in Arizona for the very purpose of allowing the Indians to have such land in fee.

Mr. ASHURST. I think some provision was in the bill of that kind. I do not recall it, but undoubtedly there was.

Mr. FALL. Then why do not the Indian Department, as sensible men would do, treat the whole matter in one bill instead of by piecemeal, requesting the Senate to act without information? information?

Mr. ASHURST. There is another criticism in which the Senator is eminently just.

Mr. FALL. Then-

Mr. ASHURST. Just one moment. I have been perplexed very much by the very suggestion the Senator makes. The de-partment, instead of sending estimates at one time, brings in new items every day, apparently. The Senator's criticism on that point is just.

Mr. FALL. Does not the Senator from Arizona join the Senator from New Mexico in the determination not to adopt this measure until he has something from the department showing that the $15,000 will be expended for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. I did not clearly hear the Senator. Mr. FALL. Will not the Senator from Arizona join the Senator from New Mexico in objecting to the appropriation of $15,000 until he has full assurance from some reliable source that the $15,000 will be expended for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me; I have so much regard for the Senator and for his knowledge of his own State that if he will here make a point of order I would not resist it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have heard that before. I have heard it intimated that Senators would like to have a point of order made from the other side. The Senator from New Mexico will not accommodate the Senator from Arizona and make a point of order upon this item.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to say that I made the point of order in the committee because

Mr. FALL. Then the Senator can repeat the point of order

Mr. ASHURST. The language as presented to the committee had in it the State of Arizona, and I said I had no objection to it if the State of Arizona were eliminated.

Mr. FALL. Exactly; it made no difference what they did to my State, but the Senator wanted to protect his State.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is a member of the committee, and he never came before the committee.

Mr. FALL. No, sir; the Indian Affairs Committee sat for three months at a time listening to attorneys from Washington arguing cases of private claims, individual claims, that had been argued and reargued, to my personal knowledge, for five The Senator from New Mexico did exempt himself from all the meetings of the committee except one; but the Senator from New Mexico had a right to believe that the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the committee, if he thought an amendment of this kind was unjust to his own State, would without further information object to it as a Senator from the United States and not of the State of Arizona,

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, to settle further dispute, I make a point of order on it myself.

Mr. FALL, Very well, The VICE PRESIDENT.

What is the point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. That it was not estimated for and not reported as a separate measure by a standing committee of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was reported from a standing committee of the Senate. The Senator is, I think, the head of a standing committee.

Mr. ASHURST. I say it was not reported in a separate bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator withdraws the amendment, he can do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I will not withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in the bill regularly.
Mr. ASHURST. I will not withdraw it, Mr. President.
Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over until to-morrow.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought it had gone

Mr. SMOOT. I will try to find out something from the department about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out that part of the bill beginning with and including line 24, page 48, including all of page 49 and that part of page 50 down to and including line 14.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator's motion simply comprehend the striking out the per capita payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and the amendment to it which is a part of it.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate uselessly. I offered an amendment to the bill to safe-guard the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. This amendment in one form or another I had offered in two preceding Congresses, and the Senate twice agreed with me about it and twice disagreed to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The matter was brought up again at the last Congress. consented to forego the amendment then upon the assurance of the chairman of the committee, of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and of various members of the committee that the amount then sought to be distributed would leave plenty of money in the fund to take care of any rights which the Mississippi Choctaws had.

Then this session came on; it was a short session crowded with business, and I understood from members of the committee, including the chairman of the committee, that the committee would strike out the distribution and thereby would hold the whole matter in abeyance until the next session of Congress, where it could be dealt with more satisfactorily than in this session of Congress

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word and I shall yield. Notwithstanding that, the matter was taken up in the committee again and by a tie vote the resolution of the Committee on Indian Affairs to keep this distribution out of the bill at this time was defeated.

Now, then, I am prepared, unless my motion to strike out is sustained, to read all the hearings of the committee and some little parts of the Encyclopædia Britannica in order that the rights of the Choctaw Indians may be maintained, because if the allotment now made passes through there will not be a dollar left to protect the rights of these people. I am willing that their rights should be protected in any way which the committee itself may fix, though I would prefer, of course, the adoption of the amendment which I had introduced and which I will insert as a part of my remarks right here.

The amendment submitted by Mr. Williams December 18, 1916, proposes to insert the following:

The amendment submitted by Mr. Williams December 18, 1916, proposes to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll as members of the said Choctaw Tribe of Indians all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provision of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission which persons have not heretofore been finally enrolled; and he shall also enroll all full-blood Mississippi Choctaws not heretofore enrolled and all persons who may satisfactorily establish their rights as descendants of Choctaws to whom privileges were guaranteed by the provisions of articles 14 and 19 of the treaty of 1830, known as the treaty of Danchig Rabbit Creek: Provided, That when so enrolled there shall be paid to each and every person in lieu of allotment, out of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaw Tribe, a sum equal to twice the appraised value of the allotment of the Choctaw Tribe as faxed by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for allotments or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to determine whether any attorney or attorneys have actually rendered services of value to any of the persons herein enrolled and to allow compensation therefor, including proper and necessary expenses incurred in connection with services rendered, in such amounts as he may deem proper, and to pay the amount or amounts so fixed and found to be due such attorney or attorneys and deduct the same

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I will yield to the Senator from Kansas

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I was one of the Senators who voted to strike out this provision in the committee, and I want to ask the chairman of the committee if, in view of the statement which was made to the committee by the Senator from Oklahoma, he does not feel justified in having a vote taken now without a long debate upon this question?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I believe I can save some time.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has correctly stated what happened in the committee. It was the subject of a very animated and a very lengthy discussion, and the motion to strike out this provision was lost by a tie vote of 7 to 7. I trust I am not violating any confidence of the committee when I say that I am going to vote to strike it out. My attitude was made known to my fellow committeemen, and I stated that in the Senate I would vote to strike it out. I do not wish to debate it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then, I hope the Senate will vote to strike it out.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, just one word.

I want to say to the Senate it was stated by the assistant commissioner that the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Oklahoma are not in need of this money at this time. I asked the ques-tion in the committee if the Indian Office thought the Indians could get along without the money this year, and the answer was that they thought they could. We distributed to these Indians about $8,000,000 during the last year. Like the Senator from Kansas, I joined in an effort in the committee to strike out of the bill this provision.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator who has just taken his seat that the Oklahoma Choctaws and Chickasaws are not in need of it, but, as has been so often stated, the Choctaws of Mississippi do need it very badly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is first on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to strike out the text of the bill as indicated by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 15, page 50.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 10, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, to M. L. Mott the sum of $472.22 for services rendered the Creek Nation from January 15 to February 18, 1914, inclusive, and $210.20 as reimbursement for actual expenses incurred in connection therewith.

Mr. SMOOT. This seems to be a private claim on an appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay M. L. Mott $472.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] stated what is the rule of the committee. He said it was agreed that no claim of over $100 should have any action by the committee; but if the Senator will read closely, he will see that this is not a claim against the Treasury of the United States, but "that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the united States belonging to the Creek Nation." The Creek Nation wishes this sum paid and say it is their money. I wish further to say it was agreed to in 1915 by both Houses, but failed by reason of the fallure of the bill. This is not a gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I noticed that in the reading of the amendment, and I wanted some explanation about it. If the Creek Nation acknowledge the debt and want to pay it out of their own money, of course I would not object.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the case.

Mr. SMOOT. But if they had not had anything to say about it, and if it proved to be a private claim upon an appropriation bill, I was going to make a point of order against it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Creek Nation, through its duly accredited representatives a year or so ago, urged the payment of this claim.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only way it could be done.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 51, line 24, after "$85,000," to insert "to be reimbursable out of the estates protected whenever deemed desirable and practicable, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of such attorneys and other employees as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, deem necessary in probate matters affecting allottees or their heirs in the Five Civilized Tribes and in the several tribes of the Quapaw Agency, and for the costs and other necessary expenses incident to suits instituted or conducted by such attorneys, $85,000, to be reimbursable out of the estates protected whenever deemed desirable and practicable, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to strike out:

For the support, continuance, and maintenance of the Cherokee Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla., for the orphan Indian children of the State of Oklahoma belonging to the restricted class, to be conducted as an industrial school under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000; for repairs and improvements, $4,500: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the $7,500 appropriated by the act of May 18, 1916, is hereby reappropriated for the purchase of additional land; for heating systems, $6,000; in all, $40,500.

And insert:

For the support, continuance, and maintenance of the Cherokee Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla., for the orphan Indian children of the State of Oklahoma belonging to the restricted class, to be conducted as an industrial school under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000; for repairs and improvements, $4,500; for heating systems, $6,000; for new dining room and kitchen and employees quarters, $12,700; in all, $53,200.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this is only an increase of about $13,000, but I do not think it is any of the business of the United States to pay any of this expenditure. object to the amendment of the committee, and I hope it will be rejected.

Oklahoma has perhaps the largest fund of any State in the United States for schools. When Oklahoma was admitted to the Union we gave her a most liberal allowance for school pur-The Indians have their own money; they are rich; and I do not see why the General Treasury should be taxed to run a school of this sort. It seems to me it is a responsibility of Oklahoma and not of the Treasury of the United States. At least, I ask that the increase provided for by the committee be rejected, and I hope we shall disagree to this $13,000 increase. do not think we ought to pay any of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 53, line 22, after the word "buildings," to insert:

Provided further, That after the lands have twice been offered for sale at public auction the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall cause to be sold to the highest bidder, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, the surface of any lands remaining unsold and of any surface lands forfeited by reason of nonpayment of any part of the purchase price.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the fault which I have to find with this amendment is that it allows these lands to be sold on terms of any sort which are deemed proper by the Secretary of the Interior, who secures his information from the Commis-sloner of Indian Affairs, to whom such information is furnished by agents of the Indian Bureau. It is a grant of too much authority. It should be more specific. In the past the Indians have suffered greatly from such grants of authority without limit—unlimited grants. I believe this to be one of the greatest evils in our management of the affairs of the Indians. I know Indians were here a while back when a large property of theirs was being sold which was of great value. They protested against the methods which were employed; yet the matter was taken in hand by the bureau, and those lands were sold at what has since proven to have been an actual loss, or a failure to secure anything like the value of the land to the tune of millions upon millions of dollars.

The Indian Bureau laid down a rule-and I have a copy of it here-by which they sold the lands, or the product of the lands, only to such persons as were desirable. Now, think of it! It was oil land, and its purchasers must be "desirable," they must have the cash to pay down, in order to secure the property which they were after. In addition to that, they must be experienced in the oil business. Who was it got the land and who was the most experienced? A set of gentlemen in the country who were in the oil business—it was the good old Standard Oil Co, or its subsidiaries who got the land. The good old Standard and its subcompanies were the people who had the most cash with which to bid, and also they had control, in a way, of the banks. If such an undestrable person as any Member of the Senate wanted to secure such property, and had to advance the cash, and went to these banks for it, he would have a rather difficult time in establishing credit; he might do so, and then again he might not; but, at any rate, it excluded ninety-nine American citizens out of every hundred from bidding at all. The fact is, it confined the bidding to a few "desirable" persons who had plenty of money and lots of experience, and knew more about the oil business than anybody else in the world, perhaps.

These large grants of authority to make rules and regulations and under such conditions as may be prescribed by a man or a bureau that has been carrying on a system of managing their affairs which has resulted in such unfortunate happenings to the Indians, I think ought to be cut out of the bill. I think it is too large a grant of authority to be left in the hands of a bureau which has not proven its ability to do much of anything in a proper, businesslike manner for a lot of helpless dependents and wards. I shall object to that, and I shall ask that the amendment go over. I will see if we can not get some provision in it which will cure it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon ask that the amendment go over?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I ask that the amendment go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment goes over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who voiced some objection to the amendment in the bill referring to an Oklahoma item, that we ought at least, in the absence of the two Senators from Oklahoma, to have whatever information was given to the committee concerning the necessity for the proposed increase in that item. The Senator knows that at least one of the Senators from Oklahoma is confined to his room by severe illness and the other Senator is absent from the city on some important official business. I thought it was perhaps a little hasty to reject the amendment without even listening to what could be said in explanation of it, in the absence of the two Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not know that they had any special interest in it.

Mr. WALSH. I am not advised as to that myself.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the item as agreed to by the Senate committee was in accordance with the estimate. called attention to the fact that the House reached the conclusion that $40,500 was sufficient. The Senate committee took the view that the estimate of the department was the amount that should be appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The increase was not made espe cially at the instance of either of the Senators from Oklahoma,

Mr. ASHURST. I do not recall that they urged anything.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me? Mr. ASHURST. I wish to correct myself-

Mr. FALL. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to this item, and to give my experience with reference to items of this character. I do not know exactly the situation, but I think the Senator will find this to be the case: The necessity for additional quarters for nearly all of the Indian schools all over the United States which receive appropriations from the United States Government, either directly or by reimbursable funds, arises from the increasing number of pupils. Now, if the schools ought to be done away with, then they should be done away with.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or else no more children should be admitted to them.

Mr. FALL. Or else no more children ought to be admitted to Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not see why the National Government should support Indian schools in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. FALL. The Senator may be right; but the Senator's objection has not reached that point, for, even though the Senate committee amendment is rejected for the support of this Indian school in Oklahoma, there will still be left an appropriation of $40,500; and I thought possibly the Senator had not noticed why the increased appropriation was provided. In the item as it is left under the Senator's objection there is an appropriation of $6,000 for heating apparatus, and so forth. I have no earthly interest in this matter except to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the state of the facts that the appropriations down to and including the item for heating apparatus are left exactly as they were, and the additional appropriation is "for a new dining room and kitchen and employees' quarters, $12,700." That is the new appropriation. I presume, from my own experience with similar cases, that it is needed because of the fact that the dining room is out of repair or that there are not sufficient quarters in which to house the present force.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or the employees want some new quarters to be fixed up a little more nicely than they were before.

Mr. FALL. I am sure I can not say as to that; but I have found it to be the case that one House or the other of Congress is continually attempting to make a record for economy and hoping that the other House will put in the necessary items. Time and again we find it to be the case that where provision is made granting authority for an increase in the number of pupils to be taught at a certain school, and an increased amount made for maintenance, there is not an increase in the appropriation or any appropriation at all made for additional quarters; for instance, for dormitories.

I have heard exactly the same objection urged to an increase in appropriations for dormitory room in cases where it was impossible to house the additional children, although there was no objection at all made by the Senate or by the committee to an increase in the amount of appropriations for the subsistence of the children and the teachers. It is just as necessary to have additional quarters as it is to have additional subsistence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, bearing on this matter, I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to what was presented to the committee at the time this increase was made, and I ask to have the Secretary read it, in the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair)

The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The next item is page 41, line 22, "for the support, continuance, and maintenance of the Cherokee Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla."

Senator Owen. I have a letter from Mr. Hastings, the Member of Congress from that district, who lives contiguous to this school, and he says that he thinks the estimate by the department for the kitchen and employees' quarters of $12,700 should be added to the appropriation there. He says:

"This item was estimated for by the Department of the Interior, and the justification for it will be found on page 242 of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, considering the Indian appropriation bill, as follows:

"'The school dining room is now in the basement of the main building, an old structure, dark and insanitary. The school kitchen is in the same basement. This department should be taken out of the old basement and placed in a suitable building. Twelve thousand seven hundred dollars will provide an adequate building.

"Your attention is invited to the fact that a new dormitory was erected at this school during the past year, and the capacity of the school has been doubled, increasing the attendance from 65 or 70 to between 130 and 140. I personally visited this school during the month of October and know that this new dining room is very much needed." I would like to have the letter of Hastings put in the record there. The Chairman. It will be inserted, without objection.

(The letter is here printed in full, as follows:)

House of Representatives,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., December 27, 1916.

House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C., December 27, 1916.

Hon. R. L. Owen,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Owen: I am inclosing herewith an amendment to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, now under consideration by the Senate Indian Committee, for a new dining room and kitchen and employees' quarters, $12,700, to be added after $6,000 and semicolon on page 34.

This item was estimated for by the Department of the Interior, and the justification for it will be found on page 242 of hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, considering the Indian appropriation bill, as follows:

"The school dining room is now in the basement of the main building, an old structure, dark and insanitary. The school kitchen is in the same basement. This department should be taken out of the old basement and placed in a suitable building; $12,700 will provide an adequate building."

Your attention is invited to the fact that a new dormitory was erected at this school during the past year and the capacity of the school has been doubled, increasing the attendance from 65 to 70 to between 130 and 140. The justification on page 242 of the hearings refers to the increased attendance.

I personally visited this school during the month of October and know that this new dining room is very much needed.

In the event this amendment is adopted, the total in line 10, page 34, should be corrected, and $53,200 inserted in lieu of $40,500.

Sincerely, yours,

Wr. W. Hastings.

W. W. HASTINGS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is the letter an extract from which has been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, I desire to re-peat my objection to this appropriation, and I call attention also to the next item, which ought to be stricken from this bill. It reads as follows:

The sum of $275,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Senimole Nations and the Quapaw Agency in Okla-

It ought not to be the province of the National Treasury to pay the expenses of educating these Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me right there, I wish to say that that is a very important item. The reason for it grows out of the fact that the State is unable to tax the Indian property for the support of these schools. That item ought not to be stricken out, but ought to remain in the bill, in my judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, upon what ground ought the National Government to pay for the education of the children of those rich Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. Rich they may be; but the State can not get any taxes from their land, because it is not able to tax their land, and so the State can not get any money to make any improvements

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this is not an Indian school; it is part of the common-school system of the State of Oklahoma. These lands being there, and not being taxable, it has been the policy of the Congress from the time that Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, as it was the policy of Congress before the time of the admission of Oklahoma, in view of the vast amount of land that could not be taxed, to make an annual contribution to the common schools of the State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have made the greatest contribution to the public schools of Oklahoma that has ever been made to the schools of any State in the Union. We gave to the State of Oklahoma every twenty-first section of land, as I recall, at the time the strip was opened, to be devoted to educational purposes. Practically one-twentieth of the entire land of Oklahoma was given to the State for educational purposes when the strip was opened. Just exactly upon what ground these lands can not be taxed I do not understand.

Mr. CLAPP. They are Indian lands, if the Senator please.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all right.

Mr. CLAPP. Under the very laws under which the lands were granted to the Indians there are restrictions against alienation and taxation; and there is a vast amount of them.

I do not want to say that perhaps the Government should do all that we are doing for Oklahoma, but I am pointing out to the Senator that these are not Indian schools. The appropriation there is based upon a principle which Congress adopted when Oklahoma was admitted. In view of the lands that were segregated and not subject to taxation, Congress made certain provision in aid of the common schools of the State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ought we to keep it up forever? Mr. CLAPP. That is for Congress to say.

Mr. CLAFF. That is for Congression of the Chair.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I presume so.
Mr. CURTIS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sheppard in the Chair).
Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To anyone. Mr. CURTIS. I want to state for the information of the Senator that when Oklahoma was admitted as a State, because of the fact that the Government had no public land in the eastern part, being the old Indian Territory, which could be given to the State for school purposes, the Government gave to the State of Oklahoma $5,000,000 in cash "for the use and benefit of the common schools of said State in lieu of sections 16 and 36, and other lands of the Indian Territory," which went into the treasury of the State. The members of the committee thought it best to make provision out of the general funds to assist the common schools of Oklahoma, so that the $5,000,000 would not be drawn upon, but might be invested, and in the course of a few years the State would be in better shape to take care of its public schools than it was at that time. or nearly all, of the Indian lands were then nontaxable.

The restrictions could be removed, and, of course, as soon as they were removed and the lands sold they were taxable. Afterwards, however, Congress removed the restrictions on about 70 per cent of the property in Oklahoma-that is, the old Indian Territory part-and so what the Senator from Georgia says is true; they had a large amount of money for their school pur-The only question is-and this point has been raised before the committee; I suppose the chairman has forgotten itwhether or not the condition is such that the Government is still justified in helping the public schools of the old Indian Territory part of Oklahoma. They have had the $5,000,000. It is invested. Since that was done the restrictions have been removed on 70 per cent of the property, and much land has been sold, and is now subject to taxation. The Oklahoma Senator who is a member of the committee [Mr. Owen] insisted, and made a very strong showing, that because of the conditions that part of Oklahoma was entitled to some assistance in paying the expenses of the common schools. The item was put in by the House, and left in by the Senate committee.

I want to say, as one Senator, that I have thought for a number of years—anyhow, since the restrictions were removedin view of the fact that the State had received this $5,000,000, that this appropriation should be done away with. I have thought that

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Senator tell me just what proportion of the land it was that was given to the State for educational purposes? Was it not every twenty-first section, or every twentieth section?

Mr. CURTIS. Sections 16 and 36 in every township in Oklahoma Territory, and all indemnity lands theretofore lected in lieu thereof, were granted to the State for the use and benefit of the common schools.

Mr. CLAPP. That only applied, however, to one portion of

Mr. CURTIS. That applied to the western part of Oklahoma.
Mr. CLAPP. The eastern portion was held by Indian title.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, well, I understand that; but 75 per cent of it is subject to taxation. The Eastern States have had no land given to them for educational purposes by the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not discussing that. I am only discussing the facts with reference to Oklahoma. We did not give them the two sections, 16 and 36, as we did in other States, because there was a large portion of the State which had no public lands. Now, whether, in view of what we gave them-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We gave them $5,000,000.

Mr. CLAPP. That is nothing compared to what some of the States have had; but that is immaterial, perhaps. that some of these lands have become taxable since Oklahoma was admitted. Whether we should continue this aid or not, I am not discussing; but the Senator started on the assumption that we were giving it to the Indians, and I simply wanted-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I meant we were giving it to Oklahoma for the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, we are not doing that. We are giving it to the white people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is worse and worse.

Mr. CLAPP. It may be worse, but I want the facts before the Senate; that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator for strengthening the view I was presenting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the State of Arizona, for instance, has over 50 per cent of all its public area withdrawn. The State can not impose on that part of its area a dollar of taxes for the maintenance of the State institutions. Arizona is not asking in this bill that the Government of the United States appropriate $275,000 to help pay for educating the white people of Arizona. The State of Utah is not asking anything of the kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They have not given you $5,000,000 to start with, either.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they did not give us $5,000,000 to start It seems to me that it is a very, very unfair proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I not only think the Senate ought to sustain my objection to an increased fund for this school-if it needs an increased fund the National Treasury is not the place from which to get it-but I shall ask later on, when amendments can be offered from the floor, to strike out this appropriation of $275,000 for the schools of Oklahoma.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, it is possible that I may be able to enlighten him a little bit further on this proposition.

I have voted for this appropriation at every session. Under what is known as the Atoka agreement, when they agreed that the Government of the United States might allot in severalty, when they agreed to the allotment proposition as distinguished from holding their lands in common and surrendered their tribal relations under the agreement with the United States, it was at that time expressly provided that none of these lands, although allotted, should be taxed for 25 years. Upon the creation of the State of Oklahoma school sections 16 and 36 in each township within the Oklahoma strip, or that portion which had been public domain, were granted to the State of Oklahoma. In view of the fact that a very large area of the State was Indian Territory, belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes particularly, and that there were no public lands which could be given, and that there could not be any 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, such as all other States had had, in lieu of that a cash donation of $5,000,000 was given to make up to the State of Oklahoma for the fact that not only would they not get their usual quota of school sections outright, but neither would they get 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, which all other States have had for the support for all time of their public schools—that is, so long as the public lands brought in any money. It was in pursuance of that, or along that line, that this appropriation was first made.

The State of Oklahoma immediately undertook to tax these lands, irrespective of the agreement between the Indians and the United States by which they had come into the Union. The Indians were compelled to go to law, hire attorneys, get together—they had surrendered their tribal relations; they could not raise any funds through their tribal relations, as they had been able to do theretofore, to protect themselves against the State of Oklahoma-so that, as private individuals, they were compelled to make up a sum of money to carry this case through the courts, attacking the tax laws of the State of Oklahoma passed in violation of their treaty. They were compelled to carry the case through all the courts and to bring it finally to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it reached a decision, in the case of Choate against Trapp, in favor of the Indians, the Supreme Court upholding the Atoka agreement.

The consequence is that for the 25 years' term, the period the agreement itself, those lands are untaxable. I have forof the agreement itself, those lands are untaxable. gotten just exactly when that term expired; but it has been rather an anomalous position that the Government of the United States has been in, that it should be compelled to tax its people generally to raise funds for the support of the public schools in one-half of one certain State of the Union. But the justice of it, to begin with, is beyond any question, up to a reasonable amount. When it is going to stop is for the Congress of the United States to say.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope the Congress will agree that the time has come to stop it now, and that we will strike out this provision upon motion when the opportunity is given for offering amendments from the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how much longer he wishes to go on with the bill to-night?

Mr. ASHURST. I think we may lay aside the bill at this time. Mr. HARDWICK. The reason why I ask the question is that I desire to have a short executive session, but I did not want to move it unless that was agreeable to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be laid aside at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

ished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 30, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make a preferential motion.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that? I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen will withhold their motions.

Mr. KPTCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Ways and Means to present a report (No. 1366) to accompany the bill H. R. 20573.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. In connection with this matter, may I ask what is the purpose of the gentleman from North Carolina in reference to the revenue bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that we hope to take it up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal and have general debate well running into the next day, if we can dispense with Calendar Wednesday, until about 3 o'clock, and then we will begin the reading of it under the five-minute rule, with the hope of voting on it Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman expect to keep the House in ession Wednesday evening in order to pass the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not hope to do it, but if it runs so late as to interfere with the Press Club banquet, we will go over until the next day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How about those who are not going to that banquet?

Mr. MANN. I have a dinner engagement, but it is not at the Press Club.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we can do it for the Press Club, because for our caucus the other night they postponed it. I do not think there will be any trouble in finishing it by 6 or 7 o'clock Wednesday evening.

Mr. MANN. I doubt if it would be possible to finish it that early if you mean to debate until 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we can get through.

Mr. MANN. There are so many gentlemen on the other side of the House—the Democratic side—who are opposed to it that I think they should have a fair chance to fight it.

Mr. KITCHIN. We will give them a fair chance. The SPEAKER. All this talk is out of order. Mr. MANN. It is instructive, nevertheless.

Resolution (H. Res. 458) requesting the President of the United States to furnish the House with information.

Resolved, That the President of the United States furnish the House with the following information:

In making appointments, transfers, promotions, demotions, and removals in clerical and other positions in the various executive branches of the Federal civil service, to what extent is sex a factor in the selections and decisions?

In what branches of the service, if any, during the year ending December 31, 1916, did the appointing officials specify sex when asking for certifications? Which sex was specified, and in respect to what positions was this specification made? In what branches and what instances was sex not specified?

Are there any positions in any branch of the service to which women who have passed the prescribed examinations would not be appointed or promoted? If so, what branches, what positions, and why are women denied appointment or promotion?

Are there any branches of the service in which officials fix limitations as to the salary grades or positions to which women may be promoted? If so, what branches and what positions, and why are the limitations fixed?

Are any civil-service examinations open to men only? If so, what and how many examinations during the year ending December 31, 1916, were so restricted, and why? What, if any, examinations are open to women only? How many, and why? What, and how many, examinations are open to both men and women?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because it does not inquire simply into the facts in the possession of the department, but asks for an opinion on the part of the department.

Mr. KEATING. I would like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. Mr. FITZGERALD. On the second page of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, in the first line, in the sixth line, in the tenth line, and in the eleventh line, the resolution calls for opinions or arguments

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado want to argue it?

Mr. KEATING. I think a reading of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, will reveal the fact that I do not ask the President of the United States for an opinion. At least that was not the object of the resolution. I sought to so draft the resolution as to permit the President to give us information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but you ask him two or three different questions.

Mr. KEATING. I ask him why.

The SPEAKER. It destroys the privilege. You might just as well ask him in so many words to give his reasons. fact is too well settled to warrant hunting up decisions about it.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20453, the fortifications bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The ge gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

Houston] will take the Chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20453, the fortifications bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, and of structures for the torpedo defense of the United States and for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves, $250,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. This paragraph really contains provisions for two quite different propositions, it seems to me; "for protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, and of structures for the torpedo defense of the United States and for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves." Is this $250,000 to be devoted to any such propositions as the gentle-page 1,000 to be devoted to any such propositions as the gente-man from South Carolina [Mr. Whaley] advanced on Saturday, for a change in the carriages of guns, and so on? Mr. SHERLEY. The practice has always been to carry this item as a general maintenance item for minor repairs and preservation and maintenance, and whenever there is need of any large material alteration, not an incident to the usual upkeep, that is asked for specifically. That is the reason for the language, "for which there may be no special appropriation language, "for which there may be no special appropriation available." Then the latter part of the paragraph results from the consolidation of two items that used to be carried separately. We used to have a separate maintenance item for structures for the torpedo defense for the engineers. As to the maintenance of that, a minor item, there was no reason why it should be carried in the main maintenance paragraph.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have no criticism to make of the paragraph, but I suggest it is not in harmony with what the gentleman has maintained in the House, and I question the propriety of it. Mr. SHERLEY. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think that there can be any criticism of the paragraph as rearranged, but I want to invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is not in harmony with his oft-repeated policy, as expressed in the House, and I think most properly, to segregate rather than to aggregate different items under a paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps not, although every generalization has to be viewed in the light of particular facts. In this instance the different moneys that go to different purposes are very carefully set apart. But there was no use in keeping the maintenance item for structures for torpedo defense separate.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk will read.

For maintenance and repair of searchlights and electric light and power equipment for seacoast fortifications, and for tools, electrical and other supplies, and appliances to be used in their operation, including the purchase of reserve lights, $40,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the reason for the insertion of the new language on lines 5 and 6, of similar purport to that carried in the paragraph under consideration-

For installation and replacement of electric-light and power plants at seacoast fortifications, $110,000.

That is a new item, I believe, so far as the phraseology is concerned, in the fortifications bill. It may have been a transfer from some other paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. One item relates to the original installation and the other is a maintenance item, pure and

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the item I refer to in lines 5 and 6 been heretofore carried separately in the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. According to my marked copy, it is new. Otherwise I would not have made the inquiry.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is in error. The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendm

The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, maintenance, operation, and repair of airships and other aerial machines, buildings for equipment, and other accessories necessary in the aviation section for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the United States, $3,600,000.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman proposes to make the point of order, as I understand he does, I suggest that he make it, so that we may have a ruling by the Chair, and in that way expedite the matter.

Mr. DENT. Very well, I make the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to inquire the basis of the point of order?

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that this item comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and does not come within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. My reason for that is that this item has always heretofore been carried in the military appropriation bill, and appears for the first time in the fortifications bill this year. Furthermore, it is proposed by the Signal Corps, if they can get the necessary appropriation, to create seven squadrons with the field army and six squadrons to be used in connection with the coast defense. These machines that are to be purchased are to be operated under the jurisdiction and control of the Signal Corps. That is so stated in the hearings before our committee, and I believe before the Committee on Fortifications.

My proposition in a nutshell is this, that these hydroplanes, which are to be used in connection with seacoast defenses, are movable, and will move with the squadron to which they attached, and therefore are a part of the mobile army and under the jurisdiction of the Signal Corps, just as the aero squadrons will be with the field army. And it seems to me that in view of the fact that this item has been carried heretofore in the military appropriation bill and has never been carried heretofore in the fortifications bill, and that these machines are connected with the squadrons that are to be established under the Signal Corps, this item necessarily comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs and not within the jurisdiction of the Fortifications Committee of the House. Now, as to the matter of inconvenience, here we have this situation: The Signal Corps is asking the Military Affairs Committee to appropriate $16,000,000 for aviation purposes, including seacoast defenses, and they go before the Fortifications Committee and ask also for an appropriation. The result will be to split the appropriation, to divide it in two, and the further result will be that it will not be to the interest of the Government in the matter of economy. It will be duplicating the work. That is the proposition that I desire to submit.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is mistaken in several statements of fact, and in all of his conclusions touching parliamentary law as applied to this item. bill under consideration by the committee is a bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes. It is not restricted simply to matters relating to fixed fortifications, but the rule of the House under which matters are referred to the Committee on Appropriations in connection with defense is one that reads not only for "fortifications" but "for coast defense, and there is no limitation upon the jurisdiction of the committee which confines it to the consideration of matters only in connection with fixed defenses, though in my judgment, as I will undertake to demonstrate in a few moments, the paragraph could be sustained as being in order simply as applying to fixed There have been frequent questions of the first importance between the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations touching the restrictive jurisdictions of those two committees. From the day when the Committee on Military Affairs succeeded in taking part of the jurisdiction from the Committee on Appropriations down to this hour, there have been constant efforts made by that committee, some very few of them successful, to enlarge its jurisdiction at the expense of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, a number of gentlemen make the point that inasmuch as this matter was carried in a previous Army bill, therefore we have no jurisdiction of it. It might be sufficient first to answer that the recent appropriation that has come out from the Committee on Military Affairs was one contained in about four lines of legislation which related to aviation generally and did not by its terms include the creation. equipment, and maintenance of hydroaeroplanes used for seacoast defense purposes. Had it done so it would have been subject to a point of order, which point in my judgment would have had to be sustained. But there are a number of decisions which hold that the fact that estimates have been referred to particular committees or have been acted upon by committees is not of itself conclusive of the jurisdiction of those committees; and particularly it is to be borne in mind that the submission of estimates to particular committees by a department should never be permitted to determine the question of the jurisdiction of committees. Otherwise you would have, as has frequently occurred, departments failing to get favorable consideration from a particular committee of estimates submitted, and then submitting similar estimates to another committee in order to try to get favorable consideration. If the rule was that the submission of estimates by the department determined the jurisdiction of committees, the House would often find itself in the peculiar position of having the question of its own jurisdiction determined by a foreign agency, and its own rules subject to be set at naught by the action of departments.

I submit that the language of the paragraph to which the point of order is made clearly brings it within the purview of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. guage is-

For the purchase, manufacture, maintenance, operation, and repair of airships and other aerial machines, buildings for equipment, and other accessories necessary in the aviation section for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the United States, $3,600,000.

The fact that these airships are mobile has nothing to do with the proposition. The Military Affairs Committee once undertook to take jurisdiction from the Committee on Appropriations of items touching mine planters, boats used in connection with the mine defense of the United States, and the argument was made then that is being made here now that these mine planters were mobile; that they were not fixed; that they traveled along the coast; and that therefore appropriations for them were not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. But the Chair very properly ruled that that was not the determining factor, that these mine planters were used in connection with the coast defense. Now, what is the purpose of these airships? Their purpose is to be used in two regards-for scouting purposes, to afford information for defense as to the probable point of attack of an enemy fleet and also for fire control in connection with the fortifications themselves. It was testified by Col. Squier that it was proposed to use these hydroaeroplanes not only in spotting work, but in selves. affording the fire-control station the ability to locate enemy ships that might be obscured by fog or by a screen of smoke, adding simply a new link to the fire control of the coast de-fenses. Now, the gentleman says, and seems to think it has some weight, that that is under the control of the Signal Corps. That is true; but the fact that this appropriation will be expended by the Signal Corps does not determine jurisdiction of We carry items in this bill-and we just passed one, without the gentleman making the slightest point of order, for the operation and maintenance of fire-control installation at seacoast defenses, $140,000. That also is under the control and expenditure of the Signal Corps, and there are a number of items in this bill that are for the use of the Signal Corps and are expended by the Signal Corps.

Mr. DENT. But these items in the bill are of a permanent

Mr. SHERLEY. These are not for buildings at all; they are for the installation of various machinery in connection with fire control.

Mr. DENT. Are they not fixtures?

Mr. SHERLEY. That has nothing to do with it. That is the old argument that the committee made when they tried to take away the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. We are building mobile guns. This very bill carries provisions for 12 and 16 inch howitzers and a 14-inch railroad gun to move along the coast. The fact that they are not fixed, not tied to an emplacement, the fact that they probably will be used in connection with the mobile activities does not in the slightest degree rob this committee of the subject matter.

Mr. TILSON, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman sure that that is the reason they are subject to the jurisdiction of his committee? Is it not a fact that his committee has jurisdiction over expenditures for mobile artillery for the Regular Army?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Mr. TILSON. Is it not the fact?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the fact, but that is not the reason these particular appropriations are in order on this bill. These particular appropriations relate to guns that are not contemplated as any part of the scheme for supplying the mobile Army of Regulars and Volunteers with field artillery. They are a part of the coast-defense scheme. The trouble with gentlemen is that they have not hunted up the history of the legislative division of committees. In old days the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of all these matters, and a very historic fight that occurred in this body in a desire to punish the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who had become one of the most powerful men in Congress, led to a combination on the part of certain chairmen and other influential Members to take from the Committee on Appropriations part of its jurisdiction. Then came that division of appropriations that to the minds of many students of our history has seemed so unfortunate. There was given to the Military Affairs Committee the jurisdiction over the appropriations for the Army generally, as contradistinguished to two matters-one coast defense and one the armament for the mobile artillery and ammunition for the Regulars and Volunteers. They only got jurisdiction of any mobile armament at all by virtue of tying it to other appropriations for the militia, and

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman think that as a matter of logic and business efficiency that was a wise division? Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think we ought to have kept all of it, and then we would be dealing with materiel and you would be dealing with the personnel.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thought the gentleman's argument was based on the materiel for the coast defense

Mr. SHERLEY. I am undertaking to show to the Chair and to the committee somewhat the jurisdiction of the respective committees with respect to the proposal before the Chair raised by the gentleman from Alabama

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is proposed to expend this appropriation for hydroplanes?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is the gentleman aware that out of the money appropriated at the last session 52 hydroplanes have been contracted for?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was because I was so plainly aware of that that we concluded our committee ought to have jurisdiction over the matter that belonged to it, instead of letting the money appropriated under general terms in the Army bill be used for coast-defense purposes, as it is being used.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. I will.
Mr. TOWNER. Is the jurisdiction of the Committee on Fortifications or the Appropriations Committee coextensive with what might be called coast defense?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is; and plainly shown by the fact that in the revision of the language of the rules as to what should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, they added the words "coast defense." So that it is not restricted to fortifications, as the gentleman from Alabama might think.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think that retaining the name of "fortifications" is unfortunate under the existing circumstances?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not; that is the habit of the human mind to use the shortest term instead of the longest. The bills have never been limited to fortifications, and the rule of the House does not limit it to fortifications.

Mr. TOWNER. In view of the present range of 14 and 16 inch guns on fortifications and coast defenses, is it not also, even in cases where they are not encumbered by fogs and smoke, necessary in order to cover the entire range of guns that you should use hydroaeroplanes as finders?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is to my mind highly desirable and necessary. For men to say that because new machinery comes into existence for use in connection with seacoast fortifications that had not been used heretofore, thereby we should lose jurisdiction, is to make a totally illogical argument.

Last year this bill carried a provision for the acquiring of rights to patents relative to radiodynamically controlled torpedoes-mobile, entirely mobile in their character. at the time disclosed the fact that it was proposed to control those torpedoes from aeroplanes, and that they would not have necessarily any fixed connection with control from the shore. If the argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Dent] is correct, we would have had no jurisdiction of that matter. and yet there was none so bold as to make the point at that time. Clause 3 of Rule XI reads as follows:

To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, viz, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The words "and coast defenses" were not always in the rule, but because of these frequent raids on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, when the rule came to be rewritten along with others and because of decisions had in the past, the words "and coast defenses" were inserted, and in my judgment the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of everything related to coast defenses. It is well to bear in mind why matters of coast defense did not go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was not simply the inability of the men who formed the raid upon the Committee on Appropriations to get jurisdiction of coast defenses but there was a basic reason for it.

Fortifications and coast defenses partake of matters that relate in many ways as much to the Navy as they do to the Army; so much so that in many countries the entire control of coast defenses is with the admiralty and not with the army, and it has been strongly urged in America that our coast defenses ought to be a branch of the admiralty instead of being a branch of the Army. It was because of that well-known reason that when they came to make this decision they left to the committee, that was tied neither to the Army nor to the Navy, jurisdiction of this important matter, because it involved questions relating to both, and it was believed that a committee so constituted was better able to deal with the matter than a committee dealing entirely with the Army or the Navy man yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Under that reasoning the gentleman's committee has never sought jurisdiction of the personnel nor the personal equipment of the mobile army that is used at coast fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course not. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Why?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a very plain reason. It was determined at the time of the division that all matters of personnel should go to the Committee on Military Affairs; and why? They have jurisdiction touching legislation which of necessity controls the personnel, whereas all matters in relation to matériel practically were left to the Committee on Appropriations, except those that pertained to the personal equipment of soldiers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is that true with respect to transportation?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it was not true with respect to transportation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it true with regard to medical supplies?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is not personal equipment. Mr. SHERLEY. It is true as to heavy ordnance and all matters in connection with seacoast defenses.

Mr. TILSON. What about rifles? Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will listen he will catch what I say. I said heavy ordnance, and I said that jurisdiction of those matters which related directly to the soldier as an individual, which includes the rifle, had gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. This is not a matter left to the speculative notions of what men think ought to be, and let me say, in passing, inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Dent] has referred to that, that there is in my judgment a fundamental reason in the interest of economy why this matter should stay within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations not because we arrogate to ourselves any superior ability, not because we consider we are any more actuated by the desire to conserve the resources of the Government, but because these matters necessarily involve in their consideration a knowledge of the details of fortifications and coast defenses that can not be possessed by a committee that does not deal with that subject matter. One of the things that is involved will be the procurement of land on which to construct buildings in which may be housed these hydroaeroplanes, for the maintenance of them, for the machine shops in connection with them. The Committee on Military Affairs is not possessed and could not be possessed by virtue of legitimate work within its scope with information touching the physical conditions of seacoast fortifications, touching the land that is available or is not available for this purpose, touching the machine shops that must be available for the repair and maintenance of these machines, and therefore it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations a proper thing that we should take jurisdiction of a matter so completely tied to the work of the committee. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to this further fact, that the jurisdiction of his committee touching the whole subject of aircraft is so recent as to be within the memory of any Member of Congress, no matter how short his service. In the old days estimates were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations for airships, for balloons, for buildings in which to house them, for plants to generate the hydrogen by which they should be inflated, and perhaps it may be because the committee did not express quite as liberal a view touching those estimates in those days as the gentlemen of the Signal Corps think ought to have been expressed that accounts for the fact that they subsequently went to the Committee on Military Affairs with their estimate touching aircraft.

Mr. DENT. But it is a matter of fact that ever since we have been legislating upon this subject it has been carried in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, that is not nearly accurate. airship that was constructed was built by virtue of funds furnished by the Committee on Appropriations and out of a bill making provision for the fortifications of America. It came out of funds providing for a Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, and the moneys that were appropriated that led to Prof. Langley making the first airship that was ever made, and the money that purchased the first Wright machine, and subsequently a number of other machines, came from funds furnished by the Committee on Appropriations in the fortifications appropriation bill.

Not only the Wright machines but other machines were purchased out of funds in the control of the Committee on Appropriations in the bill making provision for the fortifications of America. The Chair will find in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, page 707, under paragraph 4082, as a footnote, this statement:

Also in the Fiftieth Congress an appropriation for torpedoes for harbor defense was held by Chairman Blount, of Georgia, to be in order on the fortifications bill, which is within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations

Now, if the Chair could take the time to examine the debate which was had at that time he would be struck by the similarity of arguments then presented and now presented by members of the Committee on Military Affairs. The whole argument then was that inasmuch as these torpedo defenses were not fixed and tied and a torpedo planter was mobile, therefore, forsooth, we had no jurisdiction of the matter. And yet it did not take long for the Chair to decide otherwise, and from that day to this they have been carried in the fortifications bill. The Chair will also find in section 4048 of Hinds' Precedents this statement:

The acts of the executive departments in submitting estimates are not of effect in determining questions of jurisdiction—

And there follows-

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky please read that clause again?

Mr. SHERLEY (reading) -- .

The acts of the executive departments in submitting estimates are not of effect in determining questions of jurisdiction.

And then follows extracts from a very interesting opinion of the Chair in which the Chair pointed out what I pointed out a few moments ago, that to permit the action of executive departments in submitting estimates to determine jurisdiction would be for this House to abrogate its control over its own affairs and would leave to the departments the determination of the jurisdiction of committees.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman concluded his line of thought on that point?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will consult the hearings of the Army appropriation bill for 1918, page 1030, when Col. Squier, head of the aviation section, was before the committee, he will find that I asked him this question:

Mr. Greene. When a flier who is sent out from his aviation head-quarters on detail to report to the commander of some tactical unit arrives with his machine he is under the military control and authority of that tactical commander for the time being?

Col. Squier. Yes, sir.

Mr. Greene. And he employs his machine much as if he were simply an infantryman or cavalryman, sent there for some other purpose, carrying with him his own equipment?

Col. Squier. Yes, sir.

Mr. Greene. So that the man on that service is not any different from the personnel involved in the managing of the fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I have several answers to make to that. In the first place, there is considerable testimony in conflict with it. In the second place, the testimony of officers as to what they think ought to be done by men in charge of various appliances of the Government can not and never have de-termined the question of jurisdiction. The question that the Chair is confronted with is not to determine the testimony and the weight of it of men who are trying to support an estimate, but it is the language of the bill, and the language of the bill limits the use of these hydroaeroplanes for seacoast purposes.

Now, it may be wise or unwise to so appropriate—Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment—but on the In just a moment-but on the question of jurisdiction the wisdom of the proposal is not within the scope of the Chair's determination. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. Would the gentleman maintain with that line of argument that this committee would have jurisdiction to make appropriations for the Army if the Army authorized the coast defenses, as the Army is doing under its plan in Panama?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. I never have believed in the argument ad absurdum, and I certainly am not trying to apply it here. I am not contending we could bring in any sort of language and say it was intended for coast defense, thereby precluding the ascertainment of the fact, but there is no question-

Mr. NORTON. But is not the gentleman doing this if this aviation corps is not under the jurisdiction of the coast de-

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt, and the hearings before the Subcommittee on Fortifications is full of testimony to the fact, that the main purposes, the primary purposes, these hydroaeroplanes are to used for is in connection with coast defense. They are of different type, they are heavier machines, they are hydroaeroplanes and intended to light upon the water. They are intended for the purpose of scouting in connection with the bringing back of information to the coast defense as to the probable destination of any enemy's fleet, and they are intended for the use of coast fortifications and coast commanders in connection with fire control in the event there is an engagement between battleships and the fortifications.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.
Mr. NORTON. The gentleman proposes this appropriation for the use of the purchase of hydroplanes to be under the jurisdiction of the coast-defense commander?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not say that.

Mr. NORTON. But that follows.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it does not follow at all. We appropriate for a lot of things, the money and the expenditure of which is not under the control of the Coast Artillery at all, but that has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course a part of the problem of coast defense is to be found in the defense of the coast between harbor fortifications, which of necessity falls within the jurisdiction probably in any emergency of the mobile army.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not by any means would that necessarily follow. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Largely.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not necessarily largely.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We will not debate the question of strategy or tactics. We will get down to the facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Unquestionably the use of hydroplanes would be as desirable there as in connection with fortifications, if they are held to defend the coast against the landing or the preliminary stages of an attempt at landing. Hydroplanes would be used there, would they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit-

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to ask the question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have the gentleman's thought, I think. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If hydroplanes are to be used there as a part of the mobile-army equipment, and hydroplanes are to be used in the fortifications as a part of the fixed equipment, it means that two committees will be buying two lots of hydroplanes if you are given jurisdiction over this item.

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not necessarily mean that, and it does not mean, even if that is true, that that is an undesirable thing. Two committees are now appropriating, aye, three, and have jurisdiction over aircraft. The Committee on Naval Affairs will bring in a provision for hydroaeroplanes in connection with the Navy. The Coast Guard was by a law of this Congress given authority to create aircraft to be used in connection with the Coast Guard Service, and the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of that now, and not even the Committee on Military Affairs would question that fact.

Now, there are a lot of things that we appropriate for that may be used, and I hope will be used if needed, for other defense than that of coast defense. The very mobile guns that we are establishing for coast defense, to be mounted on railroad cars, will, I trust, if the need comes, be moved on railroads and used in the interior or on the borders of our country. And the fact that a thing may be used some time subsequently for some other purpose has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest this to the gentle-man? Hydroplanes used in the naval service are taken to sea with the ships, are they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Sir? Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The hydroplanes used in the Navy service are taken to sea with the ships, and they are as much a part of the Naval Establishment as any other factor?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to start right on

Mr. SHERLEY. I am doing the best I can to start the gentleman right. Many of the airships that are to be under the control of the Navy are expected to have home ports and to stay there and not to accompany the fleet. There are other aircraft that will accompany the fleet. For instance, there are proposals looking to the establishment of very large aeroplane bases at Panama, with the idea that those aeroplanes will home there, that will be their home port, and the gentleman's statement is therefore incorrect in that respect.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But, whatever the details of use, they fall completely into the Naval Establishment as separated from the Army?

Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Coast Guard aeroplanes are not military aeroplanes or to be used for military purposes primarily, are they?

Mr. SHERLEY. It depends on what the gentleman means by " military."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, time does not run. was simply trying to debate a point of order, but if the Chair is ready to rule I am willing to yield.

There are one or two decisions that perhaps it might be well to bring to the attention of the Chair. I have been diverted somewhat by the colloquy from the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a good deal of stress is made that they have carried provisions the last year for this purpose and that should be controlling upon the Chair. I desire to call the Chair's attention to a ruling found in paragraph 4045 of Hinds' Precedents, page 711, as follows:

In the appropriation bill for the current year all of the items in controversy, or most of them, will be found in the Army appropriation bill.

This is exceptional. But stress is laid upon this fact by the Committee on Military Affairs because objection was not made by the Committee on Appropriations.

That is just the same contention that is being made, practically, here.

On the contrary, the Committee on Appropriations claim that this was overlooked by them and grew out of the great pressure of work before the several committees during their excessive labors in the last Congress, and also because the Military Committee was given so much way and consideration incident to our wars. It is proper to state, in this connection, that the Book of Estimates invited this action by the Military Committee. That book adopted new phraseology in the estimate, differing from prior estimates, so that these items were before the Committee on Military Affairs when making up its bill and were not before the Committee on Appropriations so as to attract its attention, as they had done in the past. The Chair is of the opinion that this should in no way be considered as a precedent to govern his decision as against the uniform practice, long, well-considered discussion, and carefully rendered opinions prior thereto.

The Chair desires to say a word in regard to this Book of Estimates.

The Chair then goes on to speak of how impracticable it would be to permit the reference of the estimates to determine jurisdiction. I might say, in passing, that since that day we have gotten out of the practice of referring estimates at all, and the estimates which the Committee on Military Affairs speaks of, $16,000,000, have never been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they are no more before the committee, except as their subject matter would make them, than they are before any other committee of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, aeroplanes in either the Army or the Navy, or anywhere else, were inserted some years ago in an item in the Army appropriation bill. Possibly at the time the item would have been subject to a point of order, there then being no aeroplanes in the Army or in connection with the mili-tary defense of the Government. But having inaugurated the system, and providing that this method of Army warfare is in use, it is in order to put it anywhere we please, just as it would be in order to provide a gun for the Army which previously had been used by the Navy; just as it would be in order to provide a gun for the fortifications which previously had been used only inland.

Now, in order for us to provide these necessary items for defense we may say that the Army shall have certain equipment; but if we may say that the Army shall have that equipment coming through the Committee on Military Affairs, it is no argument why we may not provide the same equipment in the coast defense, or why we may not provide the same equipment in the Navy. No one would contend for a moment that because the Committee on Military Affairs had original jurisdiction of aero-planes in the Army, therefore they would have to determine whether you should have aeroplanes in the Navy. No one would contend that. Yet there is no distinction in principle between providing aeroplanes for the Army and aeroplanes for the Navy, and providing aeroplanes for the Army and aeroplanes for the fortification and coast defense.

While it is true the Army overlaps the fortifications, so far as the personnel is concerned, yet so far as the House is concerned and so far as the appropriations are concerned there is a clear line between the jurisdiction, and we have the same right to provide aeroplanes for fortifications and for coast de-fense in the fortification bill that we have to provide aeroplanes for defense in the Navy in the naval bill or aeroplanes for Army use in the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question for the Chair to determine is whether or not the purchase, manufacture, and maintenance of airships and other aerial machines for use in connection with seacoast defenses of the United States is properly within the jurisdiction of this bill.

Now, there is, of course, an absence of precedent relating to airships, because of the fact that it is a modern invention and a modern device. Much has been said in regard to the jurisdiction of this bill and in reference to the general jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and also as to its jurisdiction over the subject matter in this paragraph. Reference has been made to the fact that the Military Committee is taking jurisdiction over that subject and is urging appropriations for airships. That would relate to the merits of this provi-That presents a matter not for the Chair to rule upon, but for the committee to decide in passing upon this paragraph and upon the provision of another bill relating to the same subject matter. The question is whether or not this committee has jurisdiction of this subject.

The rule is laid down that an appropriation for vessels, submarine mines, and so forth, in connection with coast defense belongs to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. As necessary as that, and more so it seems, the use of airships would be an essential part of the coast defense. It would be thoroughly identified with it, as much so as the establishment of a mine or a picket or an observation tower or a light, or anything of that kind. The Chair thinks it is an essential part of the coast defense, and the reason is manifest for its being so. That being true, there is no question but that this committee has jurisdiction of the subject matter of the paragraph, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment following the paragraph ending on line 22 of page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sherley: On page 4, at the end of line 22, Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: On page 4, at the end of the 22, insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is directed to submit to Congress on or before January 1, 1918, a detailed statement of the land, buildings, and other facilities now available and to be required for the accommodation of airships and other aerial machines to be used in connection with the seacoast defense of the continental United States, the insular possessions, and the Panama Canal."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Rubey having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his messengers.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 217) to authorize the sale of school property in the city of Denver, Colo., and for other purposes.

The message also aunounced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7537) authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly inform the committee what is the cost of one of these aeroplanes?

Mr. SHERLEY. It runs from about $18,000 to $22,500.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I was informed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that they cost about $50,000 annually for their upkeep; that is, aeroplanes in connection with the Army.

Mr. SHERLEY. The testimony is the same, to the effect that it will cost to keep one flier in the air $50,000 annually. He is to have at his disposal not only a first ship but reserve ships, because they very speedily wear out in continuous flight,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether the aeroplanes already purchased have been purchased under conditions that might make for economy?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer the gentleman with the detailed knowledge that I would like to have, although I think that is not the fault of the committee. The gentleman will appreciate that last year, when the Signal Corps was given the very large sum that it received, and told thereby to go out and quickly create an air service, with the limited amount of capacity for manufacture in this country and the evolutionary stage that the whole matter is in, some expenditures will be made that in the light of future cost will seem to have been extravagant. But there comes into this, as there comes into so many other questions in connection with matters of defense, a question of the value of time as against money, and from what I can learn from a rather full examination of Col. Squier the money is being expended—having in mind rapidity of creation of this service—with care and with judgment. I was impressed with Col. Squier's knowledge of the subject, with his ability, and with his industry, but we were unable to get the details, because a lot of them are not available yet that would enable me to answer the gentleman as I might wish.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. One further question. This will provide 70 aeroplanes if each is to cost $50,000 this year. I suppose $50,000 is operation, not purchase and operation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman will find from an examination of the hearings that on page 213 of the current hearings a statement submitted by Col. Squier as to the estimated expenditures for 1917 for hydroplanes only. Those were expenditures out of the money that was appropriated at the last session of Congress, and he contemplated the creation of one squadron in the Philippines, one squadron in the Hawaiian Islands, one squadron on the Canal Zone, and six squadrons in Continental United States.

Now, it is proposed, with the sums which are carried in the bill before us, to maintain that squadron in the Philippines, the squadron in the Hawaiian Islands, and to complete and maintain the six squadrons in the United States. In other words, in the expenditure of this money some of it will necessarily go for completion, because these squadrons are completed only in the sense that they have a given number of machines for the 12 flyers, but they have not the desirable reserve number of machines for those flyers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How many aeroplanes constitute sanadron?

Mr. SHERLEY. Thirty-six, as I recall-12 active and 24 as reserve

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does that mean 12 flyers and 36 machines?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Each flyer is supposed to have three machines at his disposal.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This appropriation will nowhere near take care of that number of aeroplanes and flyers.

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not take care of getting them and maintaining them, but they have most of them out of the appropriation that was made last year, and this is to maintain them, and is the estimate of Col. Squier himself. The only we did not allow was provision for the creation of two additional squadrons in the United States. The committee was in a position where it could not exercise any accurate individual judgment touching the matter, because the information was not available on which judgment could warrantably be based; but what we did was to allow for the completion and the maintenance of existing squadrons, with the idea that at the end of another year we would be in a position to know actually some of the details as to cost and maintenance and so forth.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There are no aeroplanes at Panama, are there?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not sure that any are down there. I

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.' But they have been provided

Mr. SHERLEY. The funds have been allotted for that purpose, and I think orders for their manufacture have been given.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Have any aeroplanes been sent to the Philippines?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; there are some in the Philippines, and have been for some time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There were only two there a year and a half ago, as I remember.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am unable to state how many are there now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I know the gentleman has this information, and I wish to get it, so I would like to question him further

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If this provides for a squadron with 12 flyers and 12 active machines, which I suppose would be the way to look at it, 12 for the Philippines, 12 for Hawaii, and 12 for Panama, that makes 36-

Mr. SHERLEY. Panama is not included in the estimates in this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is 36, and 72 for the United States in addition, would be 108. Now 108 can not possibly be taken care of by the sum of $3,600,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will understand that out of the funds now available there has been allotted the sum of $2,000,000, and the greater part of that money will not be spent before a considerable lapse of time. These machines will not all be in existence for maintenance during the entire 12 months that we are making provision for. The only answer I can make to the gentleman is that Col. Squier estimated this as sufficient.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. One more question. the first hydroaeroplanes that have been provided for by the coast fortifications bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. By this bill. The gentleman will recall that last year there was an act passed, or, rather, a provision made

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I know there was, but is this the first item carried by the coast fortifications bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there was carried in the Army act a three-line provision under which we appropriated some $13,000,000. There was no limitation or restriction of any kind upon its expenditure. Out of that Col. Squier and those acting with him determined upon the expenditure of a given sum for hydroaeroplanes in connection with coast defense. Now, this is the first time that provision has been made anywhere directly for this purpose, though moneys from last year are being used for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, may I indulge in the hope, if this is the first time that this has been provided for by the Appropriations Committee, that it will result in something beneficial to the Military Establishment of the United States? I say that for the reason that in my humble opinion. which is purely a lay opinion, the aviation section of our Military Establishment is a shame and a disgrace, having in mind that which we expected to do some years ago and that which we have accomplished so far.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit—
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota, I want to state a few things to the gentleman. I do not know whether it will do any good or not, but I think the matter ought to be discussed at some time on the floor of the House. We all know that any system of a mobile army or coast fortifications requires aeroplanes as much as it requires guns or men. A seacoast gun without the aid of aeroplanes to locate the enemy and tell where he is going and what he is doing, and also to assist in locating him and in getting his range, and so on, is certainly not an up-to-date system. Now, our coast fortifications in the insular possessions and in the United States are woefully deficient in the matter of air craft. They have not anything of this kind that has come to be the real, modern eyes of an army. While I am not qualified to speak, examine the reports and you will find everywhere it is said that the great revelation of the European war now raging is the increased efficiency of artillery fire, due somewhat to the improvement of the guns, but mainly to the assistance of aeroplanes. Aeroplanes perform a great and important function in connection with coast defenses at any point where ships may come or where troops may be expected to land. They assist not only in the actual work of the fortifications themselves, but of course assist in all the adjuncts of the fortifications, in submarine work, and so on.

Now, this seems to me a step in the direction of providing something specific for coast fortifications and insular possessions. Therefore, I indulge in the hope that it will be wisely expended and that we will get results. What has been the situation respecting our Army? I do not know enough about it to have an opinion worth shucks, but I do know that we have not had results. I mean by not having an opinion worth shucks that I have not an opinion as to the reasons why; but you and I and every man, woman, and child know that it has been an absolute, humiliating, contemptible failure.

We all know, who have taken occasion to make inquiry, that when Gen. Pershing's expedition went into Mexico it was not without the aeroplane. They had eight. Did the eight fly? Good God, no! They were naturally not built for the air; they were built to go near the ground; they were built to rest in the sand; they were built to move only through the sagebrush. They had not the ability to fly. No one there could instill into them the blood or the microbe of flying. After a while two were able to fly by jerks, and after a further time some were able to fly spasmodically and intermittently, and some of the time I suppose have been flying We appropriated $13,000,000, as I remember distinctly, a year ago, and we have not had much better results yet. I have been told that the Aviation Corps of our Army has not been properly organized. I do not know whether it has or not; I do not know what a proper organization ought to be. I have heard it stated that there was difficulty in connection with the high officers. I know there has been a shaking up and a reorganization, and I hope it will be for the lasting good of the Aviation Corps. While we sit here with patriotism and vote the money in large sums it ought to be possible to put that money so as to produce efficient results

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, with much of what the gentleman from Minnesota has just said anyone in possession of the facts, of course, must agree; but I think he will agree that his criticism is rather severe when he analyzes what we as a legislative body have done. As a matter of fact, the first appropriation that we made of substantial importance in this direction was made in the Army appropriation bill which became a law. on the 29th of August, 1916.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There was a $2,000,000 appropriation some four years ago.

Mr. TILSON. I do not recall that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I recollect that I voted for one. Mr. TILSON. I think the gentleman has probably overstated the amount. At any rate the first real substantial appropriation that we made within my term of service here that would really warrant going forward in this aviation service was made on the 29th of last August. Since that time we have encountered all sorts of difficulties. Of course, we knew there would be great obstacles to overcome in a new subject like this. Perhaps our aviation service has not gone ahead as fast as might have been possible under other circumstances, but on the whole we have progressed in the right direction, especially since the present very enthusiastic and unusually able head of the service took charge. Therefore I feel that we should not be too savage or indiscriminating in our criticism of those who have had charge of that appropriation.

That the aviation service is important can not be too strongly The use of aeroplanes is absolutely essential now in war and any nation that does not have aeroplanes in great numbers, and fliers trained to use them, would be at the mercy of any other country that had exercised even ordinary foresight in providing for both. Therefore, appropriations for this purpose must go on, and whether we divide it, as has been ruled on the point of order, or confine it in the hands of one committee, we must go forward and make the appropriations. Then we shall be in a position to urge upon the executive departments that they shall go forward with a wise expenditure of the money. We should not deceive ourselves, however, as to the time required. We must not expect in one year to find the air full of aeroplanes and trained fliers; because it takes time, and that is the all-sufficient reason why we ought to appropriate wisely and liberally now so that the executive departments may uninterruptedly and intelligently push the work. No plan of national defense that fails to utilize fully this great agency will be adequate or safe.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it may be of interest to supplement somewhat what has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson]. I think the gentleman from Connecticut is quite right in saying that criticism of the Army officials is not fully warranted. I agree thoroughly that the conditions that arose in connection with the very limited air service that we had inaugurated some years ago was very discreditable to the service. And yet, since the appropriation of last year a very great change has taken place. I was impressed with the fact that the country was exceedingly fortunate in having in charge of the whole matter now a man who of all Americans has had the widest experience in observing both the manufacture and operation of aircraft abroad. Col. Squiers has more knowledge of what has taken place abroad in reference to aeroplanes than perhaps all other Americans put together. What he has accomplished since he has been in charge is creditable to him and those who have worked with him.

On page 228 of the hearings is a statement submitted by Col. Squiers, in which he says:

The following figures will give an idea as to the work accomplished from January 1, 1916, to December 1, 1916, as compared with the entire work done during the year 1915:

	1915	1916
Total flights made. Hours in air.	4,388 1,814	9,800 4,641

During the expedition into Mexico the First Aero Squadron at Columbus were continually being used as dispatch bearers and mail carriers. About September 15 a daily airplane mail service was established between Columbus, N. Mex., and Colonia Dublan, Mexico.

In addition to the above cross-country flying there have been numerous flights made from San Diego, Cal., to Los Angeles, Cal., a distance of 120 miles, by pupils of the San Diego school. Similar flights have also been made by pupils and pilots at the Mineola school.

There is also somewhere a statement that I can not at this moment find, showing the total distance that has been flown during the past year, and which is so considerable as to occasion surprise upon learning it.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. GARDNER. What was the date when the first service was established between Columbus, N. Mex., and Colonia Dublan, Mexico?

Mr. SHERLEY. September 15.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand it was November, or later. Mr. SHERLEY. I have no personal knowledge of it except the statement of Col. Squiers.

Mr. GARDNER. I can state positively that at the end of November, when I went down from Columbus to Colonia Dublan, it was not in daily operation at all, so far as I could see.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may or may not be true. I can not testify from personal knowledge; I have not been into Mexico; but I am giving to the committee the information that was given to me, and which I have had no reason to question as to its accuracy.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] as well as the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is correct, and I think I can give the explanation for When the service was first established it was found that the horsepower of the engines that were used in the first planes was not sufficient to work well in the higher altitudes of Mexico. Later, when the horsepower was increased to 160 in the engines at present used, the service was reestablished and is now being regularly performed, so that it is probable that at the time the gentleman from Massachusetts was there this service had been interrupted; that the new engines were not in commission; that the regular service was not at that time running.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I know there was some trouble originally in regard to the propellers, and I have no doubt that there was some trouble in regard to engines. I did not undertake to question the accuracy of the statement because, after all, the maintenance of that particular service would not necessarily indicate the progress and the skill and the judgment with which the service is being created.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, strike out "$3,600,000" and insert "$5,200,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. The paragraph to which the amendment is offered has been passed and a new paragraph has been adopted. I do not desire to cut off the gentleman from debate.

Mr. GARDNER. Have we passed that paragraph? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and I have offered and had adopted a new paragraph.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the next paragraph been touched upon?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the ruling of the Chair upon that before I begin my debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the Chair was not in the chair at the time, but the Chair is informed that there was a new paragraph offered, acted upon, and adopted following the paragraph to which the gentleman from Massachusetts offered his amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, that should be qualified, however, by this fact: I intended to move to strike out the last word of the paragraph to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] now desires to offer an amendment. I intended to do that, but the gentleman from Kentucky sent up the new paragraph, which was read and adopted, and then apparently by unanimous consent we proceeded to discuss the paragraph to which the gentleman from Massachusetts now desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made just the ordinary pro forma amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

What amendment are we now discussing?

Mr. SABATH. We are discussing an amendment to strike out the last word.
Mr. GARDNER. The last word of what?

The CHAIRMAN. Of the amendment that was adopted, as the Chair understands.

Mr. GARDNER. But it is too late to strike out the last word of an amendment that has been adopted. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is for the Clerk to read. Mr. GARDNER. No; the regular order is an amendment which I shall offer as a new paragraph, which I send to the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, after the new paragraph, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"In addition to the above apportionment for air service, an amount is hereby appropriated sufficient to bring the total appropriation for the service up to the estimates of the War Department for 1918."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon his point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to state what my point of order is, and then I will be glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on why his amendment is in order. The paragraph providing funds for the air service in connection with coast fenses has been agreed to and passed. A new paragraph calling for a report has been offered and adopted. The provision that the gentleman from Massachusetts offers is not germane at this point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GARDNER. No; the gentleman does not. I think the gentleman from Kentucky is practically correct in his statement. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

For purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $6,900,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $2,200,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Gardner: Page 5, line 2, strike out "$6,900,000" and insert "$10,800,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, this is simply another amendment in the line of not cutting down the meager requests of the War Department. Why the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] has seen fit to cut down the very meager requests of the War Department I do not know. God knows at the rate we are proceeding in this matter of ordnance and ammunition and air service it will be many, many years before we are anywhere near the minimum requirements as laid down by the report of the Treat Board last year. I fail to see why year after year we are told that we have to be penny wise and pound foolish, saving in the air service year after year. Some one tells us we have a magnificent air service. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut was quite wrong a moment ago. The four or five machines which we originally had down on the border when they started chasing Villa all broke down. Then, after that it is true they got some higher-powered machines. They had 11 of them at the time I left the border, a little after Thanksgiving. They had them right outside of Columbus. If with those machines there was a daily six service to Columbus. there was a daily air service to Colonia Dublan I never heard of it and never saw it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like it very much if the gentleman from Kentucky could tell us why it is that when the War Department tells us we must have $10,800,000 for the purchase, manufacture, and test of artillery in the fiscal year ending 1918, why is it that he insists on reducing that amount to $6,900,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, "the gentleman from Kentucky" is not the entire committee, and therefore the statement that "the gentleman from Kentucky" does things is sometimes subject to qualification. First, let me tell the gentleman the reason that did not actuate me, although it might have in connection with this item. If the gentleman from Massachusetts has not been incorrectly quoted, he has very recently informed an eager and waiting public that the Democrats in Congress were spending money "like drunken sailors," and perhaps an explanation might be found in the cutting of the estimates in order to relieve ourselves from the terrific indictment of a man whose activities have chiefly been in the line of offering amendments to increase all sums that have been recommended in Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the reason was broader and better than that, because we do not act from a personal attitude or from personal or political bias in dealing with these matters.

It developed in the hearings that the estimates which were submitted contemplated seven annual appropriations for the completion of the scheme which had been approved by the Secretary of war, known as the Treat Board scheme, for the supply of mobile artillery and ammunition for an army of a million men. It also developed that the cost of procuring such matériel was 25 per cent greater now than it was a year ago. Nobody has the right, and nobody conservative of judgment would desire, to be dogmatic about matters of this kind. It is impossible for any human being to apportion, to determine, the risk of war or when it may occur. Always there must be an exercise of judgment of how much can be appropriated at any particular time in order to provide against the risks that may be near or may be remote, according to the facts hidden in the womb of time. This committee has undertaken to bring in a bill that represents its best judgment touching those matters, having in mind what was being appropriated for various purposes, having in mind the money that would need to be provided, and having further in mind that if the committee was always to allow the maximum sum and those sums should grow as they have grown by a 100, 200, 500, and 1,000 per cent, that the very cause of preparedness that men have at heart would be greatly injured, and there would necessarily come a revulsion of feeling on the part of the people that might make impossible in the future that progress that we have hoped for, particularly when men in one breath express a desire for rapid preparation for defense, and in the next breath tell the people of America that the money is being spent like drunken sailors spend it. I submit that the true friends of preparedness are the men who undertake to keep their heads and make progress, rapid progress, but do not try to distinguish themselves by the extreme demands they make on the Public Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir. Mr. GARDNER. On the basis of $10,800,000 appropriation it was supposed that in eight years we should have appropriated enough money to meet the cost of ammunition which the Treat Board decided we ought to accumulate against an outbreak of war. Is not that correct?

Mr. SHERLEY. Seven years is the estimate, beginning with

Mr. GARDNER. Seven years, beginning with this. By reducing that amount from $10,800,000 to $6,900,000, how many more years would it be before we shall have appropriated as much money as the Treat Board tells us we needed in order to make us safe? How many more years of insecurity will be added in addition on account of economy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, coupling with that the request that I may have five minutes to answer the gentleman, I have no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not desire the time now. I only wanted to answer the question of the gentleman. I am willing

Mr. GARDNER. I am willing for the gentleman to have 10 minutes if I can have 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to cut off the gentleman's

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended 10 minutes

No, Mr. Chairman; I do not want that time. I asked for five minutes, and probably will not use that. I only asked for that in order not to be discourteous and to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I couple with that the request that I may also proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply asked for five minutes. If anybody else wants an opportunity, I have no objection.

The CHARMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that he may have five minutes?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I object. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire to speak in favor of the amendment, and I understand the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] is against the amendment. I think he ought

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to following the gentle

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I am perfectly willing to follow the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I thank you very much, sir.
Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say one word. I do not wish to see a matter of this importance become one of personality of any kind. I know from what the gentleman in charge of this bill said yesterday that he has been trying to bring these appropriations up to the amount that was requested by the Government. I know that he feels with me that that request is I will tell the committee what it is, exactly. almost too modest.

It was proposed in the military bill and in this bill to ask for sufficient appropriation for cannon to bring the total supply seven years from now to a supply for a million men, which, I take it, should be for about 100,000 men a year, inasmuch as about 300,000 have already been provided for. Now, at that rate of 100,000 men a year, how long would it take to have sufficient field. mountain, and siege guns to take care of our 21,000,000 ablebodied population? It would take 210 years. We have been neglecting provisions for that arming of the Nation which, under the name of the militia, was ordered in the Constitution, and we can not somehow realize that we should be prepared to put a nation in the field in time of war.

Standing armies are nothing now. There are a few hundred thousand men in every nation in each of such armies. It is the ability to train and to arm the people that makes our national defense. And I would to heaven that I dared ask, not for the amount asked in this estimate, but for four or five times that amount, so as to have munitions for a few hundred thousand men each year in addition to what we have, to be ready if we should need them.

Mr. MONDELL, Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

GARDNER].

I shall vote for this bill, but I vote for it doubting very greatly the wisdom or the necessity of appropriating at this time so large a sum as $51,000,000, nearly $52,000,000, for the purposes contemplated under the items in the bill. I think that we scarcely realize how fast and far we are going in the matter of these expenditures

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have learned some things, perhaps, in the last two years. At any rate, we have heard a great deal about the necessity, the importance, of preparing for possible attack. The country, I believe, has in the main come to believe in and desires much larger appropriations than we made two years ago and in the years that preceded that year for these purposes, and therefore I am supporting the report of the committee. am supporting the items brought in by the committee, as I expect to support, to a very considerable extent at least, the bills that will be brought here by the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objec-[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Not because I am converted to a belief in the necessity for all these enormous preparations, these great expenditures, but because the matter having been debated in the House, the matter having been discussed in the country, I am inclined to the opinion that the people generally are disposed to approve, to a considerable extent at least, these expenditures. But, Mr. Chairman, there certainly can be no criticism of the committee that reported this bill, in that it did not go far enough in its authorizations and its approvals of estimates. Whatever one's view may be as to the importance or necessity of spurring up in the matter of armament and guns and ammunition, surely what the committee proposes ought to be enough to satisfy any reasonable person, ten times the sum that we have ever heretofore appropriated in one year, prior to last year, for these purposes, as much as we appropriated in any ten years of peace in our history; nearly twenty times as much as we appropriated for these purposes year by year ten years ago or more. We are making these appropriations in the face of the fact that it will cost us probably per cent more for these guns, for this ammunition, for these emplacements, than it would have cost us for the same guns, the same ammunition, the same emplacements any time in The speed of our movement in the direction of preparedness seems to have been accelerated rather than checked by the fact that as we increase the volume of preparation, the unit cost of this preparation constantly increases.

Possibly many of these things are necessary. I have had my say in regard to them, and I am willing to take the judgment of the committees and of the House to a very large extent. But Heaven knows we are going far and fast enough without following any suggestion that we shall add to the enormous sums already carried in these bills some other enormous sums that some one connected with the Military Establishments of the country may have imagined that under certain possible conditions and eventualities we might need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gard-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I was in Europe when the war broke out. When I came back the primaries were taking place, and immediately afterwards I came on here to Washington and acquainted myself with the situation as to our military and naval strength. That was before "military lockhad set in in the War and Navy Departments. I began my campaign for preparedness on October 16, 1914. peared before the committee of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley]. I was roasted on every amendment that I offered on the floor of the House.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not yield.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. GARDNER. Oh, I must yield to a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois does not raise a point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Very well. Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to "drunken sailors": Drunken sailors notoriously spend their money on useless things, and then have no money to spend on necessities. That is what I meant when I said that the Democrats were spending money like drunken sailors, fifty millions for Government-owned merchantmen, millions for power plants down on southern rivers to make imaginary nitrate supplies, and on all sorts of undertakings of that sort. That is what I meant by expenditures by drunken sailors-extravagances in all directions, and then shutting down on necessities. That is the drunken sailor to the life.

The gentleman is in error. There will be no revulsion of feeling amongst the American people on this subject of preparedness. I say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there may be a revulsion of feeling on the part of the head of the Government. He has changed once already on preparedness. He will change again, if he has not already changed the second time. You can not, without exciting the derision of mankind, go telling the world one year that we must have the largest Navy on earth, and that the sparks are flying all around, and then, in the very next year, notify the world to disarm. [Applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the only thing I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] is that it is well not to confuse one's opinion with the opinion of mankind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $7,310,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $2,000,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gardner: Page 5, line 11, strike out "$7,310,000" and insert "$11,300,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is offered to restore the amount estimated by the War Department as absolutely necessary if in seven years we are to accumulate a sufficient stock of field-artillery ammunition to make us ready for the outbreak of war. Mr. Chairman, we have only 717,500 rounds of field-artillery ammunition actually completed at the present Those figures are taken from a letter of the Secretary of War written to me on January 23, 1917. In a single day's advance on the Somme last summer the British front alone expended, if the newspapers tell us the facts correctly, a full million rounds. In other words, the amount of field-artillery ammunition that we have accumulated at the present time is less than three-fourths of the amount expended in a single day by a single nation on a single front of the European war. I do not think because the cost of this ammunition has gone up that that is a good reason to postpone the requisite accumulation for our safety from 7 to 10 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman assumes that what is done now will necessarily be what will be done in the years to come, while I am unable to span the future with that degree of accuracy. Certainly it does not follow because an estimate is cut now, owing to the unusually high cost of material, together with the crowded condition of the arsenals, and also of private manufactories, that in a year to come, when both those conditions will in all probability be greatly relieved, we will make similar cuts. It is an illustration of that species of logic that we hear so often on the floor.

I repeat that the committee brought in what it felt, considering all the circumstances, was a very liberal provision.

If gentlemen will let their minds travel back, they will find what very rapid progress we are making. Back in 1907, 1908, and 1909 the appropriation for this purpose was $160,000; in 1910, $160,000; in 1911, $150,000. By the way, again referring to drunken sailors in the matter of spending money, I may call attention to the fact that those were days when the gentleman's party, perhaps not following his judgment any more than it does now, was in power and was making appropriations.

Mr. GARDNER. What year was it that our party was in power and making appropriations?

Mr. SHERLEY. Back in 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, and 1909. Mr. GARDNER. I thought the gentleman was referring to 1911.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. In 1912 the appropriation for this purpose was $300,000. It was the next year that I first had the honor of being chairman of the subcommittee reporting the fortifications bill. The increase was 100 per cent over the year before; it was $600,000. That was 100 per cent over the year previous. The next year it became $900,000, the next year $1,200,000, the next year $1,160,000, last year $6,000,000, and this year $7,310,000, with contract authorizations of $2,000,000. I submit again to those who want to be fair, that the progress we are making is rapid, and that instead of the committee being subject to censure for unwillingness to go forward there are many men who might rather place the censure because of our going forward too fast. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] has been long a member of a legislative body, and presumably in that length of time must have learned that government does not represent simply the will of individual men, but that in order to make real progress some consideration must be given to the opinions of those with whom we are associated, unless we are willing to play the rôle of being so far in advance of anyone else that nobody agrees I have not cared for that rôle. with us.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman. I do not think I have got preparedness hydrophobia to the extent that some gentlemen have it. I believe as firmly as I believe I am breathing that in 10 years from to-day every dollar of this money we are now spending will be absolutely worthless, so far as national defense is concerned. I do not know yet whether I am going to vote for this bill or not. I am trying to get a little light on it. With the exception of the Darda-nelles and the frontier fortifications in Belgium, there has not been a fortification gun fired on the coast of any of the belligerent countries up to date, so far as I have been able to ascertain from careful reading. Now, I will tell you why.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In a moment.
Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is not discussing my amendment. My amendment does not relate to the seacoast at all. It is field artillery that my amendment relates to.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will permit me, he was not discussing anything that was before the House awhile ago when he was speaking. But if I can, if reason will resume its sway for a few minutes, and if we deal with these questions like practical business men and look at conditions as they stare us in the face, I want to show you the real condition of affairs. Take the development of the submarine; take the modern mines that are defending the harbors of all the nations of What admiral in charge of a fleet would be foolish enough to try to approach any of the mined ports of this coun-Take the Dardanelles. The English crushed their fortifications like a mushroom. Germany brought up some land guns and saved the day for the Dardanelles or they would have been gone. Here is what I am alarmed about, and the only thing that keeps me in doubt: Unless we appropriate a million or two of dollars to increase the efficiency of navigation in the Navy we are going to need somebody on land to do something. Let me call your attention to something that strikes me very forcibly to show where this thing is going and how the people's money is being almost criminally wasted. In the last 90 days—or, put-ting it at the extreme, in the last 120 days—let us see what the people have lost in dollars and cents. Let me give you just a little information about what we are doing and how we are doing it. From Haiti to the coast of New Jersey and along the Atlantic coast we have piled up on the shore in the neighborhood of $35,000,000 of naval vessels, lying up on coral reefs and shores that have been charted since we have been navigating ships from the United States, and they are wrecked there because of the inefficient navigation of our naval vessels by men who do not seem to know or care what they are doing. is the Memphis at Haiti; there is the Milicaukee on the coast of California; there is the H-3, a new submarine; there is the Sampson, a destroyer that had only been accepted by this Government 40 days, run headlong into a ship in clear weather and damaged $250,000, according to the reports in the papers; there is the Sumner, a magnificent transport lying up on the coast of New Jersey, being beaten to pieces by the waves of the ocean; and there is the Cuyama, practically a complete wreck. Then you come up here talking about turning over millions and millions of dollars for the Navy and for fortifications and for this, that, and the other without any specific purpose in view so far as I have been able to ascertain from naval and military experts.

And what will be the situation after the European war? Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Speaking of stationary fortifications, what do you think would have happened if the German Army had not been held for a time at Liege? What would have happened to France?

Mr. HOWARD. Let us take the battle of Liege. member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I heard Gen. Crozler and other gentlemen testify as to the caliber of guns, and yet some of the Army officers, so far as I have been able to ascertain, did not know that there was such a thing as a 42centimeter gun in the world until after the battle of Liege. And centimeter gun in the world until after the battle of Liege. And what became of the big fortifications when these tremendous caliber guns moved up? What became of the fortifications that had been declared by military experts of the world to be absolutely impregnable? They were crushed like mushrooms. Why, the first shot fired in the history of the world from a 42-centimeter gun made a hole through this supposedly impregnable fort that 20 elephants could walk through abreast. [Laughter and appleace]

Why, a whole lot of this stuff is pure buncombe. You are talking about theories. The gentleman from Massachusetts was unkind enough to say that we were spending money like drunken sailors. He said that what he meant was that we were building an armor-plate and a nitrate plant-

Mr. GARDNER. I said nitrate plant.
Mr. HOWARD. All right, he said a nitrate plant down South. Here is a bill carrying $61,800,000, and nearly every dollar of it goes to your section of the country, and God knows it looks like you would not raise a hullabaloo about that small

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. HOWARD. Well, enough of it goes there.

Mr. SHERLEY. I gave Saturday to the committee a detailed statement as to the moneys that had beretofore been expended that went North and those that went South. gentleman is not warranted by the facts in making that state-

Mr. HOWARD. Does one-tenth of the appropriation go south of Fort Henry? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. How much goes south of Fort Henry?
Mr. SHERLEY. A good deal of it—some to Charleston;
some for 12-inch guns at all the southern fortifications.
Mr. HOWARD. Well, I am glad the gentleman has corrected me. In other words, we of the South get the canary bird, and you of the North get the turkey. [Laughter,] That is the way to compare it. You get the great bulk, and we get a little $10,000,000 appropriation which goes into a country where we are likely to prove that we can efficiently make munitions and arms, and some gentlemen who have got all four feet in the trough, and have had them there ever since the Government has been engaged in munition making, sat here and said some unkind and slurring thing about the South. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I was making an estimate day before yesterday from the statements made by the chairman of the committee. Fifteen coast cities of the South have a population of one million and a half, and nine coast cities of the North have a population of ten millions three hundred and thirty thousand.

Mr. HOWARD. I agree with the distinguished chairman of the committee; there is not an abler or fairer man in this House than the gentleman that has charge of the bill, but I want to say that if we accept any of the naval authorities at 100 per cent on the dollar, or anything like that, here is what is true, what they have been testifying to in the Committee on Naval Affairs, that if any great naval battle takes place, it will be in the Caribbean Sea.

At that time New York, Boston, and the North Atlantic seaboard cities will be sitting up there without anything in the world to make them nervous. But what about New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Pensacola, Galveston? Why, a man is a fool that does not pursue the point of least resistance. The ground mole has sense enough to do that. Let a ground mole run up against a little pebble the size of buckshot and he will go way around the whole garden to keep from pushing that pebble aside. Nations are like individuals.

Suppose Germany, England, or France, or any other power, wanted to attack the American coast, would they go to strongly fortified cities? No: they would go where they would meet the least resistance, following the logic of the ground mole, and they would go south. As I said the other day, if they ever happened to land there, carrying out our traditions to the last man of us, we will give them every ounce and every atom of resistance we have in us, and we will make a good showing until you boys get down there. [Laughter and applause.]
Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. According to the philosophy of the gentleman, we will have to fortify the whole coast.

Mr. HOWARD. Sure you will, where there are ports for Here is what you have got to do: The most sensible thing to do is to build submarines, and plenty of them, and fill them up with torpedoes and tell the world we have got one for every mile of the coast on this side, and if you come over here we will sink your whole fleet. [Laughter and applause.]
Here you are spending $61,800,000 in this bill, and you can build enough submarines to give absolute assurance to the Nation that no attack will be made within the line of these land fortifications we are building.

I predict here and now, and I want it to go in the indelible record, that 10 years from to-day the rats and bull bats will be occupying the forts on the coast, and your fortifications will be abandoned as absolutely obsolete and inefficient for defensive purposes. I do not care what the experts say. A man that has got common sense is in a better position to judge of that than any flyspecking expert. I would rather risk an old farmer who does not know what powder is made of, but knows powder by the smell thereof, than half a dozen of these men that go off on a globe-trotting expedition in Europe and come back here, scared to death, spending the people's money like water, with nothing definite in view but to spend it where the munition manufacturers can reap the benefit thereof. Do not start into any new fields, they tell us, do not go South—oh, for God's sake, do not go South-but come here, come back, my wandering appropriations, to Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, God bless them, and spend all you have got to spend here! Do not build any navy yards down there, where they will be secure from attack, but come up here in the glorious old North, and let us have the money, and you help pay the taxes but get none of the security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That will be satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], but I deplore the attack that has been made upon him by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. How-ARD]. I am inclined to support the committee in this instance, and to approve the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill that there is no sectionalism in it. I would hope there should be no sectionalism in a bill of this kind, preparing for the fortifications of the country. During the discussion of two bills in this House within the past 10 days I supported propositions to carry appropriations into the South, and did it, believing the South is just as much entitled to consideration at the hands of this Congress in the matter of public buildings and river and harbor appropriations as is any other section of the country. But the question of the nitrate plant has been raised. I opposed the appropriation for the nitrate plant, because I did not want to see the Government go into the business of manufacturing fertilizer in competition with private concerns. seemed to me that that was no business of the Government of the United States. But that question has been raised. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] in his usual eloquent manner has attacked the gentleman from Massachusetts Gardner] on the ground, apparently, that the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to restore to Massachusetts a number of industries engaged in ammunition making that have been taken away from that State. I question whether any ammunition factories have been taken away from Massachusetts, but

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Just for the preservation of the truth of this thing, the gentleman understands that "the gentleman from Georgia" never started this Southern business, that the gentleman from Massachusetts started it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought the gentleman did start it.

Mr. HOWARD. I am just defending myself, my country, my section, in a very weak and inefficient manner.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; the gentleman did it in no weak manner. He did it in a very forceful and eloquent manner; but the gentleman clearly indicated that $61,000,000 appropriated for in this bill was to go into the Northern States and the South was not to participate in it. That induces me to refer to a matter which I hope the gentleman from Georgia may consider, and that is the raising of revenue in order to provide the $61,000,000 with which we are to increase our fortifications. If the gentleman from Georgia will give me his strict attention for a moment or two, I shall endeavor to show him that the question of sectionalism does not in this instance originate with this side of the House.

I have in my hand a copy of a Washington newspaper, which has as its leading editorial an article headed "Kitchin and Defense," and I not only ask the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to this article, but I invite the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin], who is also present. The article to which I refer states:

In the Democratic caucus on the so-called "emergency" revenue bill on Friday evening, addressing a group of insurgent southern Democrats, he [Mr. Kitchin] said:
"You can tell your people that practically all of this tax will go north of the Mason and Dixon line. The preparedness agitation has its hotbed in such cities as New York. This bill levies a tax on those who have been clamoring for preparedness and are benefiting because of preparedness appropriations."

Now, the gentleman from Georgia is welcome to that statement, whether he was one of those southern insurgents or not. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to whom this statement is attributed is here. I assume he will speak

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I gave the gentleman my undivided attention, as he requested. The gentleman does not dispute the soundness of that statement attributed to Mr. KITCHIN, does he?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was just about to say that the gentleman from North Carolina, whom I respect highly, who is my Democratic leader in the distinguished Committee on Ways and Means, is able and qualified to respond for himself. If he made such a statement it clearly was a sectional statement, but if he did not make the statement that this great burden of taxation was to be imposed upon the people north of the Mason and Dixon line we ought to know it. I am sure the gentleman from North Carolina will speak for himself.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] attended to his duties here and to the sessions of the House as closely as do some of us, he would have known that what he has just quoted here to-day was all stale, for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] on Saturday read to the House from that article.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is so good that I thought we had better have it twice.

Mr. KITCHIN. He read the article from Saturday's issue of the New York Times, the first to give publicity to such misrepresentation. I then said, as I say now, that there is not one word of truth in it. Never in my life have I intimated in a caucus or elsewhere any such sentiment in any way akin to that which the gentleman has quoted. I did say on Saturday, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I say now, that most, or at least nine-tenths, of the appropriations for which the tax is to be levied under the revenue bill which I reported this morning will be expended north of the Mason and Dixon line. I make and have made no complaint about that. I will say to the House now that I never used the term "Mason and Dixon's line" here in this House or caucus until I used it on Saturday in explanation of what the New York Times put into my mouth.

I have been in this House, gentlemen, for 16 years. I have been more or less in public life, so far as going out on the stump and making political speeches are concerned, since 1892, and never in my life, in my district, or my State, or in caucus, or in the House, or elsewhere, have I uttered one word or one sentiment that would in any way arouse sectional feeling or produce sectional differences anywhere in any part of the country. [Applause.] From the time when Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant shook hands at Appomattox as an earnest of perpetual peace between the North and the South, the result of the Civil War became in the minds and hearts of my people a fixed finality.

[Applause.]

There has not been a time in 20 years in my State or my district when if I-and I believe I am liked about as well as any man in my district-were to make a speech, political or otherwise, that would tend to kindle anew sectional feeling between the North and South, I would not be hissed by my audience. In all my life not an utterance can be attributed to me in truth that I have ever in the slightest degree attempted to arouse sectional feeling. I deprecate as much as any man the utterances upon that side or on this side that tend in any way to bring about sectional differences or to revive the fires of sectional animosity, which, thank God, in the mind and heart of every patriotic American, North and South, have faded into ashes. [Applause.] I resent the misrepresentation of the New Times and the Washington Times, quoted by the gentleman. I resent the misrepresentation of the New York

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for two minutes. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the time be ex-

Mr. KITCHIN. Two minutes will be sufficient.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have too high a respect for the gentleman from North Carolina, as he knows, to raise this question; but I find on looking at the debate on yesterday that the words "Mason and Dixon's line" were used, and that in the discussion the gentleman from North Carolina indicated that the larger part of this revenue tax would be levied upon the States above that line.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I said the appropriations for which the taxes were levied would go, and properly so, North. I believe that in the State of Pennsylvania, the State of New York, the State of Massachusetts they are better prepared to build ships, they are better prepared to manufacture munitions which we have to have, and therefore I think the larger part of the appropriations ought to go there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, the farmer does not come under this new scheme of taxation, and the cotton grower is not included-

Mr. KITCHIN. Nor are the farmers in the North or the West or the East.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the mills and the factories are included, and they are mainly in those States.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman who speaks of our excepting the farmer in the proposed revenue bill that we There are five counhave excepted agricultural copartnerships. tries in the world that have excess-profits taxes. Canada excepts the farmer; Great Britain excepts the farmer; France excepts the farmer; Germany excepts the farmer; Russia excepts the farmer. The committee thought that if Great Britain and Germany could except their farmers, if Russia, for instance, can except her peasants, that in a revenue bill we could afford to except the farmers of the West, the farmers of the North, the farmers of the East, and the farmers of the South. plause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired on this paragraph. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Clerk

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am not going further into this thing, but I want to ask the gentleman a ques-Mr. SHERLEY. Debate has been concluded on the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was not able, owing to other duties, to listen to the gentleman's speech in explanation of this bill, and I desire to know if any provision is made in any of these lump sums for fortifications at Cape May or Cape Henlopen at the mouth of the Delaware?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the paragraph relating to armament and sites there is a sum of $100,000, of which $20,000 is intended for the purchase of some land on the Delaware Bay with the idea of subsequently placing there four 12-inch guns.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the Delaware side or New Jersey side? Does the gentleman recall?

Mr. SHERLEY. On the Delaware side.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the Cape Henlopen side.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $9,231,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $2,200,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Whaley: Page 5, line 20, after the word "arsenals," strike out "$9,231,000" and insert "$19,231,000"; and after the colon insert the following: "$10,000,000 of which to purchase 16-inch guns for the fortification of the south Atlantic and Gulf

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to vote for this bill, but I do not see my way clear to vote for it unless some specific provision is put in it to provide for the proper fortification of the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts. I voted for the fortification bill last year, carrying $42,000,000; I am asked to vote for a bill carrying $61,000,000 to-day, and yet I am informed—and I get my information from the best sources I can, but I must admit to this committee they are not the most satisfactory, because I can not find where to get clear and accurate information about the fortifications of this country and where this money goes to-that a most insignificant portion of this appropriation is for the fortification of the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts.

Now, I am not opposed to the fortification of the North Atlantic. I want it defended. I believe it should be. I believe the Pacific coast should be defended. I believe in having the best fortifications in the world on all our entire coast line. But I can not get into my head the reason why in a stretch on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of 2,500 miles a thousand miles of that coast should be fortified, from the Canadian line to Mexico, and yet 1,500 miles, from the Chesapeake Bay to the Rio Grande, should not be properly fortified. The report accompanying this bill shows there is to be spent from the Chesapeake Bay down to the Rio Grande an insignificant amount of $150,000 to fix two carriages for two guns at the port of Charleston and a small amount to fix the embankments of Fort St. Philip, at the mouth of the Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, I was informed by an officer who commanded the Department of the South Atlantic Coast Artillery District that the forts are practically worthless for defense against large battleships. I know the forts in my district have two 12-inch guns, the carriages of which are so defective and worthless that an appropriation is carried in this bill to supply new carriages, and the chairman of the committee admitted on Saturday last that it would take about 18 months to get the carriages Mr. SHERLEY. But I did not admit they were worthless down there now.

Mr. WHALEY. I made that statement.
Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to be misunderstood in that

Mr. WHALEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the chairman of the committee made the statement on Saturday that the reason they were fortifying the North Atlantic coast was because of the munition plants in that section. I think that is proper. I think it ought to be defended, not only on account of population but because of the munition plants. But the South Atlantic coast and the Gulf coast should be fortified also, for the reason we also have millions of munition plants. Every stalk of cotton in the fields is a munition plant, for without the cotton you could not have high explosives.

I believe in fortifications. I believe we ought to have the best in the world, but I believe we ought to also fortify this whole country and not two-thirds of it. There is no use in fortifying the North and the West and not the South. If the next fight is going to be in the Caribbean Sea, as every naval officer claims, and should we be defeated, then the harbors on the southern coast would be attacked and may be captured as a base.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHALEY. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Is it not true that if the plans go through for the Charleston Navy Yard the fortification of Charleston Harbor is all the more needed?

Mr. WHALEY. There is no question about that. But I am not asking it solely for the port of Charleston. The city of Charleston has been attacked in every war this country has ever had, from the Indian days on, but never captured. In the Spanish-American War there was found among Cervera's papers, I am informed, a plan for attacking the port of Charleston. Yet the officer in charge of those forts told me that there is not a gun that can reach within 3 miles of a battleship off that coast, and the guns on the Queen Elizabeth would carry 3 miles beyond that port. But I am not asking it for my home coast solely. I am asking it for the whole South Atlantic coast and the Gulf coast. They ought to be fortified. There is not a single 14-inch gun down there; there is not a single 16-inch gun there. I assert that if it is necessary for us to put out $100,-000,000 for big guns to fortify the North Atlantic and the Pacific, we ought to put out $10,000,000 more and place 16-inch guns on the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday afternoon-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Carolina has expired

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHALEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, on Saturday afternoon I asked the distinguished chairman of this committee if the $150,000 carried in this bill was in addition to what was proposed to be done at my forts last year, and he told me that nothing was proposed for my forts last year, but it was all in this year's bill. I quote to him what he said to me on the floor of the House last year. I find on page 9489, on June 13, 1916, the following:

Mr. Whaley. Is there any provision made in the report for the defense on the South Atlantic?

Mr. Sherley. There are a great many places upon the South Atlantic where they contemplate that additions will be made, some not of great moment and some of considerable moment.

At the Charleston Harbor, in which the gentleman doubtiess is interested, it is proposed to make a change by adding some long-range rifles and some long-range mortars, as well as changing the mounts of some of the existing armament.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WHALEY. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. I was talking about the project, not about what was there.

Mr. WHALEY. Well, that is the reason why I am offering the amendment. There is still no way of knowing what we the amendment. are going to get.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was only trying to give the gentleman information. I can not do more than that.

Mr. WHALEY. I say we ought to have something in the bill that would let us know "where we are at," and not projects only. Last year I was interested in my harbor, and I asked what we were going to get, and subsequently I asked the com-manding officer of the Coast Artillery, Gen. Weaver, about it, and he said they were going to fix the two carriages at a cost of about $110,000. Yet they have not been fixed, and this year I am informed the carriages of two 12-inch guns are now provided for for the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Carolina has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly natural that the gentleman, responding to sincere beliefs of his locality touching the needs of that locality, should be impatient relative to the work that is being done in connection with the fortifications of America. But while that is natural, it is no reason for the House to disregard the absolute practice that has been followed since the beginning of providing for fortifications, not as the result of locality pressure, but as the result of studies by those best qualified to determine the needs of the various localities.

The gentleman's whole argument is based on a wrong assumption, and that is that the condition of the southern fortifications is such as to make them totally worthless. I deny it. I have repeatedly stated that this country, in my judgment, was the best fortified country in the world. I think that statement is best fortified country in the world. I think that statement is well within the bounds of fact. But it was necessary, in order to meet the increased range of guns on modern battleships and the increased volume, at some places to place guns with longer range, and at some places to add to the amount of fire that could be had at those fortifications.

Now, what does the gentleman propose? He proposes the placing of a lot of 16-inch guns South. With the exception of Cape Henry, that is in the direct teeth of the recommendation of the Beard of Review touching the fortifications in the South. The gentleman seems to think that it is the purpose of fortifications to protect all of the coast line. I have endeavored for years to call to the committee's attention the fact that fortifications had no such purpose; that they were intended to protect certain areas where it was not permissible to permit an enemy to land or permit the damage that might be done by bombardment.

Now, if I wanted to meet the gentleman's argument as to the neglect of the South, I might call attention to the fact that in Massachusetts there are two harbors without any fortifications with more population-

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not at this moment; two harbors that together have more population, more wealth to be protected than exists at most any southern ports excepting New Orleans and Galveston, and yet it is not proposed now or in the future to place fortifications there. I refer to Gloucester and to Salem, Mass., both of which have deep harbors and both of which are without fortifications of any kind. I would oppose a proposal to fortify either of those places.

Mr. WHALEY. What is the depth of water at those ports? Mr. SHERLEY. I have it here. It is sufficient for battle-The harbors in many respects are superior to the harbor at Charleston.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Both cities are in my district, and battleships often do come into Salem Harbor,

Mr. SHERLEY. Now I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Would there be any more justification for a very large increase at Charleston than there would be for a reasonable defense at Georgetown, S. C.?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not looked into Georgetown, S. C., so that I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Does not the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] know that there is a navy yard at Charleston? There is none at Georgetown.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A fleet ought to be able to defend itself at a navy yard, should it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, what I want to emphasize is this, that we can not afford to put up our individual judgments as to when and where the moneys should be expended in connection with seacoast fortifications. If we do, we will mar the

Now, I appreciate the gentleman's viewpoint, although I do not agree with him. I have no reason to discriminate against the South. As I said on Saturday, I am a southern man. If I permitted a matter of feeling and sentiment to control me, it would certainly be in favor of the South as against the North. But in matters of this kind I literally know no North and no South. And I do know this: That if you will take Government activities to be protected, areas of population to be protected by southern fortifications; if you will take the amount of wealth in those areas. although the South has received and will receive, when the whole scheme is finished, only about one-half of what the North Atlantic has, yet for Government activities, population, and wealth, it has received a greater proportion than the North Atlantic has. Those are the facts. When you consider what is involved in fortifications, when you look at it not simply as a proposition of spending so much money at certain places but a plan, having in mind the accomplishment of certain things

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. Then you will realize that there is no discrimination. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not desire to offer any amendment. I simply want some information about this sub-ject under discussion. At Port Royal, in my district, there is located Fort Fremont. It has one gun. My information is that the department took the position that because it had only one gun there was no reason for having any men there to fire that gun; that if they had two guns, they would then send a company there to man that fort. Can the gentleman tell me why, if it is necessary from a strategic standpoint to establish a fort and to have one gun there, they should leave it in charge of a caretaker? And how can the gentleman reconcile that with the proper defense of the port?

Mr. SHERLEY. Very easily. The defenses there were placed there at the time there was a navy yard there, for the defense of the navy yard. When the navy yard was removed to Charleston, there was no particular reason for defending Port Royal, and the gentleman ought to feel grateful that they did not take the gun away.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no use for the gun. Does not the gentleman think that if the gun will shoot, they ought to take it away and put it in some other fort, instead of leaving it there in the hands of the caretaker?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would certainly put it where it was of use rather than leave it at a place where it is not now needed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that if there is no one there to shoot the gun, it will get rusty?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; they have a caretaker who will prevent

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can the caretaker fire the

Mr. SHERLEY. No; he just oils the gun. Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman stated that coast defenses were not for the purpose solely of protecting the whole coast, but only for the purpose of protecting certain localities. ship can lie off a fort, out of range of the guns of the fort and destroy the fort, what is the use of the fort?

Mr. SHERLEY. None, if that statement be true. Mr. WHALEY. The information given to me by Coast Artillery experts who have had charge of the fort is that that very thing could be done, and I happened to see a map up in Gen. Weaver's office which seemed to show it. That is my information. If the gentleman can tell me where I can get any better information, I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman and I have had this matter out at length, and I am not going to convince him and he is not going to convince me.

Mr. WHALEY. I want to get information. Mr. SHERLEY. What information I hav What information I have is available to the gentleman, and I will say to him in candor and in frankness that I have undertaken to supply him with information touching Charleston, and to obtain information in greater degree with reference to Charleston than I have had occasion to do for any other place in America, or out of it, and I regret exceedingly if I have failed to show the gentleman every possible consideration in enabling him to get at the facts, as I have undertaken to do. There ought to be certain things done at Charleston, and certain things will be done, but Charleston is not a place of primary importance; and doing my duty as I see it, and being able to appropriate only given sums we can not go forward at Charleston prior to taking care of other matters which I think are more important to finish. I think it is more important to finish at the capes of the Chesapeake, and to finish New York, than all the other fortifications and improvements that are suggested for all the other fortifications in America. Believing this as I do, until this committee and the Congress override me I shall insist on following the judgment of the men who have worked over this scheme and who have considered the claims of Charleston. For us now to put in here $10,000,000 to build 16-inch guns that could not be started for three or four years would be simply to tie up that much money in the Treasury and do a thing that could not be warranted on any consideration.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, most of us, of course, are neophites on guns and fortifications. I know nothing about the technical proposition that this board have in mind who outlined the fortifications; but there are in round numbers about 2,500 miles of seacoast from Fort McHenry around Florida and the Gulf coast to Mexico. About $61,000,000 are carried in this the Gulf coast to Mexico. About $61,000,000 are carried in this bill. As best I can estimate the amount to be spent on that enormous coast line south of Cape Henry for fortifications it will be in the neighborhood of something less than $2,000,000. Of course, you must take into consideration the property protected and the strategic value of the point of landing, but it is inconceivable to me that there should be so little spent for the protection of 2,500 miles of seacoast nearest the point at which, according to the testimony of the payal officers and the Army according to the testimony of the naval officers and the Army officers before the various committees, a sea fight will more than likely take place; that is, somewhere in the Gulf or the Caribbean Sea. They say this is more than likely for two reasons; one, a contest over the control of the canal, but primarily, perhaps, for the reason that owing to the great number of islands in the Caribbean Sea and at the mouth of the Gulf, a foreign fleet would have a splendid base of supplies, which would not be afforded in other portions of the Atlantic Ocean. Those seem to be the reasons that prompt the conclusion that the contest for naval supremacy will take place somewhere in the Caribbean Sea. In the event of our fleet being overcome, that being our first line of defense, we have virtually 2,500 miles of coast which would be practically without defense, because the defenses are so far apart and so feeble in character that the enemy would virtually be given an unlimited stretch of territory within which to select a landing place.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Right at that point.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. You will find some great stretches in the North Atlantic that are not fortified at all.

Mr. SISSON. Not such long stretches.
Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; and better places to land.
Mr. SISSON. Not such long stretches, unless the maps are either stretched out down South or shrunken up in New Eng-

Now, I have no objection on earth to the coast being fortified. I think a man's vision is extremely narrow when he opposes national defense upon the ground that one section of the country, the West or the South, should be fortified to the neglect of any other section of the country. It may be a reflection upon my knowledge of fortifications, but still I am at a loss to know how you may spend $40,000,000 from Maine to Fort McHenry and less than $2,000,000 on more than twice as much coast line

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.
Mr. SHERLEY. The whole scheme for the north Atlantic, not this bill but all of it now, contemplates only $19,000,000. The gentleman talks about spending $40,000,000 in this bill for the north Atlantic.

I am speaking of south of Fort McHenry. Mr. SISSON.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I am talking about the division of the north and the south.

Mr. SISSON. To be frank, I am a member of the committee, and I have been endeavoring to find out how much would be spent from Fort McHenry south on the coast of Florida and around the Gulf coast.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know; but take the whole Pacific, there have been $17,751,850 spent, and you have a stretch all the way from San Diego to San Francisco without a fortification, and from San Francisco to Puget Sound without a fortification.

Mr. SISSON. You have the south Atlantic fortifications, and nearly all the money expended is around the mouth of the Potomac and Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. SISSON. I understand that they outline and recommend the expenditure by this board. The bill does not say where the money is to be expended. It may be wise to appropriate money

Mr. SHERLEY. I could give the gentleman the exact amount spent for every fortification up and down the coast up to June

Mr. SISSON. From how far back?

Mr. SISSON. From how far back? Mr. SHERLEY. Going back to the beginning—Galveston, $3,520,379. That per capita is infinitely greater than any fortification anywhere that America has built. New Orleans, $1,237,-112; Mobile, $2,436,913; Pensacola, $2,417,755; Tampa, $954,251; Key West, $1,619,810; Savannah, $1,145,795; Port Royal, $359,-529; Charleston, $2,245,306; Cape Fear, $1,309,290; Hampton Roads, $3,568,972; Cape Henry, so far, $185,532; Washington, $1,646,600. These are all southern fortifications.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman state what place ought to be fortified that is not?

Mr. SISSON. And still that does not amount to much.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Every place in the South has been properly fortified.

Mr. SISSON. That does not amount to anything. You are spending $60,000,000 for fortifications, but it does not mean anything to say that from the beginning so much money has been expended on fortifications.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I will tell him what it is proposed to spend, and after that I think I have given him all the information that anybody could ask for.

Mr. SISSON. The chairman of the committee knows that what I am stating is no personal criticism on him or his committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will give the gentleman now what we propose to spend:

Galveston, $1,057,850; New Orleans, $2,370,200; Mobile, $185,- 753; Pensacola, $574,125; Tampa, $147,600; Key West, $157,651.

Savannah, $151,725. Charleston, $183,820. And since then there has been an addition contemplating about $300,000. Cape Fear, $124,115. Cape Henry, $4,851,750. Fort Monroe, $116,150. Washington—that is, the Potomac, $145,662; and then the proportionate part of $29,674,000 which goes for ammunition.

Mr. SISSON. That information, Mr. Chairman, was information that I wanted to get.

I am, of course, only asking that in the fortifications, irrespective of where the money is spent, all of the coast be treated alike. That is the position which I have taken heretofore in the committee, and this is the first time I have taken occasion to say anything or make any explanation on the floor, because I had the information and felt that all these gentlemen who were making recommendations about fortifications were endeavoring to do their best to give the country the best possible protection. I feel so now. I am glad to know that the southern coast will be fortified because of the extreme importance of the Mississippi River. As I started to say when interrupted a moment ago, the extreme importance of the great lines that connect Chicago and Cincinnati and all the great graineries of the West with the southern coast would enable any country who got control of one of these railroads, control of the rolling stock, to do a great deal of damage to the country. I take it without knowing much about military defenses that the Army would not venture very far from a strong fortification, taking a chance of our Army getting between them and the fort. So in making this statement to-day I do it to call attention to the fact that in preceding years, for four or five years, practically nothing has been done for this coast of 2,500 miles.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is also true as to the North. We were not doing anything except for the Pacific coast and for the insu-

Mr. SISSON. I am not stating that in the nature of a criticism, because in taking up the general schemes throughout the country a great deal of money was expended on other coasts of the country, and some of the newspapers of the South have been calling attention to it, and I think it is due to these people and it is due to their representatives here, and due to the entire country, that the statement should be made that there is no intention on the part of those who have charge of the general scheme of fortifications to in any wise neglect any section of the country.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a statement by Hon. Zebulon B. Weaver, giving his side of the election controversy between himself and the Hon. J. J. Britt, Representative Britt having made a statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I think he should make that request in the House, because if he makes it now in the committee, the remarks will have to go into the proceedings of the debate on this bill.

Mr. WEBB. I understand that they will go into the back of the RECORD.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is this in reply to what Mr. BRITT said?

Mr. WEBB. Something in the nature of a reply. It is a statement of his side of the question and is perfectly temperate

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the statement being inserted in the RECORD, but the only objection would be to have it go in at this point, as is suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].
For my own information I would like to know where these extended remarks finally land in the permanent edition of the RECORD. In the temporary daily edition we find them in the back of the Record from day to day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Sometimes and sometimes not.

Mr. TILSON. When it is a pure extension and when no remarks have been made I think that is the usual practice. Whether in the permanent edition of the RECORD these extensions of the remarks finally land in the midst of the proceedings of the day at the point where they are inserted under leave to print, I should like to know for my own information.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question, but my purpose is, of course, to have this placed in the back of the RECORD as a distinct extension of remarks. I do not know where it goes in the permanent RECORD, but it should go into the Appendix.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope we may proceed, for

I desire to finish the bill to-day.

Mr. FESS. Frequently I notice in the RECORD a statement that unanimous consent to extend the remarks is granted, and then another statement that the extension would be found at another place in the Record of that day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is informed that these remarks go to the back of the Record, but the gentleman from North Carolina can make his request that they be there inserted.

Mr. WEBB. That is what I desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement presented by him be printed in the back of the daily RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY]. Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Whalky], although I think there is some justice in what he says about that particular case of Charleston. As to this question of extending to the whole South an extra appropriation of $10,000,000, I agree entirely with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], who says these matters should not be matters of sectionalism, that the defense of the Nation should be considered. I have before me a letter from Admiral Dewey dated December 10, 1915, and addressed to me. Admiral Dewey differed quite materially in his views of the strategy of naval warfare from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard], but I have no doubt that the admiral was wrong. The admiral declared that there is very great danger of a landing being made in various parts of our coast between the guns of our fortifications, as it is obvious that our fortifications can not cover much more than 200 miles with their guns. I am going to read part of the admiral's letter. It is printed on page 419 of the Record for the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, under date of December 17, 1915. The letter itself is dated December

10, 1915. Admiral Dewey says:

Admiral Dewey says:

In saying that a hostile expedition can land upon our coast at will, outside the range of our coast-defense guns, I mean that it is physically possible and with no very great difficulty. I do not mean that such a force could accomplish its object by landing anywhere on our coast. No commander would desire to have his force isolated on the peninsulas of Maine nor on the sand dunes of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, or Virginia, with inland waters between them and the mainland. They will prefer to land where there are railroads and good roads leading to their objective, which would probably be one of our large cities. Such places are numerous along the coast of Massachusetts, both shores of Massachusetts Bay, the eastern end and south shore of Long Island, and in the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays.

A landing place sheitered from the force of the sea would greatly facilitate the disembarkation of a hostile force, but is not a vital necessity. Such sheltered places are too namerous to name, but among them are Frenchmans Bay, Penobscot Bay, Blue Hill Bay, Sheepscott River, Casco Bay in Maine, Rockport, Gloucester, Salem, Plymouth, Provincetown, Vineyard Sound, and Buzzards Bay in Massachusetts, Fort Pond Bay, and then to the southward Delaware and Chesapeake Bays. Only the Navy can prevent landings at those places, and that Navy must be strong enough to defeat the enemy; and should we have such a Navy the enemy would not attempt an invasion as long as it remained in existence.

Of those landing places, Rockport, Gloucester, and Salem are all in my district. The gentleman in charge of this bill has just told the committee that the harbors of Gloucester and Salem are more exposed and in combination have a greater population and more wealth to protect than is the case with Charleston,

S. C., and that neither of them has the slightest military protection. I have been in Congress now for 15 years. never asked for a cent of military protection for those places or for any other city or place in my district. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] was totally incorrect in the remarks he

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, to keep the RECORD square, so that there will not be any mistake about it, I never said that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] ever asked for any particular appropriation for anything. I admit, for the sake of the argument, that he goes at it blindly; he just asks for any amount for anything anywhere that is an expenditure for what he calls preparedness. I was trying to present my own views to the committee that this was an unbalanced preparedness. Now, that does not alter the case. The gentleman's statement about Admiral Dewey, attempting to make it appear that I put my judgment against that of a great admiral like the lamented Dewey—well, here is what I do say and I reiterate it, and Admiral Dewey's letter does not dispute it; and with the great knowledge of these matters possessed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] he will not deny this statement, I am pretty certain: That, with the exception at the Dardanelles and the frontier of Belgium, not a single fortification of the coasts of belligerent countries have belched forth a single shot during the whole European war, and I gave my reasons for it. The reason I stated for it is that they are using mines and submarines, and these fortifications have become obsolete as against such instruments of warfare, and I reiterate that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I have only five minutes; yes.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Suppose, for instance, the British fleet should be destroyed and Germany and Austria suddenly got command of the sea, then what would be the result there?

Mr. HOWARD. Let me say to the gentleman, if that thing happens and they destroy our Navy and drag our mines and annihilate our land forces, may God have mercy upon us.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a moment. Let me make myself clear. I am not going into this preparedness net blindly. I am going to make myself clear on this thing, if I have not already done so. I remarked about this matter because I said I did not think it was fair and I do not think so yet, that the seaboard cities on the south Atlantic and the Gulf coast should be left absolutely unprotected, and I give, I think, a logical reason for it. We have gotten beyond many things in the South. My gracious, we have got beyond the wearing of long shirts and going barefooted and bareheaded. We are folks just about as good and as independent as anyone.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman name me a place, a southern port, where it is left unprotected?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I mean according to the theory that this lot of experts have promulgated, that all our guns are smooth bored, that they have got no range and can not defend us which I hear on the floor all the time, with which you could not kill a bull bat sitting on the end of one of them, that they are no good, that they are obsolete.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit again?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I read a few moments ago in the gentleman's absence a long table of amounts of money expended at southern ports. It is not fair, I submit to the gentleman, to let it go out to the country that a review of the fortifications of America omitted to provide for southern ports.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, the gentleman from Massachusetts made an argument a few moments ago, that there was great wealth and population along there, that those people ought to be protected, and I entirely agree to it, that is all right, but that does not destroy the argument that the man living in a city of 150,000 inhabitants can get just as scared as a man living in a city of 1,000,000 inhabitants as far as that is concerned, and his property and life is just as dear and sacred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for one minute

The CHAIRMAN. The debate, under agreement of the committee, has been limited. The permanent chairman requested the temporary chairman to recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller].

Mr. Miller of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry this debate has turned somewhat upon sectional thought. can not for any reason see why any individual or group of individuals should lament because they are not receiving great appropriations in the way of coast defenses, unless it is on the theory that the fortifications are somewhat in the nature of a pork-barrel proposition. Thank God, that has never yet been the idea in making appropriations for coast fortifications thus far, and I hope it never will. It has been the curse of one branch of our Military Establishment, if I can use the term "military establishment" in that connection. In the matter of establishing naval stations pull and pork apparently once controlled. From Maine to Galveston there have been established some 13 stations, and our naval men have long been saying that not more than three are needed. Now, that resulted in everybody getting a part. Save us from that wherever we can be saved! It is not a question of what they may receive nor is it a question about placing some guns big enough to keep off an enemy that may land. The town that I live in has not had anybody here to speak for it on account of its size or on account of its commerce. The fact is that the commerce that goes in and out of the city of Duluth Harbor is 50 times that which goes in and out of the city of Galveston, and if you will put the combined commerce of Galveston, New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, and Pensacola all together, you will find that Duluth's commerce is greater. We, however, do not want you to send any guns there to protect us.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have only five minutes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I will say to the control of the sent to the sent to

Mr. RAGSDALE. I will say to the gentleman you can not fortify Duluth under the agreement between the United States and Great Britain.

and Great Britain.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I say we are not asking for it, whether treaties are scraps of paper or whether they are not. This one thing further, Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the gentleman from Kentucky affirmatively established that every section in the South that has a city at all on a sea coast and one that should be defended, that it has already been cared for or will be cared for in this bill. And as some of the newspapers in the South have been raising a hue and cry on this subject I hope they are now satisfied and will forever be still. There is just one principle, certainly, that should govern in building fortifications, namely, to intrust those with military knowledge of the subject with the power and the authority to make such distribution as will protect our country as a whole.

If we ever go to war, it will not be South Carolina and Georgia going to war. It will be the entire United States. enemy can land at Charleston, or Galveston, or New Orleans, the boys in Minnesota will be down there fighting and bleeding with the boys from South Carolina and the other States, and likewise, if they should land in Massachusetts, from the Southland will come the defenders. The defense of the United States is a national project, and let us carry it on as it has thus far been carried, as a national project, with a view to giving the Nation as a whole that defense from the common enemy that all our people require. [Applause.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In regard to the statement the gentleman has made concerning naval stations on the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts, I would like to ask him if he has heard the recent report of the Helm Board on that subject? If not, I would recommend it to his attention for perusal.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have not read that, but many

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman ought to get some information on the subject

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not want to read a report from a set of people who want more "pork" spread around.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman in that statement refer to the naval officers?

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what appropriation was made in the last bill, for 16-inch guns, if he can tell the committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir; I think I can tell you. Last year we made appropriations looking to the building of four 16-inch guns for Cape Henry and two 16-inch guns for Rockaway Beach, and that was all in the way of 16-inch guns.

Mr. TOWNER. None of those have been completed?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.
Mr. TOWNER. And it takes, as the gentleman informed us Saturday, from four to six years to secure the completion of 16-inch guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I would not say it would take that long to complete the guns. I said it took, unfortunately, that long before guns and carriages were made, tested, assembled, and mounted on the emplacements and turned over to the Coast Artillery.

Mr. TOWNER. That is, of course, what I mean, too.

Mr. SHERLEY. When the gentleman said "make guns" I thought he was speaking technically. The gun is one thing and the fortification is another.

Mr. TOWNER. Can the gentleman tell us how many 16-inch guns are provided by this appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. This year we are providing for the construction of two 16-inch guns for Rockaway Beach and two 6-inch guns for Puget Sound.

Mr. TOWNER. Is that all? Just the four?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Sixteen-inch guns now.

Mr. TOWNER, Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. But we are providing for a lot of 16-inch mortars; we are providing for a number of other guns, and for carriages for other guns.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, I would like to ask the chairman this question. This appropriation was made for last year for these 16-inch guns that were not completed. Now, why is it necessary to include in this appropriation four 16-inch guns that can not possibly be completed within the next year?

Mr. SHERLEY. So that they can be started.

Mr. TOWNER. Does it need a complete appropriation of money for the completion of the guns to be made at this time?

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know any authority by which the ordnance department can contract for a 16-inch gun, or can start to build it, unless they have the money for it, or have been authorized to contract?

Mr. TOWNER. This thought, I will say to the chairman, I have in mind: You have on hand and unexpended as an appropriation for 16-inch guns quite a large amount of money. Can not you use that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; we have not. Mr. TOWNER. You have not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.
Mr. TOWNER. I did not know—
Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mixing emplacement with guns again. We have a lot of money that we appropriated for emplacements last year that was not expended, for the reasons I gave, but all the money that was for ordnance is either spent, or obligated, or in process of being spent, in connection with the things for which it was appropriated.

Mr. TOWNER. Can the gentleman say to the committee that the $9,231,000 will be or can be spent within the next fiscal year?

Mr. SHERLEY. If I did not think so, I would not recommend it. I think every penny of it will be spent or so obligated that its expenditure will be a matter of a very short time thereafter.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that there is a feeling, which I share myself, among Members of the House that we are making larger authorizations and appropriations than can possibly be used during the fiscal year.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not share that, but I commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to the gentleman from Iowa. He seems to think that we are not doing it fast enough.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I do not desire to consider that proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Seriously and frankly, I will say to the gentleman that the committee has endeavored to do this, gentleman that the committee has endeavered dollar they can namely, to give to the ordnance people every dollar they can namely, to give to the ordnance people every dollar more. The properly use in the next year and not a dollar more. reason I refer to the ordnance people is because their activity determines the rapidity of completion of the fortifications.

The slowest thing is getting the armament.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think all of us feel that the delay that is manifest in the completion of all of these matters of armament is seriously to be regretted. If this money is expended, it ought to be expended, it seems to me, speedily, so that it will bring quicker results than are contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

Amendment by Mr. WHALEY: Page 5, line 20, after the word "arsenals," strike out "$9,231,000" and insert "$19,231,000"; and after the colon insert the following: "$10,000,000 of which to purchase 16-inch guns for the fortification of the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, and for modernizing projectiles on hand, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $10,940,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $2,000,000, in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Perhaps it does not come in very well in this part of the bill. The minority of the Committee on Ways and Means have just been called together, so that I can not ask the question later. Will the gentleman tell me what has been done about the John Hays Hammond, jr., dirigible torpedo?

Mr. SHERLEY. I made a statement on Saturday about it. The joint board has been appointed: They have furnished Mr. Hammond with an aeroplane and with a number of fast vessels, and it is expected that the final test will be had very shortly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. GARDNER, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Ken-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last two words.

There have been some positive statements made Mr. FESS. here on the floor to the effect that the European war has proved the stationary fortification to be of no use. I have not the facts, although I have been a pretty careful reader of what has gone on over there. But I do not know of a place where the stationary fortifications were proved to be of no

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is correct. take was made by confusing interior land fortifications with seacoast fortifications. The fortification at Liege was intended to resist attack by a mobile army, and at that time it was not believed that mobile guns of very much greater caliber than 7 inches could be brought against it, and it was built with steel coverings to withstand a bombardment from guns of that size. The Germans sprang a surprise on them and brought forward much heavier guns and smashed the fortification to pieces. The only test in the European war of seacoast fortifications was that in connection with the Dardanelles. There was proved the assertion that I had made, that there had been no instance in modern warfare in which a modern seacoast fortification had been subdued from the sea. The gentleman, of course, recalls the campaign that was conducted at the Dardanelles?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. It might have succeeded, not by the reduction of those forts by the ships, but if at the time England sent her fleet there she had had a mobile army to have immediately landed, it is possible that from the land she might have captured those fortifications. She attempted that several days later, but in the meantime the Turkish Army had strengthened itself, and the result was that the campaign was disastrous.

Mr. FESS. That Gallipoli campaign will always stand as a failure on the part of the allies.

Mr. SHERLEY. The value of sea fortifications is shown by the experience at Helgoland. Notwithstanding the fact that England has a fleet superior to the German fleet, and notwithstanding the fact that she is able to maintain a rigid blockade of the German coast, yet she is unable to get at the German fleet except when the German fleet wishes to give battle, because it can lie behind the fortifications of Helgoland, and she dare not attack the fleet behind those fortifications.

Mr. FESS. Nothing in the European war would justify our abandoning anything we have done in the line of coast fortifi-

Mr. SHERLEY. No. I think everything has been to justify our seacoast fortifications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian Islands, $720,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be understood as making a pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman state to the committee exactly what this sum is to be expended for?

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman speaking of the $720,000?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is for emplacements for six 12-inch guns mounted on barbette carriages with long-range fire. It will not entirely provide for them, but is all that is now desired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What is the purpose of mounting 12-inch guns there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the idea is to so place these guns as to encircle the island of Oahu with a fire at least 10,000 yards out from shore, and thereby to prevent battleships from protecting with their secondary batteries the landing of troops.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it the purpose to put this fortification about in the center of the island on an elevation and shoot all around on the horizon?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is the purpose to have three batteries of two guns each. One of those batteries would be reasonably near to Pearl Harbor. One of the batteries would be on the other side of the ridge of which Diamond Head is a part, and the other battery would be at the other end of the island.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The purpose of this item is to provide protection against the landing of troops, not to keep off battleships except for a limited distance?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is right; the idea is to compel battleships, in the event a landing were attempted, to stay more than 10,000 yards away from shore. That would prevent them from doing any effective fire with their secondary batteries, and that would make very much more difficult the landing of troops. For instance, at the Dardanelles the English, when they undertook to land their troops there, ran some of their ships aground, and then they literally covered the land with fire, so as to make impossible the existence of any shore batteries while the troops were landing. It is to prevent that sort of thing that this is

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman tell whether the recommendation of this particular kind of defense came in its inception from the officers of the Army in Hawaii?

Mr. SHERLEY. It did. There have been a number of proposals there, as the gentleman is aware; proposals that ranged all the way from putting mortars all around the island to a program having a certain group of guns in the center. This is the latest project, and it has met with the approval not only of officers who were studying the projects there but of the board

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In the remainder of my time I want to state for what it is worth some information that I have received. I have heard this plan very severely criticized by officers of the Army. I do not know whether their views are better than the view of the gentleman, but I do know that they occupy a very high and responsible position in the department and are keenly interested in the defense of our insular possessions, because that has been some of their work.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Crisp). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I have three minutes more time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I must confess that, offhand, it strikes me that this is not the proper method of procedure, and I want to offer the reasons that have been given me for what they may be worth. There is a beautiful wagon road nearly the whole distance around the island of Oahu. That island is elliptical in shape, or almost round. The available landing places are limited to about two-thirds of the circumference. There is an area to the northeastward where, I understand, it would be practically impossible for any landing party to get a foothold. There is a road around all the rest of the distance. The experience of large armies in the field recently has been that they have been able to move howitzers fully as large as those provided for in this section, to move them rapidly from one point to another for the exact purpose that the gentleman has stated to the committee. And I want to say in that connection further that the Coast Artillery Corps of our own Army has made recent experiments as to the time required to take 9-inch mortars, load them on trucks, transport them a distance of 4, 5, 6, or 10 miles, and the results have been remarkable, showing that this method of defense is certainly well worthy of very careful consideration.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the gentleman will permit, he is assuming that this method prevents the other.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; it does not prevent the other at all; but if we spend our money for this we will have no money left for the other.

Mr. SHERLEY. The amount of money that we are going to have to spend for this purpose is not going to be so great as to interfere with the other. I hope the gentleman is right about that wagon road, though I think he is mistaken, because there is a scheme which they are presenting looking to the spending of $1,000,000 more to build a part of that very road and some

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is quite possible that the road does not extend as far as it ought to for military purposes, but it extends pretty nearly the whole distance.

Mr. SHERLEY. We carry in this bill $10,000 for the purpose of a survey and report about that matter.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I wish to state further in the moment I have remaining that I am glad to see that ample provision is being made to protect Hawaii against land attack or the landing of forces on the islands. When I came back two years ago and had the temerity to suggest some things that had been stated to me in regard to protecting the Hawaiian Islands against the landing of troops, I think I was smiled at; but I remember that that very fall the chairman in charge of this bill had the good judgment in the end to include an appropriation of $650,000 for that same purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the thing he had in mind was the Philippines.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, no; I will come to that in just a moment. I had two things at that time that were bothering me terribly, that were lying heavily on my soul.

Mr. SHERLEY. I knew the gentleman had more than one, and I am glad to know there were only two; but the one I thought he was particularly emphatic about was the Philip-

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Only two in connection with this bill, and one of the two was the situation at Hawaii in regard to its defenses against land attack.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Philippine Islands, $5,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] a question. If what he has proposed in this bill for the Hawaiian Islands is a good thing, why is not the same thing good for the Philippine Islands? And now I revert to the other thing that was bothering me terribly when I came back two years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would be glad if the gentleman would have that debate with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

GILLETT] and some other members of my committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have always understood and believed that if the gentleman from Kentucky was convinced, two-thirds of the battle was won.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but two-thirds do not constitute a whole, and it takes a whole for the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky constitutes at least two-thirds of the majority.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Without divulging anything that should not be openly talked about, I wish to say that the conditions with respect to the defense of the Philippine Islands apparently remain to-day as they were three years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no, if the gentleman will permit, we transferred some mortars there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. With the exception of mortars placed on Caballo for the purpose of preventing what did occur

the other day

Mr. SHERLEY. There is still another exception the gentleman ought to make. We provided a great deal of money for digging trenches, and for trails and for barbed-wire entanglements, and for building roads, and for the emplacement of small guns on Corregidor in connection with the land defenses there, or rather defense against landing parties--quite a considerable amount.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That no doubt is necessary and valuable, but the point I brought to the gentleman's attention specifically three years ago was the possibility of attacking Corregidor from the adjacent mainland, and I am sure that the gentleman from Kentucky did not feel that the position I then took was very well founded.

I want to ask this question: Has the gentleman read the result of the maneuvers that took place to test the very matter I had the privilege of discussing with him?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know to what the gentleman refers, but I think I can safely say that I have not.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They are in the War Department office and they will never come out unless somebody digs

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt about that,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And just what I told the gentleman could occur actually did occur, not theoretically but physically and actually.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not doubt that, and still I might question the conclusion that the gentleman draws from the report.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If I knock a man down or he knocks me down, somebody is down. If a battery is knocked to pieces, it is knocked to pieces,

Mr. SHERLEY. They did not knock this battery to pieces by

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They put a shot right in the place where if another shot had come it would have knocked it to pieces, but they stopped firing. But this certainly is good for Hawaii, and I think the gentleman and his committee has had in mind whether we will always have the Philippine Islands, but I do not think that ought to decide this question. We have expended there between twelve and fourteen million dollars in defending the four islands at the entrance to Manila Bay. we should find that an expenditure of $500,000 or a million more would make this defense complete, and without the expenditure they are not complete, I think we ought to make the additional expenditure. And by complete I do not mean perfect; all I mean is reasonably complete, that completion which practical conditions require. If these fortifications as they now stand are so incomplete that they are not adapted to the purposes for which they are designed and by the expenditure of a little more in addition we can make them right, it ought to be done. I am still in the hope that the gentleman from Kentucky will call to his committee not several of the geutlemen who are in the department here, high minded as they are, but will call before his committee other men who have views on the subject and are in a better position to know the facts, and let them tell him the exact situation over there.

Mr. SHERLEY. What to me seems a little bit amusing is the number of things that gentlemen are quite sure the chairman of the subcommittee will do, provided he does some other thing. They seem to have a capacity to read my mind infinitely better than I can read it myself. Let me say, in passing, that there have been recommendations of this kind, but I am not the whole committee. I do not write a bill to suit myself, and it is unfair to constantly criticize because the views of a man are not entirely reflected in a bill. I think the defense of the Philippines is not going to be anything as inadequate as the gentleman from Minnesota thinks unless these additional guns are placed there. Whether that be true or not, I repeat that I represent the judgment of the committee, and in the judgment of the committee they did not feel warranted in recommending moneys to build emplacements for two 12-inch guns on Corregidor, although that is a part of the project as it has been finally

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, purchase and installation of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus and materials, coast signal apparatus, and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the use of coast artillery; purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $31,537.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, at this point in the bill last there appeared an item under the heading "Under the Secretary of War," which provided-

For the procurement of such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including such plans, specifications, and detailed drawings as may be necessary for the immediate manufacture of arms, an munition, and other material necessary for the defense of the country, and for plans for and the installation of such material in private plants in the United States under such contract and agreement as may be made by the Secretary of War, $1,000,000.

Naturally I felt a very deep interest in that item, because I had introduced a bill which in the form of an amendment went into the national-defense act making such an appropriation in order. This year there is no provision in the bill for that purpose. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] has explained in general debate the reason why this bill carries no appropriation for that subject. While the explanation is a good one from the standpoint of the committee, nevertheless the situation which it reveals is not at all a satisfactory or a comforting one. The very fact that these necessary appliances have not been secured indicates that there has been difficulty in pro-curing them. That is the fact. There has been great difficulty and it has been shown that under any circumstances it requires considerable time to procure them. And yet the ordnance officers and all others who have studied the subject agree that these appliances are absolutely necessary for the manufacture of arms and ammunition in large quantities. In other words, before we are ready to produce the absolute necessities of a modern war we must have in considerable numbers the very articles named in the item that is here omitted from this bill, and it requires a long time to procure them, as Great Britain has learned to her sorrow.

If we were asked what is the ideal way to prepare this country for national defense along the line of munitions, we might well say, if money were no object, buy and store all the ammunition, all the guns, and other material that we could possibly use in a war. There is perhaps no one in this House who would agree to such a proposition. The amount of money it would cost would be so great that it would be entirely beyond the range of possibilities Another way would be to erect large ammunition factories all over the country, equip and keep them ready, so that at the beginning of a war we should be able immediately to begin This plan turning out an abundance of arms and ammunition. has been seriously proposed as a means of removing the danger of sordid profits from governmental necessities. When we go into the question as to what it would cost, however, we find that it would cost literally billions of dollars to erect and keep in readiness for use any adequate number of Government plants. As soon as erected and equipped buildings and machinery would begin to deteriorate, and unless we keep an organization actually employed we should probably find ourselves entirely helpless when trouble came.

The third and to my mind the only practical solution is the plan so long and earnestly advocated by me, which fortunately is by far the cheapest solution of the problem. In a word, this plan is to prepare in advance the necessary gauges, dies, jigs, and other special appliances which require a long time to produce, and which we must of necessity have in order to produce the quantity of arms and ammunition required by a modern war. The essential point is to prepare them in advance and have them ready for use, whether stored in Government vaults or kept with private concerns is a matter of detail.

If this were done as it should be, it would then not be necessary to go into the production of arms and ammunition on a gigantic scale and have them stored up. Only a reasonable reserve of these things would then be necessary. Those who are interested in munitions profits alone, if such there be, might find fault with me for proposing such a plan. I should expect them to, because this is looking to real preparedness for national defense without extraordinary, extravagant, and reckless expenditure of money, which I feel this country can not and ought not to afford.

As it would serve to keep fresh in mind this very important matter if an appropriation were carried here for this purpose, I regret that this bill does not bring in a recommendation for it. I understand from the chairman of the subcommittee, and I understand from the Chief of Ordnance, that it is not because it has not been deemed necessary that these things be procured, but because they are finding great difficulty in getting the designs in the first place, and in the next place getting the manufacturers to produce them. In the end, however, we must have them, and I now call attention to this statement that we shall hear from this item again. We shall hear from it from year to year, so long as I am a Member of this body, until we put ourselves in such a state of preparation that we shall be able, upon the outbreak of a war, to at once begin the manufacture of such arms and ammunition as it is necessary to have produced in very great quantities.

I hold in my hand the report of a board appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of Government manufacture of arms, ammunition, and equipment, provided for in section 121 of the national-defense act, which is printed as Senate Document No. 664. It is stated in this very instructive document that the greatest difficulty that has been found in the study of this subject is the lack of these very appliances of which I have been speaking.

I quote from the report of the board a few lines on the subject which is frequently referred to in the report:

Since the greatest obstacle which a private corporation has to meet in turning its organization and its physical plant to the production of war material arises from lack of correct drawings and specifications and accurate gauges, it has been suggested that these first indispensable things be taken up, standardized, produced, and stored in such numbers as would enable an establishment, upon receipt of its quota, to set about at once with clear purpose to adapt its tools, machinery, etc., to the particular output called for. Perhaps this standardization and storage should be extended to the jigs and fixtures required for the production of at least the most difficult material.

In the summary of findings and recommendations by this board, we find two paragraphs devoted to this subject, as follows:

It is important to accumulate a full supply of drawings and gauges sufficient to enable all coordinated industries to work to full capacity promptly.

It is desirable to standardize gauges, jigs, and tools as far as practicable and as soon as practicable.

I also hold in my hand a copy of a speech made by the Right Hon. Edwin Montagu, member of Parliament and minister of munitions, in the House of Parliament in Great Britain, on August 15, 1916, in which he states the difficulties with which the ministry of munitions in Great Britain has been confronted during the progress of the war. The list of difficulties stated by him is headed by the very one of which I am speaking. I quote from the speech of Mr. Montagu. Speaking of the difficulties encountered, he says:

The first one is the question of inspection. * * * Inspection involves the most careful testing and gauging of every article that is passed, and that is a process in production which involves a very large factory staff. The average type of shell requires 30 gauges, a percussion fuse 100 gauges, and a time fuse 240 gauges. As these gauges must fit to within less than a thousandth part of an inch, and in most cases one-third of that figure, to obtain uniform results, it will be understood why the supply of gauges has been one of our greatest difficulties.

These instruments can not be manufactured hastily, they can not be improvised over night; they are the product of time and of highly skilled mechanics. That is what Great Britain has found, and that is the way Great Britain is solving the problem in the stress of a great war. My plea is that we solve the problem in time of peace. We should not allow ourselves to neglect a plan which does not run into large sums of money and yet is rational, safe, and, in case of war, might prove to be our national salvation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section.

What is the point of order? Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. KEATING. It changes existing law. Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. This has been carried for years and is a limitation. That same provision has been in every fortification bill for many years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then why carry it now, if it is the law?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Kentucky insists that it is existing law, and I presume he is trying to find the existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. This provision has been in every fortification appropriation bill since I have been a Member of Congress. I once had quite a debate in trying to strike out the words "in limited quantities," and I got whipped on it.

Mr. KEATING. I submit that it is up to the gentleman to produce the existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the provision under consideration is a limitation, and Congress has full authority to limit the appropriations carried in the appropriation bill, This item has been carried in previous appropriation bills. has been carried in other bills as well as in this, and if my memory serves me right whenever the proposal has been submitted to the Chair the Chair has upheld the right of the committee to insert a paragraph similar to this phraseology upon the ground that it is a limitation upon the expenditure of an appropriation.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the mere fact that it has been carried in various appropriation bills, as the Chair well knows, does not alter the case.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is a limitation upon an expenditure and not subject to the point of order. It is limited to this act and to the material that is purchased by virtue of the appropriations made herein. It simply limits them to American manufacture, except when for reasons stated it may be necessary to purchase in limited quantities abroad.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to submit the matter to the judgment of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is a limitation upon the purchase of these articles mentioned in the paragraph and overrules the point of order.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago the Navy Department called for bids for certain munitions of war, and a foreign firm submitted a bid which was very materially lower than the bids submitted by American firms. If the provision we are now discussing were carried in the naval appropriation act it would have been impossible, in my judgment, for the Secretary of the Navy to have considered that bid, because this provision reads that the Secretary of War may purchase from foreign bidders "in limited quantities" only when, in the judgment of the Secretary, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make the purchases abroad. I presume the Secretary of War might be the judge of what Congress meant by "limited quantities," but if he were disposed to place a close construction upon that provision it seems to me he would be limited to a very marked extent.

And I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the Government of the United States should not be restricted in any way, for if anything has been demonstrated in connection with the purchase of munitions it is that American munition makers are in practical agreement in the matter of making bids for Government contracts.

Going back to the Navy Department again, a few years ago a foreign bidder forced the American munition makers to reduce their bids to an extent that enabled the present Secretary of the Navy to save millions of dollars to this Government, and when that foreign bidder dropped out of the market the American manufacturers immediately raised their price. This year the American bidders, not knowing that the foreign bidder was to enter into competition with them, submitted their old-time exorbitant bids, and if it had not been for this foreign bidder the Federal Treasury would once more have contributed to the dividends of the munition makers' combine. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the Government of the United States should be permitted to go into any market in the world to escape the exactions of these domestic monopolies.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I suppose the gentleman has taken into consideration the difference in the price of labor abroad and at home?

Mr. KEATING. Oh, yes; and the gentleman has taken into consideration the difference in the efficiency of American workmen and foreign workmen. The gentleman is quite familiar with the hackneyed argument which the gentleman from Vermont is about to produce, but it is an argument which should not appeal to this side of the House, at any rate. No, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman is mistaken if he believes that the exorbitant bids made to the Navy Department by American munition manufacturers have been caused by the difference between labor prices in the United States and abroad.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman seek to correct the difference by inviting the cheaper labor of the world to compete against the protected labor in America?

Mr. KEATING. Oh, that theory about the "cheap" labor of the world competing with the "protected" labor of America has been exploded so often, Mr. Chairman, that I can not at-tempt to discuss it at this time. The fact is that American labor—as represented in the steel industry of this countryinto the lands where this "cheap" foreign labor is to be found and there undersells the "cheap" foreign labor. The gentleman from Vermont knows about that quite as well as I do. The American steel industry, on the authority of the greatest steel masters of this country, is fully capable of holding its own in any country in the world, and the manufacture of munitions is essentially a part of the steel industry.

No, Mr. Chairman, the real point at issue is whether we will permit the Navy Department and the War Department to protect the Treasury of the United States against the raids of munitions manufacturers. That is the real point at issue, and I contend that Congress should not place in these bills any provision which will handicap the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy in the discharge of this important duty.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, we carry a provision in this bill which is aimed at the protection of the Government from extortionate prices in connection with munitions of war. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] will find in section 5 of the bill a provision that no moneys can be expended for the procurement of anything from private manufacturers at a cost which shall be greater than 25 per cent in excess of the estimated arsenal price of manufacture. We fix it in that way in order that there might not be a possible extortion on the part of private manufacturers, believing that we leave as great a leeway as is proper to give to manufacturers, having in mind they must necessarily make a profit on what they manufacture and sell. With that provision in the law the argument of the gentleman as to the need to protect us against extortion loses much of its force. The provision that he has moved to strike out has been carried in the bill upon the basic idea that in connection with matters relating to the defense of America it was desirable wherever practicable to build them in America that we might, either through Government building or private manufacture, create a capacity sufficient to supply us in time of need and not leave us dependent upon foreign manufacturers

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. It is plain, therefore, to see that the reason that would apply generally touching matters other than of this nature should not apply here. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The language in section 2 says "in limited quantities." Will the gentleman explain what

Mr. SHERLEY. This is what happens under that: For instance, in the old days we were unable to get mirrors of American manufacture to be used in connection with our searchlights. We bought them abroad. Frequently we wanted to buy some particular gun. I think some of the French 3-inch guns were originally bought and sent over here in order that we might learn from them the kind of 3-inch guns we wanted to build. Sometimes we bought range-finding instruments, occasionally small quantities of powder. In any of these matters where the European Governments seemed to be in advance of us in the character of their armament or material we have bought there until we could so duplicate here as not to be dependent upon them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has that language any technical significance? Now, for instance, in a plain, ordinary sense it would mean this, that if our Government wanted to spend $10,000,000 to buy 12-inch shells of a certain character and kind, that would be a limited quantity. What I mean to say is that the purchase of anything like such a quantity as that would be included.

Mr. SHERLEY. My own judgment is that it was intended to prevent wholesale purchase of any particular thing. When I first came to Congress I offered a motion somewhat similar to the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating], except I provided by striking out the words "in limited quantities" in order to give to the War Department more leeway than was proposed it would have under the language as it now At that time we had no limitation as to the prices we should pay for any of these things. Since then, on my own initiative, a limitation has been placed touching the cost of powder, and now this general limitation of 25 per cent touching the cost of all material. It seems to me, therefore, that that removes a great deal of the proper argument that could be made against the provision and the danger of its leading to extortion.

Mr. TAVENNER. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this paragraph ought to be stricken out of the bill. If it does not have any effect, what is the use of its being in the bill? I believe if the Secretary of the Navy had had a provision like this staring him in the face he would have been absolutely unable recently to have gotten the American ammunition firms to lower their prices.

The ammunition makers evidently think it is a good idea to make it impossible for this Government to buy anything from abroad. A few years ago the Du Ponts went into an agreement with European powder makers to divide the world's markets between themselves.

This international agreement went into effect in 1897, and when exposed and brought into prominence 10 years later was discontinued. But I believe they still have some kind of an arrangement by which they refuse to bid against each other in time of peace.

As the Secretary of the Navy said, the war traffickers have divided the world, like Gaul, into three parts.

Here are two paragraphs from the world agreement to which I have referred and which were taken from the records of the Supreme Court:

Whenever the American factories receive an inquiry from any Government other than their own, either directly or indirectly, they are to communicate with the European factories through the chairman appointed as hereinafter set forth, and by that means to ascertain the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed, and they shall be bound not to quote or sell at any lower figure than the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed. Should the European factories receive an inquiry from the Government of the United States of North America or decide to quote for delivery for that Government, either directly or indirectly, they shall first in like manner ascertain the price quoted or fixed by the American factories and shall be bound not to quote or sell below that figure.

The American factories are to abstain from manufacturing or selling or quoting directly or indirectly in or for consumption in any of the European territory, and the Europeans are to abstain in like manner from manufacturing, selling, or quoting, directly or indirectly, in or for consumption in any of the countries of the American territory. With regard to the syndicated territory neither party is to erect works there, except by a mutual understanding, and the trade there is to be carried on for joint account in the manner hereinafter defined.

Recently this matter came up indirectly in a New York court, and, strange to say, one of the representatives of the Du Pont Powder Co. went into court and testified that an officer of the Government of the United States had sanctioned that agreement! Just think of what that agreement meant! It meant that if the United States had tried to escape the net of the Du Pont Powder Trust, which had a monopoly of the sale of smokeless powder to the United States Government, by attempting to purchase powder in some foreign country, the foreign powder makers would have been bound first to write to the Du Pont Co. and see what the Du Ponts had bid, and then not to put in a leaven hid. in a lower bid.

There is other evidence to fully substantiate the belief that in times past the armor and munitions makers went into agreements with each other. Some years back, Charles M. Schwab, now president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., but at that time vice president and general manager of the Carnegie Steel Co., gave some illuminating testimony on the subject of the absence of honest competition between the only two concerns in the United States at that time that were manufacturing armor-Carnegie and Bethlehem. (54th Cong., S. Rept. 1453, p. 454; hearings.)

Senator BLACKBURN. Is there any competition in the price of armor in this country as between yourselves and the Bethlehem Co.?

Mr. SCHWAB. No, sir; assuredly not. We have always had an understanding in that matter. We [Carnegie] never take a contract that we do not consult with the Bethlehem about it.

Senator BLACKBURN. I asked if there is competition.

Mr. SCHWAB. No, sir; there is no competition. I want to be quite fair on that point.

Nowadays the armor and munitions concerns do not have written agreements, for they are embarrasing when produced in court. But in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy they still have unwritten agreements. Personally I am satisfied there is no such thing as honest competitive bidding between them.

I am not in favor of giving these contracts to foreign firms. favor the Government manufacture of munitions of war of practically every character. But until we have the necessary facilities to manufacture in Government establishments these munitions and supplies, I am in favor of the Secretary of War having the privilege of buying of European firms in special instances where he is convinced the American manufacturers are in a conspiracy to unduly overcharge Uncle Sam.

The permanent solution of the problem is for the Government to speedily enlarge its own plants so that the Nation will be neither at the mercy of the unscrupulous and unpatriotic war traffickers at home or the alternative of sending orders abroad, but will be able to take care of its military wants in its own shops.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, striking out this paragraph would simply militate against the industrial preparedness that is so important to this country, not only by having our munitions manufactured in governmental arsenals, but in having them manufactured also in private establishments. I believe in the face of the dire necessity of this country in time of war that we must necessarily have, not only arsenals operated by the Government to manufacture munitions, but private arsenals equipped to manufacture materials to meet the demands imposed by the exigency of war.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment. At the close of the European war we can readily understand that the foreign governments will be seeking the markets of this country, not only to supply our trade in various lines, but also to supply our wants in munitions. If it should be the policy of this country to permit some executive officer, upon the bid submitted by a foreign manufacturer, may be sanctioned by his government, to accept a bid at a cut-throat price, it might drive out of business the private manufacturers of this country.

This bill safeguards the interests of this Government. As has been pointed out by the chairman of the committee, not more than 25 per cent above the price of manufacture in Government plant shall be paid for munitions that are manufactured in private establishments.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if the idea is to manufacture all our munitions in Government yards, it will be a sucidal policy to industrial preparedness so as to meet the needs of this country in case of the exigency of war.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is familiar with the recent experience of the Navy Department, where bids were submitted for the manufacture of projectiles, and he is familiar with the bids made by an English firm, the Hadfields (Ltd.), which was considerably beneath that of the American concerns. Now, does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of the Navy should have ignored the English bid—the foreign bid and should have granted the contract to one of the American concerns which had filed exorbitant bids?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if, as has been represented, the Hadfields' bid was made low because the British Government did not have any need of their manufactures at this time by reason of the fact that the large shells manufactured by them were not required on board their battle cruisers and battleships, and they were offering them at a cut-throat price to our Government in order to deprive our American manufacturers of the opportunity of furnishing those supplies at a fair and reasonable figure, then I say yes; the Secretary of the Navy should not, under those conditions, have granted that contract to a British manufacturer. It would merely be strengthening them. The Secretary of the Navy on the contrary should look to the development of private establishments in this country so that in except was a private establishments. in this country so that in case of war our private plants would be equipped to meet the exigency.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. KEATING. The gentleman, who keeps in touch with events, knows that such was not the case; that is, the English Government had not authorized or encouraged the Hadfields firm to make that bid. That is proven by the fact that the English Government since then had directed the Hadfields not to carry out the contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not say that. I said because the British manufacturer had not at that time any work for the English Government it had made a cutthroat price.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has no authority for that

Mr. STAFFORD. I have as much authority for that statement as the gentleman has for his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Furthermore, as has been stated by American manufacturers of munitions for our Government, they have not raised the price unduly since the war broke out in Europe, but instead of accepting bids at much higher prices from the belligerent powers, they have continued to give the preference to the American Government at a fair price plus a little reasonable increase occasioned by the high price of material. has been no extortion imposed by the American manufacturers upon the Government since the outbreak of the war, and yet they could have obtained much higher prices if they had closed their plants to the American Government's demands and had simply given heed and given ear to the demands of the European

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TAVENNER. Does the gentleman consider that when an American manufacturer asks as much as 80 per cent more than the cost to produce a 700-pound 12-inch projectile at a Government arsenal that it is a reasonable price?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman has made a lot of rash statements about armor-plate making, when time and time again it has been shown that our manufacturers were furnishing armor plate to our Government here at less than they were receiving from foreign governments.

Mr. TAVENNER. Oh, the gentleman can put in the Record any erroneous statements I have made.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not necessary to put into the Record any of the erroneous statements that the gentleman has made. The gentleman himself has put a lot of erroneous statements in the Record on this proposition.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment, in order to offer a substitute for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. KEATING. I offer an amendment to line 16, page 12. I move to strike out the words "in limited quantities," so that the sentence will read: "That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 16, strike out the words "in limited quantities."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. KEATING) there were—ayes 18, noes 34.

Mr. KEATING. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, nine Members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That appropriations in this act shall not be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 53 cents a pound.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what is the price of powder. I see that it is provided in section 4, line 3, that appropriations in this act shall not be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 53 cents a pound. I am not familiar with the price of powder, and I was just wondering what it was.

Mr. SHERLEY. Some time ago we were making powder for 41 or 42 cents, and this limitation was fixed on the price that we should pay manufacturers. I think we are going still to be able to buy it at that price. I doubt very much whether we can make it for that price.

Mr. HASTINGS. Was any limitation on the price to be paid for powder placed in the bill last year?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Yes.
This same limit? Mr. HASTINGS.

Mr. SHERLEY. This same limit; and last year it was a more equitable limitation than this, on the basis of the price of material; but in view of the fact that the powder people, in the great contracts they have had abroad, have made profits sufficient to wipe out the entire original cost of their plants in many instances, I think they will be glad, in order to keep running at larger capacity, to furnish powder at 53 cents; but I suspect that it is going to cost the Government that or more to make it. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of any material at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government: Provided, however, That whenever in the opinion of the President an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States, he may waive the limitations contained in this section.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It has been contended by munitions manufacturers that Government ownership was a failure, because of the high cost of operation in Government plants. The Bethlehem Steel Co., for instance, in recent advertisements have undertaken to build ships and to manufacture munitions at the price that it would cost the Government to construct those same ships and to make those same munitions in Government plants, the theory being that Uncle Sam in his business affairs is such a poor manager that he can not produce ships and guns and ammunition at as low a cost as private manufacturers. Yet here we find a provision that these manufacturers may charge the Government 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing these various articles in Government plants.

I think it has been the experience of every Government department that where such a limitation as this is placed in the bill the bidders charge the extra 25 per cent, especially where the bidders have an understanding; and I again assert that all the evidence so far developed demonstrates conclusively that there is an understanding between the men who bid for these Government contracts. We have that on the testimony of so distinguished an official as the Secretary of the Navy, and he supports his assertion by documentary evidence which, in my judgment, can not be questioned.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Under this phrase, "in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government, what is omitted in the cost to the Government that would be included if it was cost to a private enterprise?

Mr. KEATING. I do not know of anything.

Mr. FESS. I think there would be

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman thinks so, and perhaps the gentleman is right, but I do not think he is. I think he will find that in estimating the cost of producing shells in a Government plant they add to the labor cost and the cost of material, and all those other things, an overhead charge.

Mr. FESS. Would interest and rent and insurance and those things be counted in?

Mr. KEATING. I do not know whether profits would be added; I do not know whether taxes would be added; but the Secretary of the Navy is on record as saying that the overhead charge added to the estimates was, in his judgment, excessive. Now, the fact is that you are simply encouraging these manufacturers, in my judgment, to charge the Government an excessive price for munitions. I do not think this provision should be in the bill. Personally I think the Government should make its own munitions, and that in addition to that, as I suggested a little while ago, the Government should be permitted to go into the markets of the world and award contracts to the lowest bidders.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.
Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman realize that if we should rely upon Government manufacture in case of war we would be absolutely lost, and that we never could expect in time of war to produce the munitions needed without marshaling all the resources of an industrial character in the country?

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Colorado is as much interested in the perpetuity of the Republic as is the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I have no reason to dispute that, and that is the reason I am asking the gentleman the question.

Mr. KEATING. And the gentleman from Colorado would be as loath as the gentleman from Connecticut to place the country in a position where it might be successfully attacked by a for-eign power. But I can not agree with the gentleman from Connecticut in his conclusions.

The assertion that the Government must encourage private manufacturers to build up plants seems to me not to be well founded, because the only way you can encourage the establishing of a private plant is by furnishing that plant with work. You must furnish these plants with contracts which will enable them to employ their men and keep them employed. What do you do in Government plants? You employ the men and keep them at work, and that is all; not any more than the number you would have in private plants. In addition to that, according to this bill, the Government would do the work for 25 per cent less than the private manufacturer.

The fact is that what the gentleman proposes, and what other advocates of private manufacture of munitions approve, is a subsidy to manufacturers of munitions, and it is the most extravagant policy upon which the Government could enter. It is akin to the fallacious theory, for instance, that if a private enterprise establishes a water plant in a municipality and issues bonds, the people of that city do not pay the interest on those bonds, and therefore they are not burdened with that indebtedness. Now, as a matter of fact, they do pay the interest on the bonds, and it would be quite as well for them to have the bonds issued in the name of the city as in the name of the private corporation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, the argument is made that we ought to give big contracts to private ammunition firms, so that private concerns may enlarge their plants and that we may have them to depend on in time of war. This argument will not hold water. The 18 firms that will get the contracts under the bills that we are passing here—the Army bill and the fortifications bill—are every one, according to the Army War College, located in territory that is absolutely unsafe. I am going to read to you from an official statement a principle laid down by the Army War College in Bulletin No. 532:

As a general military principle no supply depot, arsenal, or manufacturing plant of any considerable size, supported by War Department appropriations for military purposes, should be established or maintained east of the Appalachian Mountains, west of the Cascade or Slerra Nevada Mountains, nor within 200 miles of our Canadian or Mexican borders, and steps should be taken gradually to cause to be moved depots and manufacturing plants already established in violation of this military principle.

They tell us they want to build up private munition plants, so that we can rely on them in time of war. Here is the report of the Army War College, saying that we can not rely on them in time of war. Instead of giving these contracts to plants that we can not rely on in time of war, we should let this work to safe Government plants.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That expenditures for carrying out the provisions of this act shall not be made in such manner as to prevent the operation of the Government arsenals at their most economical rate of production, except when a special exigency requires the operation of a portion of an arsenal's equipment at a different rate: Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman starts, ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Gordon: Page 13, line 21, after the word "rate," strike out the proviso, which reads as follows:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant."

Mr. CORDON. Mr. Chairman, that is the proviso that is being

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, that is the proviso that is being inserted in these appropriation bills to make these enormous expenditures for war and preparation for war as expensive as possible, and to render as inefficient as possible the Government arsenals and Government work of all kinds. I have made some personal investigation of this question. This is the prohibition of the so-called Taylor system, a system by which a record is kept of the cost of each element of material, in time, thereby determining what it actually cost the Government to make an article. Without this or some similar system there is absolutely no way of determining in any large manufacturing establishment what it costs to make an article. The reason for this proviso, so far as I have been able to learn, and the only reason for it, is the opposition of some of these gentlemen who are employed here to represent labor organizations and who call this Taylor system a "stop-watch" or "speed-up" system. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How was the cost of manufacture determined before this provision was adopted?

Mr. GORDON. There never was any way of determining it, and there is no other way now of determining what it costs the Government to manufacture any article unless they use the Taylor system or some system analogous to it.

Gen. Crozier, Chief of the Ordnance Department, testified before our Committee on Military Affairs just a few weeks ago that the records of his department show that since this efficiency system has been abolished the cost of producing articles there has advanced very substantially, in some instances enormously, over what it cost before; and the men themselves, so far as they have given expression to their sentiments on the matter, are not opposed to this system. No honest man who desires his employer to know what amount of work he does in a given time can have any possible objection to this system. It simply keeps a record of the amount and cost to the Government of producing any part of this werk. I can not for the life of me see why any honest man should object to the Government knowing what it gets for its money. We are prescribing a standard by which the Government shall purchase these millions of dollars' worth of material necessary in this fortification bill, appropriating more than $60,000,000 and prescribing that the Government shall not pay in excess of 25 per cent more than it would cost it to produce those same articles; so that the Government not only loses on its own work, but the increased costs will apply to everything it buys.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Is a workman who exceeds the output-that is, something that is determined as the average output by timegiven a premium?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; and that is prohibited in this bill. Increased efficiency is penalized instead of being rewarded.

Mr. REAVIS. In the Senate hearings held some years ago, which I have recently read, it was developed that in the operation of what is known as the Taylor system they would take the most efficient man under the most favorable circumstances and determine his output, not as the maximum, but as the average, and deduct from the pay of any man who fell below that average. Has any testimony of that character been developed before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. GORDON. On the contrary, the testimony before our committee and all the testimony had was that no such policy is followed.

Mr. REAVIS. Has there been any testimony before the gentleman's committee that the process of speeding up under this system has had a deleterious effect upon the health of the men?

Mr. GORDON. On the contrary, the testimony absolutely re-futes that, and I interrogated Gen. Crozier upon the very question, and he said there was absolutely nothing in it; that they did not take the output of the most efficient man, but they took the average output as the factor and determined from that what is a fair day's wages, and where a man exceeds that amount he is paid for the value of his product in excess of the average output.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say our committee investigated this matter fully?

Mr. GORDON. I have not said so; no; but I asked Gen. Crozier some questions to elicit the information that I wanted, and I got it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not true that Gen. Crozier produced in the committee a chart showing the comparative product of certain workmen while the Taylor system was in operation and since the system was abandoned? Mr. GORDON. He did.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Was not there a vast discrepancy between the figures in favor of the Taylor system?

Mr. GORDON. Exactly; he did that very thing.

The official report from the Watertown Arsenal discloses that since the abolition of time study and premium payments, although the pay of the men is less since the prohibition of premium payments by Congress, the cost of manufacturing has enormously increased. In one case a man had the job of retapping the base of some 4.7-inch shells; last summer, before the premium system had been abolished, this man did 100 of those shells in 10 hours; after premiums had been abolished and prohibited, this same man took 22.95 hours to do the same work on 100 shells. In another case a man had the job of cutting a slot in 4.7-inch base plugs. Under the premium system this man did 100 of these in 2.66 hours; afterwards, under the dayrate system, this same man did only 20 of these in 2.25 hours. It took 4.2 times as long for this man to do one of these base plugs under the day-rate system as it took under the premium

The official report from the superintendent of the Watertown Arsenal was accompanied by a letter, which reads as follows:

Arsenal was accompanied by a letter, which reads as follows:

It is perfectly evident, by mere observation, that a great change has taken place in our shops; the atmosphere that was so noticeable of industry and application has changed materially; there is much more loafing and a much greater tendency to sit around on kegs, etc., than has existed here for several years, but I do not think any of us appreciated just how much the falling off had been until we had the data indicated on the tabulation, which I am sending you. There is no doubt at all now that the men have no desire now to exert themselves, and in one case, which has recently been brought to my attention, the machinist, when taken to task for doing such slow work, stated that now that the premium had been taken away, he did not propose to exert himself.

Gen. Crozier testifies that the record shows that the men did on an average 2.7 times as much work under the premium system as they have since done under the day-rate system.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, as the committee knows, I personally did not agree with this proviso when it was first placed on the appropriation bill last year; but at least three different roll calls were had on different bills, and the House very clearly went on record in favor of the provision. Now, in view of that record, in view of the fact that the same personnel now composes the House that composed the House last year, in view of the fact that, presumably, men who after three different dis-cussions and three different roll calls voted upon opinions deliberately formed, it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations to be unwarrantable to bring in the bill without that provision in it. The committee in a sense is the servant of the House. The House three times has declared against my own personal judgment, but declared by an overwhelming majority in favor of this provision. Unquestionably, if a roll call were had to-night that same judgment will be rendered, as there is not enough new matter before the House to warrant men in changing their views; and for that reason I think it is not worth while, in view of the desire to finish this bill in order to get ready for other important matters now awaiting its conclusion, to undertake to have a new test made that can not result in a different conclusion. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Gordon) there were-aves 19, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentle-man give me one minute before he makes that motion, and that is because of a statement which was made some time ago which thought perhaps was correct, that under the treaty with Great Britain we are not allowed to fortify any of the great cities along the Great Lakes? I find by referring to the section of the treaty that the only prohibition is to the maintenance of ships of war or armed fleets on the Great Lakes, and that there is no prohibition whatever against the placing of guns, if we wanted to, or the building of fortifications we might care to, from Duluth clear across to Buffalo. I say this for the good of the gentlemen of the South whose hearts have been yearning for some of the ant hills down there that have not yet been surrounded by an iron ring.

Mr. PLATT. If the gentleman will permit, perhaps the gentleman will remember the case where a certain fortification on Lake Champlain was accidentally built on Canadian territory through an erroneous survey, and the Canadian officials ceded the territory to us so that it might stand on our own soil.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Fort Montgomery? Mr. PLATT. Yes; Fort Montgomery.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert a short article in reference to the Taylor system in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert an article about the Taylor system in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I now renew my motion that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Houston, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20453 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was engrossed and read a third time.
The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?
The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 21.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold it for a mo-

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold it for a moment; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] if he inclines to have the House meet to-morrow at 11 a. m.?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can not we have a roll call on this bill to-morrow morning?

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we had better do it to-night and get

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. HELVERING. I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma to withhold his point of order for a moment, until I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on farm-land banks and loan sharks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

VETO OF IMMIGRATION BILL (H. DOC. NO. 2003).

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold his motion until I can make a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the immigration bill (H. R. 10384)

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma withhold his motion?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNETT. A veto has come in, Mr. Speaker, on the immigration bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may lie on the table until Thursday morning, and at that time I give notice I shall call it up.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object-

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen will wait for a moment, This is a very short message, and the Chair thinks that it ought to be read now.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, does not there have to be a quorum present in order to have a reading of the message?

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum, so far as anybody knows, now.

Mr. BURNETT. All right; I have no objection. The SPEAKER. The clerk will read the message.

The Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I very much regret to return this bill (H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States") without my signature. In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I cannot rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunity to which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. quality and of purpose cannot be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations. The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith." Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but probable that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the government. ment or governments thus officially condemned should its exercise be attempted. I dare say that these consequences were not in the minds of the proponents of this provision but the provision separately and in itself renders it unwise for me to give my assent to this legislation in its present form.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1917.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the message lie on the table, and I ask unanimous consent and give notice that I will call it up Thursday morning next, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks that the message and the bill lie on the table.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. STAFFORD. Although the decisions on consideration of veto messages have held it was within the power of the House to refer these veto messages to a committee, I do not find any precedent which holds that the message itself can remain on the table for any definite time, because I consider it would be in conflict with that provision of the Constitution which says that when the message has been entered on the Journal the House shall proceed to reconsider it.

The construction that has been made, so far as I am able to find, is that by referring it to the committee to which it belongs, that is consideration, but allowing it to lie on the table for two days, a definite time, while the House is in session, we are opposing the express mandate of the Constitution. I question very much, even though I am opposed to this bill, that by this action we might not be negativing the validity of the bill even though it was passed over the President's veto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] asks unanimous consent that this bill and message lie on the Speaker's table. That is his request. And his notification to the House is that he is going to call it up next Thursday—I suppose just after the Journal is read. Of course, everybody understands that frequently it would be extremely inconvenient. if not impossible, to immediately consider a veto message; and the Constitution does not say "immediately," anyhow. The practice has been to dispose of it in one of three ways. The first one is to let it lie on the Speaker's table and call it up any time you get ready. The other one is to refer it to a committee.

The gentleman asks that it lie on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the gentleman—the chairman of the commit-tee—whether he desires or is willing to agree on time to be taken on the veto when it is called up next Thursday?

Mr. BURNETT. That can all be arranged, Mr. Speaker, at the time between the gentleman and myself; but if there is going to be objection, I am going to move right now to reconsider and pass it over the veto of the President.

Mr. SABATH. Well, if the gentleman desires to act as hastily

Mr. BURNETT. I do not desire to act hastily. Mr. SABATH. All I desire is to have a little time allowed when the bill is taken up.

Mr. BURNETT. I am willing that there should be an hour and a half of debate.

Mr. SABATH. That will be satisfactory. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, but I would not like the gentleman to move the previous question on me. That is a reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Thompson] to withhold his point of order for a minute. There is a committee that I have to appoint in the month of January, and this is the next to the last day, and I fortifications appropriation bill, H. R. 20453.

might forget it to-morrow. The language of the authorization or the command to the Speaker to do this thing is as follows:

From and after the passage of this act-

That is the naval bill of last session-there shall be appointed every year, in the following manner, a Board of Visitors, to visit the Academy-

That is, the Naval Academy-the date of the annual visit of the board aforesaid to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy.

He usually fixes it in June.

Seven persons shall be appointed by the President, and four Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives shall be designated as visitors by the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, in the month of January of each year. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives shall be ex officio members of said board.

The Chair construes that to mean that in addition to the chairman of the Naval Committee his duty is to appoint five. The Clerk will report the names.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, ex officio; Mr. TALBOTT, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. RIORDAN, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to see the Speaker to-morrow. If the Speaker is about to appoint the committee, will the Speaker excuse me from serving on it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is one of the very few men I have ever seen who refuses an honor. Does the gentleman decline to serve?

Mr. BUTLER. I have refrained from that service for 20 years, and if the Speaker will excuse me I would prefer not to be a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will erase the name of Mr. BUTLER and substitute that of Mr. Fare. Some of the Members in looking over the list may wonder why Mr. Roberts of Massachusetts is not appointed, and I take this occasion to announce the policy that I will follow so long as I am Speaker, whether it be a few days or a few years, and that is where the duties of a committee overlap and pass the term of service I will not appoint them. The duties of this committee are to go down there to Annapolis whenever the Secretary of the Navy orders them to do it, which will be some time in June.

The Clerk read the names as revised, as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, ex officio; Mr. Talbott, Mr. Estopinal, Mr. Riordan, Mr. Browning, and Mr. Farr.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair places before the House a resignation from a committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C., January 29, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby resign as a member of the Committee on Pensions, effective at once.

Respectfully,

WM. H. MURRAY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Tavenner, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Harry C. Twomey, filed during the Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mooney has been ill for many weeks. I ask unanimous consent that he be given an indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. Mooney, may have an indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-two Members present, not a quorum. Those in favor of the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed "nay."

Read and adopted by the house of representatives and the senate January 22, 1917.

BOB BARKER,

Bob Barker, Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of North Carolina, advocating and supporting Watauga Valley, in Carter County, Tenn., and immediately contiguous to the North Carolina magnetic ore bed, as the most suitable site in the United States for the location of the Government armor plant. The resolution is somewhat lengthy, and I do not ask that it be read, but that it be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Resolution requesting the North Carolina delegation in Congress to advocate and support the Watauga Valley, in Carter County, Tenn., and immediately contiguous to the North Carolina magnetic ore bed known as the Cranberry ore, as the most suitable site in the United States for the location of the Government armor plant.

Whereas the United States County of the Cou bed known as the Cranberry ore, as the most suitable site in the United States for the location of the Government armor plant.

Whereas the United States Government, acting under and by authority of H. R. 15947, appropriating $11,000,000 for the construction of a Government armor plant and authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to provide such a plant, is now about to select a site for the location of said plant, acting by and through the honorable Secretary of the Navy and the General Naval Board, as well as by and through an armor-plant board, recently appointed, consisting of Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, Commander Frank H. Clark, and Civil Engineer R. C. Backenhus; and

Whereas some 125 or 130 localities on September 13 and 14, 1916, presented written briefs and oral arguments to the honorable Secretary of the Navy and to the General Naval Board setting forth the advantages and resources of their respective localities, which, in their opinion, entitled them to the location of said plant; and

Whereas the General Naval Board has recently submitted its preliminary report, eliminating from the contest all of the sites and localities presented, excepting some 18 or 19 towns, of which Johnson City and Elizabethton, Tenn., representing the claims of the Watauga Valley, are two, by the application of the military policy outlined by the Wat College division of the General Staff of the War Department on September 11, 1915; and

Whereas as a result of the application of this principle, as embodied in the General Board's preliminary report, the only town in the State of North Carolina, namely, Fayetteville, which was pressing its claims as a suitable location for said plant, is thus eliminated; and

(9) In a location well drained by two rivers, namely, the Doe and the Watauga River, both being bold, swift, clear mountain streams, maintaining a uniform flow and having watersheds in the Blue Ridge Mountains, and in the very milds of the immense Appalachian Forest Reserve, where the Government already owns in the neighborhood of 150,000 acres of land, to protect the headwaters and watersheds of these streams and springs and to maintain the flow.

(10) In a location where there is perfect drainage and dumping facilities.

(11) In a location where there exists throughout the entire year unexcelled climatic and sanitary conditions, where there is a climate that is not surpassed by any in the world, with an elevation of sufficient height, namely, about 1,650 feet, as a result of which malaria and other like fevers, mosquitoes, etc., are absolutely unknown; where the bracing, stimulating atmosphere and the uniformly cool nights enable the laborers to perform their work under the most satisfactory conditions.

(15) A situation which offers to the Government an absolutely free site for all of its requirements.

The immense and practically incalculable advantages to the State of North Carolina in the location of this plant in the Watauga Valley (which valley is midway between the towns of Johnson City and Elizabethton) can not possibly be overestimated. This is the greatest opportunity that has ever been presented to western North Carolina for the development of her wonderful natural resources, which are among the most wonderful and richest in the United States; and, inasmuch as the proposed site is only separated from North Carolina and from the natural resources above referred to by the distance of a few miles and an imaginary line, and where the great bulk of the raw material will be drawn from North Carolina, there is every reason why the entire North Carolina delegation should bring to bear with the said Armor Plant Board all of the influence and argument possible in the way of convincing said board that no locality in the United States exists where it would be to greater advantage to the entire country to locate the plant than in the Watauga Valley.

and argument possible in the way of convincing said board that no locality in the United States exists where it would be to greater advantage to the entire country to locate the plant than in the Watauga Valley.

We believe it to be the patriotic duty of every North Carolinian to support that site which is actually the very best site in all the country for this plant, by reason of the rare and wonderful combination of resources which exist there.

The construction of a great plant of this character is a great national institution, and by right ought to be located in the very best place, based upon the article or articles to be manufactured and the raw materials from which they are to be manufactured, with considerations for the safety of the plant and the procurement of raw materials taken into account. It would be most unwise to locate such a plant—such a great national institution—in a locality that was dependent upon its supply of raw materials to be imported from a section which could be easily attacked and captured in case of war; it would be extremely unwise not to locate such a plant in a place that was a natural fortress and which could be so easily and inexpensively defended; it would be unwise to locate such a great institution as this at a point to which all or the greater part of the raw material would have to be freighted; and it seems to us that the only wise, economical, and sensible plan is to select some locality which is naturally fortified by our great mountains and which is situated in the very heart of the raw materials going into the manufacture of the article and there locate the plant: Therefore be it

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LEWIS. I tender a resolution and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The resolution (S. Res. 332) was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved. That it is the sense of the United States Senate that the address of the President of the United States, delivered to the Senate on the 22d of January, 1917, does not propose the abolishment or limitation of the Monroe doctrine of America in its effect or application to any part of the Western Hemisphere, nor does it propose to send the Army or Navy of the United States or any military or naval power of the United States to any foreign territory, except when necessary to preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the just rights of America or an American where the same are assalled.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit a resolution on the same subject as that of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]—the address by the President of the United States. I ask that the resolution may be read, printed, and go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 333), as follows: Resolved. That while the Senate joins with the President in the earnest hope for a speedy termination of the war now devastating the greater portion of the earth, that such war may be brought to an end without crushing any of the great peoples engaged therein, and that a world compact for the preservation of peace and the diminution of armaments so conditioned that this country can with honor and national safety subscribe to its terms and join in its enforcement may be entered into by all the great nations of the earth, as suggested in the address of the President before the Senate on January 22, 1917, the Senate nevertheless regrets that it is unable to agree with the President, either on the major propositions that the peace must be a peace without victory or the many other matters which the President suggests as conditions precedent to the entrance of this country into such a compact; but no matter how this war may end, this country into such a compact; but no matter how this war may end, this country into such a compact; but no matter how this war may end, this country into such a compact; but no progress, should stand ready at all times, irrespective of the terms of peace which the necessity of any belligerent may compel it to accept, to exercise its influence and to act jointly with other world powers to strengthen the bonds of international comity and good will and to lend its moral and physical support to the end that no such war may ever again blacken the earth.

Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. President, I wish to give notice at this

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice at this time that either on Thursday or Friday next, at the conclusion of the proper morning business, I shall ask permission to submit some remarks concerning the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule. Are there further peace or other resolutions?

PORTRAIT OF JOSEPH HENRY.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 334), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Smithsonian Institution the portrait of Joseph Henry, the first Secretary of that Institution, now hanging in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 6 o'clock p. m. the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m. to-day, and at that time the unfinished business of the Senate shall be temporarily laid aside and the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, and that not later than 11 o'clock p. m. the Senate will adjourn, but before adjournment the unfinished business shall be again laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?
Mr. JONES. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] is not here, and he seems to be interested in this matter more than anyone else. Has the Senator conferred with him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think the Senator from North Dakota will object. At the same time I can not say with absolute certainty that he will not object. This request does not require a vote.

Mr. JONES. I know. I have no objection myself, but I think probably in the absence of the Senator from North Dakota, who is very much interested in the matter, the Senator should withhold his request for the present. He will be here very soon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

THE PEACE PROBLEM.

Mr. LODGE. I present an article on the peace problem, by John Bassett Moore. It is a short one. Of course, he is the best authority on international law in the country or anywhere. I ask that this article be printed as a Senate document and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing. I hope the committee will report promptly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PEACE TREATY WITH NORWAY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, yesterday I put in the RECORD a communication from the League to Enforce Peace. In this connection I think it is important that the public should know the tenor of the existing so-called peace treaties. I therefore send to the desk and ask that there may be printed in the RECORD the peace treaty with Norway, which is a type of the 30 peace treaties we made in 1914,

There being no objection, the treaty was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate: To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, with a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a treaty between the United States and Norway looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace, signed at Washington on June 24, 1914.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Washington, July 24, 1914.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, to the end that should his judgment approve thereof it be transmitted to the Senate with a view to receiving the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, a treaty between the United States and Norway looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace, signed at Washington on June 24, 1914.

Respectfully submitted.

DEPLATMENT OF STATE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 23, 1914.

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Norway, being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States; William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States; and
His Majesty the King of Norway, H. H. Bryn, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Norway to the United States;
Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that all disputes between them of every nature whatsoever shall, when diplomatic methods of adjustment have falled, be referred for investigation and report to a permanent international commission; provided, however, that treaties in force between the two parties do not prescribe settlement by arbitration of such dispute.

The commission shall be constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding article.

The high contracting parties agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

ARTICLE II.

The international commission shall be composed of five members to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member, who shall be the chairman of the commission, shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country nor a resident in either of them. If an agreement is not reached as to this appointment, the fifth member shall be chosen according to the rules laid down in article 87 of the convention signed at The Hague on October 18, 1907, for the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

The expenses of the commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportion.

The international commission shall be appointed within four months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty; vacancies to be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

Unless otherwise agreed between the parties, the procedure of the international commission shall be regulated by the prescriptions contained in Chapter III of the convention mentioned above.

ARTICLE III.

ARTICLE III.

In case the high contracting parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, and the dispute is not to be settled by arbitration, the parties shall at once refer it to the international commission for investigation and report.

The international commission may, however, spontaneously offer its servicles to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The high contracting parties agree to furnish the permanent international commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the international commission shall be completed as soon as possible and at the latest within one year after the date on which the commission shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the high contracting parties shall extend or limit the by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government and the third retained by the commission for its files.

ARTICLE IV.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting parties agree that, upon the receipt of the report of the international commission, they will immediately endeavor to adjust the dispute directly between them upon the basis of the commission's findings. They reserve, however, the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the commission shall have been submitted.

ARTICLE V.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Majesty the King of Norway.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

The treaty shall take effect immediately after the exchange of ratifications and shall continue in force for a period of five years; and it shall thereafter remain in force until 12 months after one of the high contracting parties have given notice to the other of an intention to terminate it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have affixed thereunto their seals.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I present a letter from the secretary of the League to Enforce Peace relative to the propaganda which has been started by that organization. It contains a blank form of a letter to be sent to the Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts. There are 10,000 members of the league in Massachusetts, and therefore perhaps my colleague and myself will receive 10,000 of these letters. Manifestly it would be impossible to answer them individually. I therefore ask that the letter and form which is sent Members on which to make reply be incorporated in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE,
Boston, January 24, 1917.
To the Members of the Massachusetts Branch of the League to Enforce Peace:

Since the annual meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the league, many of our members have been asking, "What can I do to help realize the league's program?"

As the result of the great mass meetings in Springfield and Pittsfield, the Massachusetts branch of the league now has more than 10,000 members. The time has come to use the immense power of public opinion represented by our membership. It is important that the Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts should receive from their constituents within the next few days many thousands of letters asking them to support the proposals of the league in every appropriate way. Your help is needed in the following ways:

1. Sign and mail the inclosed three letters to your Senators and Representative immediately.

2. Write a short personal letter in addition to the inclosed form letter, urging your Senators and Representative to support the league's proposals.

3. Ask your friends who are interested in this great constructive movement for the future peace of the world, to write to their Senators and Representative.

movement for the future peace of the world, to write to their Senators and Representative.

4. Ask organizations with which you are associated to send resolutions and letters to Washington indorsing the league's program.

Before February 1, all the Massachusetts Senators and Representatives will be asked by the congressional and legislative committee to state their attitude toward the league's proposals. It is important that before they reply to this question they should know that thousands of their constituents are in favor of the league's program.

Please sign and mail the inclosed letters immediately.

Cordially, yours,

George W. Nasmyth. Secretary.

GEORGE W. NASMYTH, Secretary.

Hon. John W. Weeks, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents and as one of the 10,000 members of the Massachusetts Branch of the League to Enforce Peace, I respectfully request you to support and urge, in every appropriate way, the adoption of the league's proposals by the United States as soon as the opportunity arises in the Senate.

Very truly, yours,

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20453. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have endeavored to find the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], but have not yet been able to do so, although that Senator has been informed that a motion of the kind which I am now about to submit would be made.

I ask unanimous consent that not later than 6 o'clock p. m. the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m. to-day; that at that time the unfinished business of the Senate shall be temporarily laid aside; that the Senate shall then proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes; that not later than 11 o'clock p. m. the Senate will adjourn; and that before adjournment the unfinished business shall again be laid before the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of this

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, Mr. President, I move that the bill to which I refer be made the unfinished business for 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that, under parliamentary law, there is no such motion, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order must be sustained. The unfinished business depends upon the facts and not upon motions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not know that my motion was put exactly in the language which I desired it. I move that the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado what he will gain by that? If the bill to which he refers, is made the special order at 8 o'clock to-night, the Senate will convene, perhaps, a little before that time or at that time, and as soon as the Senate convenes the unfinished business must and as soon as the Senate convenes the unfinished business must be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], in charge of the unfinished business, has told me that he will immediately ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if there should be one objection it could not be so laid aside.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the Senator from Montana then will have the right, or I will have the right, to move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; that requires unanimous consent. Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. If the motion should be made to lay aside the unfinished business and should prevail, that motion would displace the unfinished business

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not if the unfinished business were temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think there is any such thing as moving to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily. a motion should be agreed to, I think that would displace the unfinished business.

Furthermore, I want to ask the Senator-I was called out of the Chamber for a few moments-was objection made to his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Now, I understand the Senator from Colorado has made the motion, which I heard as I entered the Chamber. If that motion should prevail, and at 8 o'clock the unfinished business should be laid aside temporarily, even by unanimous consent, then if at 11 o'clock to-night the unfinished business were not again laid before the Senate, it would be displaced and the Porto Rican bill, as I understand, would become the unfinished business

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will agree that the unfinished business shall be laid before the Senate. There is no disposition on my part to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. MYERS. I know there is no such disposition on the part of the Senator from Colorado, but there might be objection from some other Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, let us see how this matter stands. We wasted three-quarters of an hour yesterday on this subject. Let us see if we can not save the waste of time now. The Chair can not change the rules of the Senate, and is not responsible for them. There is unfinished business before the Senate undisposed of. Unless by unanimous consent the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside—and it can not be so laid aside by a motion—and the consideration of the Porto Rican bill is proceeded with, the unfinished business will go to the calendar. If the Porto Rican bill is made the special order for 8 o'clock this evening, without a unanimous-consent agreement to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, the Chair will be required to lay down the unfinished business at 8 o'clock, as it will be the matter before the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, as I made the objection to unanimous consent, I withdraw it. I did not understand the proposition of the Senator from Colorado, and I now withdraw my objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then I renew the request.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado if he knows whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] is agreeable to his request?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I told the Senator from North Dakota that I intended to try to get a session to-night, and I have sent for

Mr. GRONNA entered the Chamber. Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Dakota has just entered the Chamber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up the bill at any time, but I do not agree to fixing a time to vote upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My request does not provide that there shall be a vote.

Mr. SMOOT. But it does not provide that there shall not be a

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but if the Senator from North Dakota or any other Senator desires to discuss the bill further, my request does not provide that there shall be a vote to-night, and consequently it gives the Senator all the opportunity that he may desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall object to making the bill referred to the special order for the following reasons: For some time I have been conferring with Senators with a view to having a call of the calendar. Among the bills on the calendar is the bill relating to the juvenile court in the District of Columbia, and it is of quite as much interest to the people of the District and the people of the United States as is the Porto Rican bill to some islanders of the sea. I am not without interest in them, but I am not going to lose sight of the duty that we owe to the people of the District here to pass some of the legislation that more seriously affects them. If we do not take up matters of this kind relating to the District and obstruct the water-power bill. I am perfectly willing to say other matters that are on the calendar about which there can not be any serious dispute, the last days of the session will be here, and we will not be able to get any action in the other House. I do not see how the Senator can expect to make any time by displacing that which is the unfinished business and taking up something else. Jumping from one piece of legisla-tion to another is not, in my judgment, the way to expedite

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say that it is not proposed to have a night session except for the purpose of considering the Porto Rican bill; and for that reason his objection simply deprives the Senate of the opportunity of considering that measure.

Mr. POMERENE. No; let us have a night session for the purpose of taking up the calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator will not insist upon his objection. If he does, I move that the Senate make the Porto Rican bill the special order for to-night at 8 o'clock

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has objected. Now the Senator from Colorado moves that the Porto Rican bill be made the special order for 8 o'clock this evening. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has not closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the Senator can not make that motion until the morning business is closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Where is the rule which so provides?
Mr. SMOOT. The rule is that before the conclusion of the morning business no motion to take up a bill shall be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is not moving to take up the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. He is moving to make the bill a special order, to be taken up at a particular time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to make the bill the special order at 8 o'clock requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate, and is in order. It does not come under the rule referred to by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I had no objection whatever to the request of the Senator from Colorado for unanimous consent. I was quite in accord with it; but I shall have to oppose and vote against his motion because I believe his motion, if agreed to, will seriously imperil the place now occupied before the Senate by the unfinished business. In the way the Senator had his request for unanimous consent worded, there was no danger to the unfinished business, but under his motion I think there is grave danger to the unfinished business, and I shall have to vote against his motion on that account.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will

Mr. JONES. As I understand, if this motion should be carried, one objection to-night to laying aside the unfinished business would annul whatever action we take?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, then, in order to reach this bill to-night, it will be necessary to secure unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business, in which event the unfinished business would come up automatically before the Senate to-morrow, would it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair took about three-quarters of an hour yesterday to make that statement, and has made it twice to-day—that the only way to get rid of the unfinished business is by unanimous consent to temporarily lay it aside.

Mr. HUGHES. In which event the unfinished business would come up automatically before the Senate to-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Porto Rican bill be made the special order at 8 o'clock to-night, and the Senate convenes at 8 o'clock, and there is not unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business, the unfinished business will be before the Senate at 8 o'clock, regardless of the special order.

Mr. HUGHES. That is not the point of my inquiry at all, although, of course, I am delighted to get that information; but if unanimous consent is given to-night to temperarily lay the unfinished business aside, then to-morrow automatically the un-finished business comes before the Senate at the end of the morning hour. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not deciding that That will depend upon what takes place to-night. question now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from New Jersey that there is no intention upon my part to now that, if it should happen to be displaced, I will move that the unfinished business be taken up.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I know that the Senator from Colorado has no disposition to obstruct the unfinished business. That is not what I am afraid of; but I am afraid of the working of our

Mr. SHAFROTH. But if the unfinished business should be displaced at any time, a motion to take it up for consideration will restore it.

Mr. MYERS. But such a motion might not carry

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes, I think it would; but if it should not carry, and the unfinished business should be displaced, it would be because Senators do not want to consider that bill. I do not think, however, that there is any risk or any chance as to that. In fact, the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] came to me and stated that he would be perfectly willing, at the conclusion of the afternoon session to-day, to move to lay aside the unfinished business in order that the Porto Rican bill might be considered to-night, and that he had no objection whatever to its consideration at the night session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is not a debatable question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Question! Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the y

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are called for. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on making the Porto Rican bill the special order for 8 o'clock to-night. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose]. Transferring that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Lee], I vote "yea."

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] the yeas are 50, the nays are 3, which is two-thirds and more. H. R. 9533, the Porto Rican civil government bill, is made the special order for 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently said: Mr. President, I move that at 5.30 this afternoon the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business? [A pause.] The morning business is closed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The Secretary. The point last reached in the bill is at the foot of page 53, where the amendments of the committee was passed over. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That after the lands have twice been offered for sale at public auction the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall cause to be sold to the highest bidder, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, the surface of any lands remaining unsold and of any surface lands forfeited by reason of nonpayment of any part of the purchase price.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this item in the bill was passed over at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be further passed over.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator asks that it go over further, and I join in that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 17, before the word "Tribes," to strike out "and Chickasaw" and insert "Chickasaw, and Creek," so as to make the clause read:

Saw, and Creek. So as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five civilized Tribes, we hout specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries at the rate heretofore paid, and attorneys for the Choctaw, Chiekasaw, and Creek Tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 57, to insert:

That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any funds of the Chickasaw Nation not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, for extra expense incurred for performance of his duty as chief executive of the Chickasaw Nation and principal chief of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians during the period covered between the years 1907 and 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 9, to insert:

Hereafter no allotments shall be made to members of the Creek Nation without specific authority of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 20, to strike

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native Indian pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,200; for general repairs and improvements, $30,000; in all $132,200.

And to insert:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native Indian pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,200; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; for new buildings, including dairy barn, printing office, employees quarters and cottages, and addition to hospital, $40,000; in all, $162,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 15, to insert:

For the construction of the Modoc Point extension project, to irrigate approximately 2,135 acres upon the Klamath Indian Reservation, in accordance with the plans submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, $29,000, reimbursable, as provided for the Modoc Point project in the act of March 3, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 23, to insert:

For the purchase of a tract or tracts of land on the Columbia River, for the purpose of providing fishing grounds for the Warm Springs and other middle Oregon tribes, not to exceed $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make allotments to any living Indians on the Umatilla Reservation, Oreg., of not exceeding 80 acres to each person entitled to rights thereon but who have not heretofore been allotted, so long as any of the lands within said reservation remain available for the purpose, and to issue trust patents for the selections so made in accordance with the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), as amended; such allotments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," on page 60, after line 3, to strike out:

Sec. 20. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $62,955; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for new barn, $3,000; in all, $73,955.

And to insert:

Sec. 21. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $62,955; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for girls' industrial building, $10,000; for new barn, $3,000; in all, $83,955.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the Senate amendment provides an additional appropriation of $10,000 for a girls' industrial building. Can the Senator having the bill in charge apprise the Senate as to what immediate necessity there is for this building?

Adverting to page 264 of the House hear-Mr. ASHURST.

ings, I quote from the assistant commissioner as follows:

There is needed $10,000 for a girls' industrial building, large enough to properly house the domestic-science department and also for quarters for the general sewing room. The present quarters are entirely too small, only two rooms being now available in addition to a poorly lighted basement room.

The statement before the Senate committee was to the effect that this was a necessary expenditure for a girls' industrial building large enough so that they would be equipped with facilities for learning domestic science.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 19, after "$4,000," to strike out "in all, $53,750," and insert "for two new busses, $900; in all, $54,650," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $43,750; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for new boiler and boiler stack and installation thereof, $4,000; for two new busses, $900; in all, $54,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 24, after the word "remodeling," to strike out "building" and insert "buildings," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 275 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $47,925; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for remodeling buildings, $9,000; for construction and repair of road through school farm, $4,000; for irrigation, drainage, and improving school farm, $3,000; in all, $68,925 $68,925.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 2, to insert:

For acquiring, constructing, or enlargement and equipment of school buildings on the following reservations: Crow Creek, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Standing Rock, Yankton, Sisseton, Lower Brule, and Cheyenne River, $300,000: Provided, That after the school buildings herein provided for are established and equipped no money shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States for the education of Indian children in sectarian schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 10, to strike out:

For subsistence and civilization of the Yankton Sioux, South Dakota, including pay of employees, $14,000.

For subsistence and civilization of the Yankton Sloux, South Dakota, including pay of employees, $14,000; for the erection of a barn at Ravinia, S. Dak., for sheltering Indian teams, $2,000, of which sum not to exceed $300 shall be expended for a suitable site; in all, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 23, after "$60,000," to insert "to repair and improve the road leading from the said asylum for insane Indians to the city of Canton, S. Dak., $7,500; in all, $67,500," so as to make the clause read:

For the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting insane Indians to and from said asylum, $60,000; to repair and improve the road leading from the said asylum for insane Indians to the city of Canton, S. Dak., $7,500; in all, $67,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 63, to insert:

For compensation of Fast Walker, D. K. How, and Not Afraid of Bear, all of the Crow Creek Reservation, S. Dak., for services rendered while acting as scouts under Gen. Sully and Lieut. Col. John Pattee in the year 1863, the sum of $150 each; in all, $450.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator explain why this claim should be put upon the appropriation bill. I see that it is stated that the service was rendered in 1863.

Mr. ASHURST. In response to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah I would respectfully call his attention to page 25 of the report of the committee. While it is true that this is a claim, it is the only claim on the bill that is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. All the other claims, if I construe them correctly—and I think I do—are to be paid out of various Indian funds at the request of the Indians. Secretary of the Interior sent a somewhat lengthy but complete explanation of this item, and I ask the Secretary to read at this time the report of the Secretary of the Interior on this particular item.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether this is the first ime that this claim has been presented to Congress?

Mr. ASHURST. This is the first time it has been presented since I have been a member of the Indian Affairs Committee. It was presented by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson], who is very familiar with it, and who vouched for its accuracy; and it is also agreed to by the Secretary of the Interior. I should like to have the letter of the Secretary read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, and was interrupted by Mr. ASHURST. The letter is very lengthy and I ask that the remainder of it be included in the RECORD without reading. I call specific attention to a paragraph on page 27 in this same letter, as follows:

From the facts presented it appears to me that for their services as scouts during the year 1863, covering the time above estimated, these Indians are entitled to compensation from the Government, and I would recommend that Fast Walker, Don't Know How, and Not Afraid of Bear be each allowed $150.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the position of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ASHURST. I have read next to the last paragraph of the Secretary's letter.

The letter entire is as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. I have read next to the last paragraph of the Secretary's letter.

The letter entire is as follows:

Department of the Interior, Washington, December 11, 1916.

My Dear Senator: In further reply to your letter dated April 26 relative to 8. 5648, authorizing an investigation of the claims of Fast Walker and other members of the Yankton Sloux Tribe and the Two Kettle Band of the Cheyenne River Reservation, S. Dak., for services performed as scouts in 1863, you are advised that this matter has been taken up with the superintendents of the different Sloux Indian reservations for the securing of data on this subject.

Indian reservations for the securing of data on this subject.

Indian reservations for the securing of data on this subject.

On taking this matter up with the Superintendents of the different Sloux Indian reservations for the securing definite information relative to the Indians involved and the length of time which these Indians have allowed to elapse before putting in their claim for money due them for their services as scouts during the year 1863.

On taking this matter up with the War Department the Assistant Secretary of War reported that their records showed no Indian scouts enlisted in the Regular Army during the year 1863. A list, however, was inclosed with his communication giving the names of the Indians employed in the Quartermaster's Department with the Army operating 1863 to 1866, showing that these Indians received pay for their services. The name of Fast Walker, the Indian mentioned in S. 5648, is not included in the list above mentioned, but the other name under which he sometimes went, namely, Rattling Stone Walker, might possibly be the one mentioned in the list as being employed from September 15 to October 10 as a scout, for which he was paid $3 per day.

In his testimony, copy of which is herewith the was paid $3 per day.

In his testimony, copy of which is herewith the was paid $3 per day.

In his testimony, copy of which is herewith the have publicated the security ernment at the time stated in the bill or under one of the officers named.

The supervisor in charge of the Rosebud Reservation advised that he sent a copy of the bill in question with a circular letter to all the district farmers on his reservation and to the members of the Rosebud tribal council, calling on all persons knowing any of the Indians mentioned in the bill to report same to his office. No names were submitted and no Indians made claim for services such as would bring them within the claim mentioned in said bill. He is of the opinion that there are no Indians on the Rosebud Reservation who would come within the scope of the bill. This is a very large reservation, involving an area of 1.715.231 acres and having under its supervision approximately 5,500 Indians. In view of the large territory involved and the number of Indians, the above plan had to be followed by the supervisor in trying to secure the information desired.

The superintendent of the remaining Sloux Agency of the five above mentioned, namely, Crow Creek, made an exhaustive investigation of the matter, due to the fact that Fast Walker, the Indian mentioned in 8. 5648, lived on his reservation. The superintendent reports that, so far as he has been able to determine, out of the 26 Indians who served as scouts during the fall of 1862 and possibly later from the Lower Yanktonai Sioux Tribe, only 3 are living, namely, Fast Walker, D. K. How (Don't Know How), both above mentioned, and Not Afraid of Bear.

On going over the testimony secured by the superintendent of the

Served as scotts uting the state of the Lower Yanktonat Sloux Tribe, only 3 are living, namely, Fast Walker, D. K. How (Don't Know How), both above mentioned, and Not Afraid of Bear.

On going over the testimony secured by the superintendent of the Crow Creek Reservation from the three Indians named above, it appears that these men were very young when the Sioux campaign under Gen. Sully took place, and that they enlisted in the fall of 1862 and served until some time the following summer of 1863. These Indians claim that they were members of a band of scouts who rescued

Mrs. Duly, her six children, and a Mrs. Wright, who had been captured by hostile Santees in the fall of 1862. Copy of their testimony is inclosed. Inspector James McLaughlin, who was in the vicinity of Crow Creek Agency in the spring of 1863, states that these Indians did not participate in the rescue in question and that all the members of said rescue party are dead. There is inclosed herewith an extract made from notes in one of the inspector's memorandum books relative to Chief Madbear's statement regarding the rescue in question and the participants.

made from hotes in one of the inspector's memoranium books frintive to Chief Madbear's statement regarding the rescue in question and the participants.

During the next spring the above-mentioned three Indians claimed to have escorted Gen. Sully up to what is now Bismarck, N. Dak., on his way to Montana. They also claim to have killed some hostile Santee Indians in connection with their scout duty.

From the report of the superintendent of the Crow Creek School and the facts brought out in the direct examination of the Indians above mentioned, it would appear that these Indians probably did act as scouts for a time in the Army, approximately four months, during the spring and summer of 1863.

From the facts presented, it appears to me that for their services as scouts during the year 1863, covering the time above estimated, these Indians are entitled to compensation from the Government, and I would recommend that Fast Walker, Don't Know How, and Not Afraid of Bear be each allowed $150.

There are inclosed herewith copies of correspondence between the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and certain of the superintendents, together with copies of communication from the War Department, for your information.

Cordially, yours,

Franklin K. Lane,

Secretary.

Secretary.

Hon. Henry F. Ashurst, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do know this: That there are thousands and thousands of claims made against the Government of the United States for services rendered in 1863, 1864, and 1865, not particularly of Indians but of white people all over the United States. All those claims are sent to the Court of Claims, and that is the proper place for them to go. The Court of Claims would gather whatever evidence there is in the case; but to put a private claim upon an appropriation bill is not the proper course to pursue, in my opinion.

If the Senator from South Dakota knows anything personally about this matter, I should like to have him state it to the Senate, but there is no more necessity and there is no more justice in putting this private claim upon this appropriation bill than there is in taking up on an appropriation bill all the old post-office claims in the South, and all the other claims for the destruction of property during the Civil War and claims for services given to the Government during that period of our history.

Unless there is some good reason why I should not do so I desire to make a point of order against the amendment. should like to hear what the Senator from South Dakota has to say before I make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, this is a matter that I am not personally familiar with. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which has been read in part, explains the matter more fully than I could do it.

The fact remains, however, that on the Crow Creek Reservation it is universally conceded that these men performed the duties for which they ask this small compensation for their services during that time. In all probability the reason why their names did not appear on the Army roll was because they were acting as special scouts, or something of that kind, during the time of the war.

The sum involved is so small and insignificant that while I realize the position the Senator from Utah takes in regard to such an appropriation on an appropriation bill I hope he will not raise a point of order on this small item.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The trouble is, if the Senator will allow me, if we start with this small item what will be on us the next time? This will be cited as a precedent for introducing into the Indian appropriation bill the adjustment of claims of this kind and it will be that much harder to stop it the next time. If we could get through with it by making this appropriation of $450, and would not start a precedent for more evil and more trouble, I do not know that I would especially object. I hope the Senator will consent to let it go over, and I hope the chairman of the committee will consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will consent to let the matter be passed over to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if these Indians were in the service of the Government and in the Regular Army?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I understand as scouts.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it seems to me there is not only the ques-Mr. SMOOT. Then it seems to me there is not only the question of paying a claim of $150, but if we pay this claim we acknowledge that they were in the Army. I can not see why they could not come and claim a pension as well, the service having been acknowledged by the payment of $150. The amendment does not state how long they served; there is no record here from the department to show that they ever did serve, yet by this small amendment we acknowledge that they did this service in 1863, and I am not quite sure, I will say to the Senator, but that they could claim service in the Regular Army by this payment, which is virtually an acknowledgment of service, and base a pension claim upon the same. Has the Senator thought of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No; I never have. They were in the service of the Regular Army, as I understand it, as advance scouts. Perhaps the Army Register may not show that they were in the service of the Army. They were, as I recall it, as scouts, and that would exclude the matter with regard to pensions, would it not?

Mr. SMOOT. I think if they were scouts in the Regular Army and did the service white men do they ought to have a pension; but I do not see how we are going to decide that by what little testimony we have here in allowing a claim for each one of them on an appropriation bill. I think it is a very bad precedent, I will say to the Senator I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall go over for the present and be considered later.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Utah make a point of order against this item?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from South Dakota agrees that it shall be passed over.

Mr. MYERS. I do not believe that under Rule XVI a point of order would lie against the item, because this payment has been recommended. It has been moved by the direction of a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator has not read paragraph 4 If he will read it, he will find it provides of that same rule.

that-

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is correct about that. Mr. SMOOT. I will let the amendment be passed over, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think a point of order ought to be made on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia make a point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to passing it over.

Mr. SMOOT. I will make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over. The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 74, line 19, to change the number of the section from "24" to "25."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 10, after the name "Wyoming," to strike out "including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $100,000," and insert "including the Big Wind River and Dry Creek Canals, and including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $150,000," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21, page 75.

Mr. ASHURST. Before we take up the next item, which may be controverted. I ask that we recur to the item relative to the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. The committee proposes to strike out from the House text from line 1 to line 18, on page 72, and to insert the matter printed in italics on pages 72 and 73.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For which I wish to offer a substitute. The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to substitute for the part in italics the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is bereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, in his discretion, the sum of $337,000 of the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin, arising under the provisions of the acts of June 12, 1890 (26 Stat. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Wisconsin explain to us just what that amendment does?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my amendment changes the amendment adopted by the committee in this respect: The amendment adopted by the committee and presented to the Senate limited the benefits to be derived from the Indian funds appropriated here to those Indians who might engage in farming upon the reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is simply a question of the use of Indian funds?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes. It makes no appropriation from the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And perfecting a plan to use such funds in the Senator's State as the Senator thinks best?

have not any objection to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I observed after the amendment had been adopted by the committee that it limited the number of those who could participate in the fund to Indians who were engaged in farming upon the reservation. reliably informed that there are numbers of Indians who engage in other occupations and who are prosecuting them quite successfully. There are a number of merchants, for instance, who would have an equal right to share in this fund who are conducting a mercantile business of considerable proportions; there are other Indians who are members of this tribe who are civil engineers, who are teachers in schools, and many of them desire to take the normal course in the Wisconsin Normal School in order to prepare themselves for teaching. I think they ought to be permitted to share in this fund and to use it for preparing themselves for the vocations which they have elected to pursue. I therefore revised the amendment which the committee had adopted and submitted it to the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs this morning. He made one suggestion, which I have adopted; and as presented to the Senate the amendment has the approval of the Indian Office through the Assistant Indian Commissioner. I will not take the time of the Senate further, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 75, after line 21, to strike out:

Sec. 25. That until the meeting of the Sixty-fifth Congress those members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are Members elect of the Sixty-fifth Congress are authorized to conduct hearings and investigate the conduct of Indian affairs by the Indian Bureau and other branches of the Indian Service at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for expenses incident thereto.

And to insert:

SEC. 26. For the purpose of making inquiry into conditions in the Indian Service, with a view to ascertaining any and all facts relating to the conduct and management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and of recommending such changes in the administration of Indian Affairs as would promote the betterment of the service and the well-being of Indians, there is hereby constituted a commission to be known as the joint commission to investigate Indian affairs, to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. That said commission be, and is hereby, directed, authorized, and empowered to examine into the conduct and management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and all its branches and agencies, their organization and administration. The commission shall have power and authority to examine all books, documents, and papers in the said Bureau of Indian Affairs, its branches or agencies, relating to the administration of the business of said bureau, and shall have and is hereby granted authority to subpœna witnesses, compel their attendance, administer oaths, and to demand any and all books, documents, and papers of whatever nature relating to the affairs of Indians as conducted by said bureau, its branches and agencies. Said commission is hereby authorized to visit any Indian agency, school, institution, or other establishment under the jurisdiction and control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Department of the Interior, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and all other officers connected with the administration of Indian Affairs to aid the said commission and furnish all available information that may be demanded by said commission. The investigation hereby provided for shall be econducted by said commission may deem necessary in the proper prosecution of its work: Provided, That stenographers as employed shal

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I feel that it is my duty to make some explanation of that proposed change. In section 25 of the bill it will be ascertained by adverting to page 75, line 22, that the following language came over from the other branch of Congress to this branch of Congress:

Sec. 25. That until the meeting of the Sixty-fifth Congress those members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are Members elect to the Sixty-fifth Congress, are authorized to conduct hearings and investigate the conduct of Indian affairs by the Indian Bureau and other branches of the Indian Service, at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for expenses incident thereto.

I am not going to attempt to speak for the committee; the individual members of the committee are able to speak for themselves; but I will say that, upon a close reading of the paragraph, it will be ascertained that it is proposed that members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the other House should have the power—and $10,000 are appropriated for the expenditure—of conducting an investigation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington and elsewhere. It will also be observed that there is no provision made for the swearing of witnesses, for the taking of testimony, or for anything of that sort. It seemed to me to be a weak and inconclusive provision. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate took the view that if an investigation were necessary and if the Committee on Indian Affairs were to investigate and to go upon various reservations they should have the power to subpæna witnesses, that they should have the power and should have the authority to reduce to writing the testimony adduced. Hence the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs drafted the language which appears in the Indian appropriation bill which was approved June 30, 1913, creating a joint commission on Indian affairs, to be composed of three Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, the presiding officer of the Speaking for myself, and for myself alone, I do not see any necessity for such an investigation. I do not see any necessity for either the House provision or the committee provision being incorporated into the law. If, however, the Senate wishes to incorporate either provision I shall very cheerfully join with the Senate, because I do not wish to occupy the attitude that there should be no investigation. I have now made my individual position known. I repeat, that I know of no necessity for this proposed investigation, but if there should be an investigation I am sure the Senate of the United States should have some representation upon the investigating committee. I think I have stated the facts that ought to be stated to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what was the impelling force that induced the committee to strike out the House provision and amend it by the Senate provision as contained in section 26?

Mr. ASHURST. As will be discovered, of course, upon a close reading of section 25 as it came to this body, it provided:

That until the meeting of the Sixty-fifth Congress those members the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, of less than five in number, who are Members elect to the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I followed what the Senator said, and that provision is printed in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The House provision gave them the power and authority to make investigations of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, and to go upon the various reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand-

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment, if the Senator please. The reason which induced the Senate committee, in my judgment, to make the amendment was this: If the necessity exists for an investigation-which we do not admit or concede-surely the commission should be composed of Senators as well as Members of the other House, and surely it should have the power to subpena witnesses and reduce the testimony of those witnesses to writing. The reason for the adoption of the Senate amendment to me seems very clear, because under the House provision no authority is granted to reduce the testimony to writing, although possibly that power might be implied from the language of the bill. It is not, however, expressly given, and it is a matter of grave doubt now whether or not, even with the Senate committee language, such a joint commission would have the power to enforce the attendance of a witness, compel him to testify, and subject him to the pains and penalties of perjury if willfully he testified falsely. So the Senate committee en-deavored to strengthen the provision as best it could.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, let me ask the Senator was he in favor of the Senate provision?

Mr. ASHURST. I was.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's statement, as it seemed to me, was not so strong that I would want to move that the Senate committee amendment be disagreed to, although I take it for granted from what the Senator said that he would rather like such a motion to be made; but, nevertheless, if the Senator thinks the Senate committee amendment is far preferable to the House provision, and that if we accept the Senate committee amendment and in conference it should finally be decided to have an investigation, the Senate committee amendment would provide for an investigation that is worth while-if that is the Senator's position, then we ought to keep the section in.

Mr. ASHURST. That is my attitude. Of course, the House of Representatives is the grand inquest of the Nation; it is the inquisitorial body; but the Senate committee did not wish out of hand to refuse to agree to the House provision, and substi-tuted as we thought the best language that we could find, and, I repeat, adopted the language providing for the old joint commission of 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. The first amendment passed over in the bill will be found on page 25, beginning on line 9.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who desire to be present when the reconsideration of the amendments passed over occurs, and it is for that reason that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Chamberlain Chilton Clapp Culberson Ashurst Borah Brady Brandegee Bryan

Curtis Dillingham Fall Fletcher Gallinger

Gronna Harding Hitchcock Hollis

Robinson Robinson Saulsbury Shafroth Sheppard Smith, Ga. Smith, Md. Smoot Sterling Sutherland Thomas Tillman Underwood Vardaman Wadsworth Walsh Watson Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The Secretary. The first amendment passed over will be found on page 25, beginning on line 9. The item reads as fol-

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500.

At this point is the committee amendment, which, on line 12, proposes to strike out the words "in all, $21,700" and to insert "for new school building, $12,000; in all, $33,700."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the other day, when we had this item under consideration, I made a statement which I think was not absolutely accurate. These Indians did, some years ago, receive allotments; but they were located upon lands that are very poor. Only a very small portion of the land can be irrigated, and only a very small portion of the land is fit for agriculture.

I wish to read for the information of the Senator from Utah

[Mr. SMOOT], who opposes this item so strongly—
Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Utah simply wanted to learn the reasons why the new school building should be erected.

Mr. GRONNA. I will put it in this way, then: I shall be glad to give the Senator from Utah the information which he would like to have. I read from the thirty-third annual report of the Indian Rights Association. These men went out on nearly all the western reservations and made a thorough investigation of conditions among all these Indians; and I read from page 20 with reference to the Fort Bidwell school:

read from page 20 with reference to the Fort Bidwell school:

This agency is now in charge of French Gilman, who did such good work for many years on the Pima Reservation, in Arizona. There is no reservation except the 300 acres set apart for agency and school purposes. Mr. Gilman has about 700 Indians under his jurisdiction, and they are scattered throughout Modoc County, which is 75 miles square. There is a boarding school at the agency, with a capacity of 100 pupils, and three day schools scattered over Modoc County, the one at Alturas being built by the Indians themselves.

These Indians were allotted individual tracts of land in 1891 and in 1894, and although 64,000 acres of land were parceled out to them, not more than 8,000 acres are of any value agriculturally, and then only when there is water for irrigation; but as that important element is lacking, the possible arable land is practically useless. Most of the allotments are in the hills, covered with rocks. One could readily believe that the allotting agent merely assigned to the Indians various tracts from a plat while seated in an office, and that he either did not know, or did not care, whether the selections were good or bad. If these Indians are to make any real progress, the land question must be readjusted. Nearly all the able-bodied men are willing and anxious to work, but the employment that is open to them, on the various valley ranches, lasts only three or four months each year. Then it is a struggle for existence for the remainder of the year.

Then the commission goes on and speaks about the living conditions of those Indians, and about their school facilities.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if they found the living conditions to be good?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the living conditions were very bad, and what was true of the living conditions was also true of the facilities for schools. I do not know of a school anywhere in the country where an appropriation is needed any more than it is in this school. These poor Indians, scattered as they are all over that country, are not tramps in the ordinary sense of the word. They are willing to work, but they are poor, and it is the duty of the United States Government to look after them, regardless of whether they have a reservation or not. I know that when the Senator from Utah and other Senators who are in favor of economy-and that is commendable, of course-know the circumstances of both these schools in California they will not oppose this appropria-The committee may have failed in many instances to do its full duty in getting all the information necessary, but let us remember that dealing with Indians is not the same as dealing with the white people of the United States, and let us not forget that much of the bloodshed that has been caused in the western countries was caused merely because of the narrow-mindedness of men who were then holding seats in this body.

Why, sir, I can recall, when I was a mere boy, when the Indian outbreak occurred in southern Minnesota when 300 white people were murdered in the immediate vicinity where I lived; and why? Because the Congress of the United States refused to give to them what it actually owed them under treaty stipulations. More than 300 white people, as I say, were murdered at that time near my home. From time to time we have taken possession of lands which belonged to these people. They were here before we were here. For the Congress of the United States to say that we are unwilling at this time to appropriate small amounts of money for the civilization and education of the Indians is wrong, and it can not be justified by anyone.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator if he really and truly thinks we are civilizing them now, or educating them very

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Oregon-I know how deeply interested he is in the Indian question, and I think I might say that I agree with him in many of the amendments which he has suggested-that the Indians of this country have

The Senator from Oregon has been in the committee as well as I have, and he has heard the plea of those Indians as I have heard it; and I think we all agree that the untutored aborigines, unschooled in the arts and uneducated in letters according to our mode of civilization, is honest, courageous, and we all realize that the Indian is a man who has brains. I think the committee realizes that if their affairs had been left to the Indians in some instances they would have been better off than they are now. That may be true; but this is the condition, Mr. President: We have set aside certain reservations, certain small portions of the land that belonged to them. We have said that the Secretary of the Interior shall have jurisdiction over these unfortunate men. We say by law "You shall do thus and so," and it is not the fault of the Indian Office; it is not the fault of the Secretary of the Interior; it is the fault of Congress. Congress, sir, is responsible for many of the mistakes that have been made, because we place limitations upon these appropriations. We prescribe what shall be done with this money; and it is unfortunate, I say, to criticize the men who are holding these official positions. They, of course, have their limitations.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North

Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he does not think the laws Congress has passed with regard to the government of the Indians emanate largely from the Indian Bureau?

Mr. GRONNA. That may be true, Mr. President; and I do not approve of everything that has been done. The Senator from South Dakota knows that I have objected to many things that have been presented in the committees; but these men have been selected, and until Congress adopts a better system than the one we have now I say this wholesale criticism upon certain men is unwarranted. I think, perhaps—in fact, I know—that we could adopt a system that is better than the one we have adopted; but that is not the fault of the Secretary of the Interior, nor is it the fault of the Indian Bureau. It is the fault of Congress, Congress has a right to appoint commissions to go out and investigate conditions among the Indians. We have on many occasions appointed commissions who have made their reports. Take the report made by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. It is perhaps one of the most valuable reports that has ever been made to this body upon Indian affairs. How many Senators, I ask, have acquainted themselves with that report?

Mr. President, I do not care to delay the Senate to go into this question any further than to say this: Before any Senator objects to an appropriation for the education of the Indians, I hope he will look into this question and have all the information available.

We have treaties pending to-day with the Indians that have not been fulfilled. The Indians let the Government have vast tracts of land. This Government agreed to do certain things for the Indians which have never been done. Take, for instance, the Sioux Indian country: The treaty made on the 29th of April, 1868, has never been kept by us. The Government of the United States solemnly promised that it would furnish We promised to furnish a schoolschools to the Indian children. house for every 30 Indian children, and also furnish them with teachers. Have we done that? This Government has violated every treaty that it has made with the Indians of the United States. I make this statement without any fear of successful contradiction.

There is not in this bill to exceed $8,000,000 taken out of the Treasury of the United States as a gratuity for the civilization of the Indians. The balance of the amount appropriated in this bill—and the bill carries, I think, about $12,000,000 in all—is all reimbursable. It belongs to the Indian funds. These men, about 260,000 of them in all, are our wards, and yet it is said that it is outrageous to take $8,000,000 for what? To comply, in part, with the promises we have made more than a hundred years ago in some instances. Gratuitously, we are not giving them a penny. We are not even giving them what belongs to them; and if we were to carry out the treaties which we have with the Indians of the United States the Indian appropriation bill would be a large one. It would certainly be more than the bill pending before the Senate now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield. Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I am not opposed to the appropriation for school purposes that the Senator has in mind, but I merely wish to say in connection with his statement it is absolutely correct with regard to the schooling of children. We have in South Dakota about 1,500 children-Indian children-of school age who have no place provided for them to go to school. The treaty specifically provided that they should be provided for, and the law specifically made the same provision, yet that is the condition which exists in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is correct; and what is true as to the condition in the Senator's State is true in other States. It is a deplorable condition. No one has criticized the Indian Office any more than I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota please suspend? The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be so laid aside. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have paid some attention to Indian affairs since I became a member of the committee. I have tried to discharge my duties as well as it is possible for me to discharge them. I am convinced that the Government must not refuse to appropriate money for the civilization and the education of the Indian children of the country, and wherever I find an appropriation in an Indian appropriation bill for school purposes, I want to say to this body it will not meet with any objection from me. There are provisions in this bill, I admit, of which I do not approve. I believe more in the appropriation of money for the civilization and education of the Indian children than I believe in improving the property of the Indian, because I believe it is better business to educate him and fit him for self-government than it is to appropriate money for the improvement of his land and then leave him in ignor-

I have objected to the way in which the Indian lands are being leased. I have objected to the existence of the great tribal herds; and only to-day one of the greatest chiefs of any Indian tribe, Chief Plentycoos, testified before our committee practically in effect substantiating what I have been contending, that the tribal herds should be divided up and given over to the Indians themselves, and let them put their own private brands on the cattle, because it is educational for the Indian to handle his own affairs; it will encourage him to thrift; it will have the tendency of making him able to take care of himself.

But, Mr. President, when it comes to appropriating a few dollars for the education of Indian children who are destitute because the white man robbed them of their belongings, you have no right, I say, to question the right of the committee to make appropriations for these institutions of learning.

was sorry to see the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] make the point of order against the little item appropriating $450 for three Indians, a few pairry dollars for men who bared their breasts against people of their own tribe, and yet we refuse to honor them for the services they did to the white man.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.
Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, the Senator is mistaken in relation to my reason for making the point of order against the payment of those three claims.

Mr. GRONNA. It is because the Senator from Utah does not understand the Indian question.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, we need not discuss that at this time

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator does not care to discuss it at

Mr. SMOOT. I say there is no necessity of that. I admit I do not know very much about the Indian question, but I do know that if the Government of the United States owes those Indians anything at all for services rendered in 1863-$150 apiece for three of them—the claim should pass through the regular course of all other claims. There is no question if there is any evidence at all but that they can be paid. I would pay them and think they ought to be paid; and I went so far as to say that if they were scouts of the Regular Army and had served the Government and fell within the law they ought to receive pensions, just the same as any other scouts in the Regu-

It is not because I have anything against the Indians, but it is the idea of picking out a claim here that has been existing, if existing at all, ever since 1863 and putting it on an appropriation bill. I did not think that was the proper course to pursue.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask, does not the Senator think that 54 years' consideration of it by Congress is a fair period for con-

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it has been considered for 54

Mr. LODGE. The claim started 54 years ago.
Mr. SMOOT. But it is just of late that the claim has been brought to the attention of Congress, and there is no evidence here at all from any department; there is no record that there was any service performed. There is nothing to show that the service was rendered, and if we now pay the claim we acknowledge the service, and I think then they ought to have a pension if they did the service.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this matter was very thoroughly considered by the committee, and it had all the information it needed to warrant it in placing this amount in the bill. These men have been refused this small The Senator from Utah realizes as much as I do, and as much as any other Senator here, the dissatisfaction which it makes among the civilized tribes, or among the half-civilized tribes, when a payment which is justly due them, and which these officials say is due them and to which they are entitled, for Congress to put its stamp of disapproval upon it. I say it is

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will introduce a bill for this purpose and have it referred to the Committee on Claims, they will report it out if it is a just claim, and the Senator from Utah will vote for it very readily.

Mr. GRONNA. I am also a member of the Committee on Claims, and I know something about how difficult it is to get a claim through the Claims Committee. The Senator knows that

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will merely say that I drafted a bill which is now before the Committee on Indian Affairs to pay this small amount, and I hope to have a favorable report upon it at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to apologize for having taken so much time of the Senate. I want to say that this item in the bill providing for an appropriation for schools in California is needed and it is for the Senate to decide. If you wish to cripple these institutions of poor, defenseless Indian children who are your wards, vote against them. If not, you will vote for them.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a moment. I wish to say that nothing I can say would add anything to the very able speech of the Senator from North Dakota. He has covered the ground fully. I hope the debate on this item may now close, for the Senator has covered the ground completely. He has defended the committee most generously and set forth the reasons which induced the committee to make this increase.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Arizona and also to the Senator from North Dakota that there was no criti- posals of the message are everywhere under discussion.

cism of the committee on the part of any Senator. The question arose as to whether the necessity was great enough at this time to appropriate money for new buildings. No Senator wants to interfere with the education of Indian children; but it was thought if it were just the mere fact of a new item perhaps it could wait for another year, with the Treasury in the condition it is to-day. Nobody objected. Questions were asked for information, and that has been given. I thank the Senator for what he has said.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope I may be indulged further to say I trust my attitude has not been one of objection in any way; in fact, I welcomed the questions put by the distinguished Senator from Utah. He performed a splendid service in asking the questions. I am not offended. I think we can have a vote on this question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 326, and upon the motion I desire to submit additional observations upon the subject involved.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona. Mr. ASHURST. Of course, I recognize the right of the Senator from Iowa to make this motion, but I should like to have some agreement or some statement as to a reasonable time. should like to ask, provided it does not require a roll call, that at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon the Senate shall resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; and I believe we can finish it if we work from 3.30 to 5.30.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to facilitate in every way possible the consideration and the passage of the Indian appropriation bill; but it will be impossible for me to predict with certainty the time that will be required in the discussion of my motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, let me make this suggestion, Mr. President, that at the conclusion of the discussion, after the disposition of the matter proposed by the Senator from Iowa, the Senate shall recur to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to that whatever. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the Senator from Iowa should prevail, I inquire whether the unfinished business would not be displaced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it would.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the

FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I regret that I feel compelled to bring forward this motion to the disadvantage, possibly, of the Indian appropriation bill. I apologize to the distinguished Senator in charge of that measure for the intrusion. Nevertheless, I can not feel that it is entirely inappropriate to consider the subject I am about to discuss in the midst of the Indian bill. We took this continent from the Indians by conquest, and we established and have maintained a Government to which they have never given their consent. In view of these things, the Indian appropriation bill is not altogether irrelevant when we come to consider the fundamental principles of government so learnedly announced a few days ago.

Mr. President, further reflection has only deepened my conviction that it is our imperative duty to appoint a time for the consideration of the President's message delivered to the Senate in person on the 22d day of January, instant. The general propublic press in this country and in every other is publishing volumes with regard to it. Eminent men throughout the world are every day making it the text of addresses to the people. Foreign powers are taking it for granted that the Government of the United States is not only ready, but anxious, to become a part of a new world sovereignty, a sovereignty which, to say the least, can only be established by the joint act of the President and the Senate. One branch of our treaty-making power has spoken. The President has in the most explicit terms told the Senate, and through it the Governments of all other countries, that it is the deliberate purpose to make these treaties a purpose, modified, I assume, by the implied provision, unless otherwise advised by the Senate or unless changed by public opinion. He has asked us for whatever assistance we can give him. Is it possible that under these circumstances we can refuse this call to the highest duty which has ever fallen upon this department of the Government? Is it possible that when it is proposed that we shall revolutionize our institutions, abandon all our traditions, surrender our sovereignty, transfer to a new nation or league our Army, our Navy, and with them our Treasury, to put at the disposal of a power higher than our own the lives and the fortunes of our men and women, to make the former fight and the latter suffer when commanded by an alien authority, we will still be met with the objection that the time spent in the Senate by a discussion of the proposal would be time wasted? Is it possible that there are Senators who believe that it is more important to pass appropriation bills, to debate water-power rights, to vote on further railway regulation, than to do our part in the formation of a sound, patriotic public opinion upon these fundamental principles of government and civilization? Mark you, I am not at this moment either condemning or approving the course marked out for us by the President. I am still endeavoring to make it clear that there is no other subject so vital as the one brought into the Senate by the Chief Executive when he announced his purpose to immediately initiate the movement so graphically described in his communication.

When my resolution was before the Senate a week ago it was urged that it provided only for discussion and not for action. intentionally so framed it, because I think no Senator ought to attempt a resolution declaring a policy until the whole subject is carefully considered in debate. In presenting the suggestion for discussion only I was following a long line of notable precedents. It has been a well-known procedure from the very beginning of free parliaments, legislatures, and congresses to take up for discussion purely speeches, addresses, and all kinds of communications from the throne or executive, and without any specific proposal for instant action. I need not recite instances of this practice, for the history of all free Governments is full of them. It is highly probable that following debate a resolution may be formulated which would record the action of the Senate as an organized body, but this is not necessary to the legitimacy of the discussion, however valuable it might be in the ultimate outcome.

I was not impressed with the reasons given for the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It could supply nothing that would be helpful in reaching a conclusion upon the wisdom or desirability of setting apart a time for the discussion of the message. If the discussion should result in a proposal for action, I would at once admit the pro-priety of sending any such resolution to the committee. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] that if time be regarded so valuable it will be conserved by the course I have proposed, for in any event the subject will be debated by every Senator who feels that it is his duty to express his opinions. But necessarily the debate which is thrust upon the Senate day after day simply because our rules permit a Senator to address himself to any topic, no matter what measure may be under consideration, will not accomplish the full purpose I If I have not misunderstood our duty, it can only be fulfilled by turning our attention to this subject for a reasonable time, to the exclusion of all other subjects. ought to deal with it in a solemn, continuous way. It ought not to creep in like a trespasser upon forbidden ground. It ought to be given a place in our deliberations commensurate with its transcendent importance.

If I had any reason to believe that my Democratic associates would permit a consideration of the resolution upon its merits and appoint a time for serious thought and expression upon the message, I would say no more. But, inasmuch as I have been led to believe that my resolution if taken up will be at once buried in the dust-covered archives of the Foreign Relations Committee, I intend to address myself, briefly I hope, to mind to analyze the proposal and ascertain just what the President intends to do if foreign nations are willing to do it with him. I want to contribute what little I can to a full under-standing of the position in which we would finally discover ourselves if the new sovereign of the earth which he is seeking to install were in fact in power.

The message overflows with just and beautiful sentiments so eternally right that they instantly command the approval of all lovers of humanity. Millions of our men and women hearing or reading these noble sentiments assume without further inquiry that what the President is about to do will bring justice to the world, abolish war, and maintain a permanent peace founded upon the rights of man, as we understand his rights in this country. It is very easy to lift up a banner inscribed with the watchword of every loving, loyal, and patriotic heart, and, without doing or saying more, the first instinct of every humanitarian is to proclaim his fealty to it. It is a sad spectacle, however, to see a flag raised in devotion to the heaven of peace leading a march straight to the hell of war. What the people of this country ought to be asking themselves is whether the course proposed by the President will establish nations which exist through the consent of their citizens and will secure permanent peace among them; and, above all, whether it will promote liberty, happiness, progress, and peace among the people of the United States.

It is because I have a deep desire to be of some help to my fellow countrymen in answering these inquiries that I devote myself to the task of separating, in the President's message, the universally accepted generalities, which mean nothing but pleasure to the ear, from the startling announcements with respect to the formation of a new and supreme government which is to command our resources in both blood and treasure.

I begin by affirming as my belief that if this country shall do what the President proposes we will be involved either in almost continuous war waged all over the world or we will be engaged in almost constant rebellion against the authority which he proposes to set up over us. No man shall accuse me of questioning the sincerity of the President in his attachment to the doctrine he advocates, nor must it be insisted that I doubt the honesty of his conviction that the new world power will fairly redivide the earth among nations and will be able to preserve peace among them. If I did not think that he is honest in this delusion, I would not be interested in the decision. If he stood alone as a proponent of a new theory in human affairs, it might not be necessary to make it the subject of grave consideration. But the truth is that the proposal has been before the world for centuries, has been at one time or another the dream of sages and philosophers, and in our own country was being urged by men of the highest prominence long before it attracted the attention of the Chief Executive. These facts make the action about to be taken by the President serious and formidable, and the suggestion calls upon those of us who believe that the plan can end in nothing but disaster to utter a note of warning. The movement to organize a world court and to broaden to its extreme limit the field of arbitration has always had my cordial approval, and I have never ceased to hope that in the progress of time war would become infrequent if not impossible; and it is only when it is attempted to confer upon such a tribunal or league or sovereignty, it matters not how it is described, the power to use armies and navies to enforce its decrees or to make contracts binding us to fight in a quarrel not our own that my opposition begins,

This is not to be an argument fortified by history and experience or an inquiry into human nature, which, after all, under-lies every sound conclusion, although the material for such a discussion is so abundant that it is difficult to withstand the temptation to reach out and take it. Upon this occasion I have assigned to myself the less interesting task of stating, as clearly as may be, the exact things which the President is about to do if other nations will join him. I want the people to apprehend fully the precise effect of the course he has declared and the terms in which he must embody the doctrine in treaties which will carry it into execution.

The message opens with a reference to the note of December 18, in which the belligerent countries were asked to state the terms upon which peace might be established. I am not deeply versed in the finer ways of diplomacy, and it concerns me very little whether preliminary suggestions should have been made before the note was dispatched or not. I am quite willing to see some of the obsolete forms of diplomatic intercourse disappear, and I think the President was wholly right in propounding the question to the warring powers. As a neutral the United States is vitally interested in the struggle-first, for humanity's a phase which might be more pertinent if the President's announcement were itself before us for discussion. I have it in industrial life; and third, because it is full of danger to our own peace. We have therefore a perfect title for every legitimate effort that will tend to restore the tranquillity of nations. The President was generally applauded, and I think he deserved the applause, for this attempt to bring on a discussion concerning the terms of peace.

The President then says:

It is inconceivable that the people of the United States should play no part in that great enterprise

Referring to peace

To take part in such a service will be the opportunity for which they have sought to prepare themselves by the very principles and purposes of their polity and the approved practices of their Government ever since the days when they set up a new nation in the high and honorable hope that it might in all that it was and did show mankind the way to liberty. They can not in honor withhold the service to which they are now about to be challenged. They do not wish to withhold it. But they owe it to themselves and to the other nations of the world to state the conditions under which they will feel free to render it.

Standing alone, as a general expression of high duty, I sincerely concur in every word of the paragraph I have quoted. While we ought to have nothing to do with the terms of peace in so far as they relate to either territory or reparation, we ought to have a seat at the council table when the subject of the prevention of future wars is under consideration. Our view ought to be heard when the powers of the earth are passing upon the freedom of business intercourse. Our influence ought to be felt when the future armament of nations is being determined. None of these things touch that isolation of our sovereignty so wisely taught by Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe. It has been and still is my hope that the end of the war in Europe will signalize a mighty advance toward the peaceful settlement of international controversies. It is impossible for me to doubt that the law of the sea will be rewritten, and that the mad competition in armies and navies will be restrained.

No one can question the further suggestion that the peace of the world would be greatly promoted if in the settlement of the war absolute justice were done and nations could be set up or torn down, enlarged or reduced, in accordance with-and I quote the President-

Elements that engage the confidence and satisfy the principles of the American Governments, elements consistent with their political faith and the practical convictions which the peoples of America have once for all embraced and undertaken to defend.

Or-and I quote him again-

Or—and I quote him again—

I speak of this not because of any desire to exalt an abstract political principle which has always been held very dear by those who have sought to build up liberty in America, but for the same reason that I have spoken of the other conditions of peace which seem to me clearly indispensable—because I wish frankly to uncover realities. Any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset. It will not rest upon the affections or the convictions of mankind. The ferment of spirit of whole populations will fight subtly and constantly against it, and all the world will sympathize. The world can be at peace only if its life is stable, and there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is not tranquillity of spirit and a sense of justice, of freedom, and of right.

Still I quote him:

I am proposing government by the consent of the governed.

To take the world as it is and redivide its territory and its people, observing these principles, is the work of the Almighty, and even His power and wisdom would be taxed to their very limits. Let us hope that the providence of God, aided by the example of those countries which do recognize these national beatitudes, will in the fullness of time and the evolution of mankind lead the world to this perfection. I for one am willing to pray for it and work for it. That, however, is not what the President proposes. To put it in very homely phrase, he wants the United States to sit down with the other powers of the earth and seriously attempt to agree upon a division of the earth and its peoples into sovereignties, guided, I assume, by the principles he so persuasively states; and, having so apportioned the population of the world among distinct Governments, that this universal council shall create a supreme power which, through armies and navies contributed by the several subordinate nations, will maintain the status thus established, by suppressing insurrections, repelling invasions, overcoming every effort of any single Government or combination of Governments to change the existing condition. The plan involves, of course, the denial to any such nation of the right to redress its own wrongs or to maintain its own honor. It contemplates complete crystallization, eternal fixity. It may be that there is in his mind the reserve thought that the league of nations, or supreme power of the world, can change the territorial limits of Governments or transfer a given people, with their consent, from one to another; but he does not make this point as clear as could be wished.

I do not intend to vex the debate with details nor test the soundness of the policy proposed by referring to its infinite difficulties and manifest inconsistencies. For instance, in the allotment of the inhabitants of the earth to the various Governments. upon the principle that acquisition by conquest is fundamentally wrong and that every Government must exist upon the consent of the governed, what year would be taken to begin the application of the principle? Inasmuch as every country in the world, our own included, holds substantially all its territory through conquest, and was built up by overcoming and destroying weaker powers, the date of reorganization would become extremely important. These difficulties and inconsistencies are, however, somewhat inconsequential, because we know that when this council which the United States is to join enters upon this work of distributing national power no such lofty purpose will be observed, nor is it in any way possible to lift such a council out of the atmosphere of self-interest, a self-interest that would in all probability make the attempt not only abortive but absurd.

Reflect a moment on this subject. I have before me an article written by a very distinguished writer, to which I shall refer more at length somewhat later in my address, but I beg to read now a paragraph or two from his view of the message-and his view of the message is that of a friend, for I shall presently quote an extract in which he declares it to be the greatest utterance of modern times.

The President-

Says this writer, whom I will name hereafter-

The President mentions Poland because the Polish people are not at the moment under the Russian power. He says nothing of Finland, nor of Bohemia, nor of Prussian Posen, nor of Galicia, nor of Croatia, nor of Macedonia, nor of the Greeks in Asia Minor or Constantinople, nor of the Armenians, the Druses, the Arabs, the Egyptians. The principles that he lays down, if strictly applied, would devitalize Turkey and Austria-Hungary.

Of course, everybody recognizes that these principles applied to the Empire of Austria would destroy it entirely. It may be that it ought to be destroyed, but I hesitate to see the United States embark upon that enterprise. Again, this writer says:

States embark upon that enterprise. Again, this writer says:

The President's championship of the independence of Poland offends Russia and disappoints Germany. His statement that every great people "should be assured an outlet into the great highways of the sea," encourages Russia to hope for the Bosphorus. Here again President Wilson puts his finger on a nerve. A glance at the map will show that, so long as the Russians are a nation they will never enter into any agreement which recognizes as an accomplished and permanent fact the holding of Constantinople by another power. On the other hand, the Germans are in Constantinople, and are pledged to Turkey to "protect the independence" of that empire. Even to accept "neutralization" of the strait would mean to cut clean across the German spinal cord of rail communication between the North Sea and the Persian Gulf. Of course, if world peace can be brought about, the neutrality of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles can be maintained; and the same principle would naturally extend to the Suez Canal and the Panama Canal.

Referring again to the former paragraph, the writer con-

Referring again to the former paragraph, the writer concludes it in this way:

It would also unbind the political ties of the United States to the Philippine Islands and the five Latin-American dependencies. No peace confined simply to the determination of the present war can possibly carry out such a program.

I was interested last night on picking up an evening paper to read this dispatch from Berlin. It shows very clearly that my analysis, partially made, and hereafter to be completed, of the thought in the President's mind is not an imaginary one:

[By wireless to Sayville, N. Y.]

BERLIN, January 29.

The Overseas News Agency says the executive committee of the Indian National Party has sent to President Wilson a cablegram expressing gratitude "in the name of the 315,000,000 oppressed persons in India" for the President's address to the Senate.

The message asserts there can be no lasting world peace until India is freed from "ruthless plunder and exploitation at the hands of Great Britain, which has reduced a land once famous for its riches, moral excellence, and intellectual achievements, to a state of chronic poverty, famine, and complete moral and mental stagnation."

A part of the work therefore of this council would be to deliver India from the power of Great Britain and establish a government there more sympathetic with the people of that Again, by what right does Great Britain hold the Boers? If we are to readjust the world upon these principles, the justice of which we all acknowledge, then we must take that part of Africa from Great Britain and fulfill the dream of the Boers themselves in their gallant struggle for liberty and independence.

What would we do ourselves in our relation to the West Indies? By what right do we hold Cuba in check? By what right do we enter day after day and month after month the Republics of Central America in order to suppress crime, in order to defend and maintain Governments which we ourselves establish within the borders of those countries?

I shall not pursue this thought, for I have said already quite enough to give us a fair comprehension of the work to which we are invited-the work of redividing the world, at the end of this long period of conquest, into nationalities established upon the principles of justice to man and the consent of the governed.

But, Mr. President, these obstacles do not concern me just ow. The question which the American people must answer is whether they desire their Government to participate in any such effort, with the understanding that out of it is to grow a league of nations, or world authority, which will have jurisdiction not only to settle all international disputes but the power, through armies and navies, to coerce every nation into acceptance of its awards or laws.

There are some people of high station, great learning, and undoubted patriotism who do not see in the President's message the policy I have outlined, and it is my purpose now to direct your attention to those parts of the communication which seem to me decisive upon it. Speaking of the termination of the war,

The treaties and agreements which bring it to an end must embody terms which will create a peace that is worth guaranteeing and preserving, a peace that will win the approval of mankind, not merely a peace that will serve the several interests and immediate aims of the nations engaged. We shall have no voice in determining what those terms shall be, but we shall, I feel sure, have a voice in determining whether they shall be made lasting or not by guaranties of a universal covenant; and our judgment upon what is fundamental and essential as a condition precedent to permanency should be spoken now, not afterwards when it may be too late.

Again-

Mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure, it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind.

Again-

There must be, not a balance of power, but a community of power; not organized rivalries, but an organized common peace.

And again-

That service is nothing less than this, to add their authority-

That is, the authority of the United States-and their power to the authority and force of other nations to guar-antee peace and justice throughout the world.

Right must be based upon the common strength, not upon the individual strength, of the nations upon whose concert peace will depend. Again-

Again—

I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world; that no nation should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own polity, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful.

I am proposing that all nations henceforth avoid entangling alliances which would draw them into competitions of power, catch them in a net of intrigue and selfish rivalry, and disturb their own affairs with influences intruded from without. There is no entangling alliance in a concert of power. When all unite to act in the same sense and with the same purpose all act in the common interest and are free to live their own lives under a common protection.

There is but one conclusion that can be drawn from these It is that over all the nations of the earth there shall be a common and supreme power, which will not only undertake to decide all the controversies which may lead to international disturbance, but which, having entered judgment upon them, will compel obedience. There is but one way in which obedience can always be compelled. The protesting or rebellious nation must be overcome by force of arms. arms, may I inquire? Arms of the superior power, I answer. This military force may be contributed voluntarily by certain of the nations which unite to form the supreme power under the compulsion only of a prior agreement, or it may be a force organized in an involuntary way through the exercise of the right of taxation. Broadly speaking, there are but two methods that can be employed in establishing the guaranty of which the President speaks. There could be an agreement among the nations of the world creating the league, giving it the jurisdiction to decide disputes, with a contractual obligation to furnish from time to time such armies, navies, or money as would enable the league to make successful war upon a recalcitrant member.

This plan has the weakness of giving to each member nation the right, or rather power, either to keep or break its contract when the event happens, and there is not a sane human being in the whole world who does not recognize that such a compact would be observed or violated as the sentiment or interest of the particular nation would dictate. For instance, suppose that we had entered into such a relation with the principal powers of the world and the universal league or court was in operation; suppose a dispute arose between Great Britain and Germany which promised war. The league assumes jurisdiction and decides the controversy in favor of Great Britain.

Germany then declares war and proceeds in her own way to protect what she has proclaimed to be her right. The league then calls upon the United States to furnish warships, troops, arms, munitions, and money to overcome Germany. What would the United States do? My answer is that it would do whatever its people at that time believed it was for the interests of the country to do. Under such circumstances the probabilities are that we would be drawn into the war, but upon which side no man dare assert.

Take the other form in which the world power may be organized. Imagine, if you can, the partial disarmament of the nations themselves, and that each one of them had transferred to the world power such part of its navy, such part of its army, and such part of its money as would give the supreme authority command over military forces greater than any nation or any reasonable combination of nations possessed. The dispute It is decided. Great Britain and Germany propose to th each other. The supreme power takes our ships, our arises. war with each other. men, our arms and munitions, and our money to execute a decree from which we may have dissented and with which our people may be wholly out of sympathy. Can it be possible that any person who has thought even casually upon the subject is able to reach the conclusion that any such disposition of the world's affairs will promote peace, or strengthen civilization, or sustain progress, or bring happiness to the human family? To me the thought is full of madness, and the very best that can be said of it is that it springs from an intense desire for a peaceful world and is bottomed upon a blind willingness to try any experiment, however visionary and hopeless

Let us again imagine that the world power has been installed. with proper means for filling its treasury to raise the money necessary to provide itself with this overpowering military force. a force entirely at its command but which must be made up, of course, of all the nations of the earth. There will be American admirals, American generals, American arms and munitions. Imagine, now, a controversy between Japan and the United States, with a decision in favor of Japan, which we could not and would not accept. We would then witness a spectacle so monstrous even in a dream that one hardly dares to describe it. If the plan is workable our own ships, our own men, our own armament would be compelled to fight their own country into submission or absolutely extinguish it from the face of the earth. The thought of it is preposterous, and of course every man will reject the proposal the moment it comes to him in any such revolting form. If the President means that there shall be an understanding among nations that when war is threatened there shall be a concerted effort to draw together, if at the time each such nation can see that the welfare of its people will be protected in the effort, he would find many followers among those who are bending their energies toward some remedy for the horrors of war. But this is not the thought he has expressed, and I am dealing only with the inevitable results of the readjustment which he has proposed to us and to the world.

That I am right in the interpretation which I have put upon the message is further proven by the analogy which he finds between the Monroe doctrine and his doctrine of the world. I will not pause to point out that instead of analogy there is utter repugnance; but evidently there is a parallel in his mind, and that is sufficient for my present purposes. Those who think that the President does not intend that the decisions of the league of nations are to be executed by force have remember that if any foreign nation were to attempt to invade the American Monroe doctrine there is but one way for the United States to enforce it. There is but one way ever suggested by the statesmen of America in which it can be enforced. Without the force of arms, either actual or potential, behind it, our policy in this regard would be the emptiest bravado. A learned reasoner like the President could make no mistake in tracing the alleged analogy. It must necessarily be true that with him, at least, the world doctrine which he has espoused means that the world power will execute it with armored ships and shotted guns. To a man who believes that peace can be permanently maintained in this way there is some compensation for the humiliating reflection that the United States will be reduced to a mere principality, pursuing the path of obscurity to an ignominious future, doing the bidding of a higher power. But to those of us who believe that the plan proposed will provoke war instead of suppressing it, the announcement of the President comes with a shock which it is impossible to adequately describe.

In so far as I have been able, I have confined my observations to analysis, and I defer to a later day the ample evidence in which the history of nations is rich, showing the futility of the concert toward which we seem to be hastening. Nevertheless,

I can not resist the temptation to quote briefly from a notable article appearing in the New York Times of last Sunday, from the pen of one of our most eminent educators, Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University. It was to this author I referred a few moments ago. Outdoing Elihu Root, when he called the President "the noble idealist," Prof. Hart, writing of the message, said:

It recalled the great speeches of Webster, in its appeal to the country in rounded and ringing sentences. As a state paper, this address will take its place alongside the most famous utterances of the Presidents * * It almost measures up to some of the terse and lofty messages of Lincoln. American literature will incorporate out of Wilson's address such phrases as "We show mankind a way to liberty," "The organized major force of mankind," "A community of power," "A peace without victory," "Freedom of life, not equipolse of power," "The free, constant, unthreatened intercourse of nations." It is a high doctrine, calling upon the world to be consistent with itself, to put into practice the principles of government and international intercourse upon which it professes to found civilization. "

I have cited this in order to make it perfectly plain that this

I have cited this in order to make it perfectly plain that this writer is not looking at the message from a hostile point of

After he had thus characterized the greatness of the mes sage—an introduction from which one might easily understand that the world is ripe for the proposed readjustment-he calmly proceeds to show how impossible it would be to take the first step in the President's plan, and comments upon it thus:

It is more difficult to make the principles of sovereignty and independence fit in with any form of world peace. The President does not commit himself to ultimate government by a judicial tribunal, which seems to be the main object of the world-court movement. He does incline toward the general plan which is pushed by the League to Enforce Peace.

I may say, in passing, that the President so far exceeds any proposal made by the League to Enforce Peace that he becomes a pioneer in this great undiscovered country.

After quoting further from the message in this regard, the writer adds:

If that means anything definite, it means an international police force of not less than 5,000,000 men, in which the share of the United States would be at least 500,000. There is a limit on the armament of the world; yet it is clear that unless some means is provided for confronting any big, aggressive nation that is determined to gain its end by force the whole scheme of universal peace is in danger.

Toward the end of the article there will be found this significant passage:

The one serious question that would be left is, of course, that for the United States to enter into an agreement for keeping the world peace by putting down disturbers by joint armed force would admit the right of armed forcign nations to send their armed forces to our neighborhood, or even into the United States. For instance, another civil war might call for international intervention.

This leads to the most serious difficulty in the way of general world peace, namely, that it aims at the crystallization—

I observed one or two Senators smile when I used that term in describing the work to which the President had set his hand; but I am not alone, at least, in that construction of his purpose. I read again:

This leads to the most serious difficulty in the way of general world peace, namely, that it aims at the crystallization of the face of the earth as it is now or will be when the new arrangements are made. Who is to give reasonable play to the irregular development of nations, to the growth of race elements inside of countries, to the rising of great communities out of the colonial States? Can a world peace league create a machinery of men so world wise, so benevolent, that they will take account of the irregular development of the world?

No more striking instance of the charm which the easy flowing sentences of the message holds for the heart and mind can be found than the article of this brilliant and thoughtful writer. He pours out his eulogy in unstinted measure, for he, like all of us, is yearning for peace—not alone the peace of the moment, but the peace of the future. The moment, however, that his reason resumes control he perceives and states a situation which defies the entire proposal. His concluding paragraph is the happiest contribution to the literature of the subject which has fallen under my eye. He concludes thus:

Whether that is finally possible or impossible, President Wilson has revived the belief of many fainting hearts, has pointed a way to the stoppage of the infernal death and destruction of the present war, with the hope that like wars may be prevented in the future. To cavil at phrases, to criticize sentences, to deny the world public spirit of President Wilson in this significant speech would be unpatriotic to our country and unfriendly to the interests of mankind.

I accord to the Chief Executive this vast public spirit which impels him to do whatever he can toward accomplishing peace; but this is the time-the only time it can be effectually done to ascertain just what he proposes that this country shall do in order that he may reach the haven of peace.

That is to say, speaking of the paragraph I have just read, if we strip the comment of its complimentary garb, we ought to honor the Chief Executive, as I am sure all of us do, for his great desire to bring the war to an end, and that it is to be hoped his suggestion may be followed by some plan which the United States can adopt with honor and safety.

Those of you who have read the last Saturday Evening Post must have been amazed in noting the extraordinary similarity between the President's message and an article by H. G. Wells, a distinguished English writer. The identity of thought must be, of course, a pure coincidence, but it is nevertheless extraordi-The President could not have followed the Englishman more faithfully had he been provided with an advance copy of the article about to appear. I do not quote from Mr. Wells for the purpose of impeaching the originality of the President, however, but to expel every doubt with respect to the end sought to be accomplished and the means which must be employed. Mr. Wells writes in this way:

Let me state the broad outlines of this pacification:

In the first place there would have to be an identical treaty between all the great powers of the world, binding them to certain things. It would provide—

That the few great industrial States capable of producing modern war equipment should take over and control completely the manufacture of all munitions of war in the world, and that they should absolutely close the supply of such material to all the other States in the world.

That they should set up an international tribunal for the discussion and settlement of international disputes. That they should maintain land and sea forces only up to a limit agreed upon, and for internal police use only, or for the purpose of enforcing the decisions of the tribunal. That they should all be bound to attack and suppress any power among them which increases its war equipment beyond its defined limits.

That much has been broached in several quarters—

That much has been broached in several quarters

As we all know-

As we all know—
but, so far, is not enough. It ignores the chief processes of that economic war which aids and abets and is inseparably a part of modern international conflicts. If we have to go as far as we have already stated in the matter of international controls, then we must go further and provide that the international tribunal should have power to consider and set aside all tariffs and localized privileges which seem grossly unfair or seriously irritating between the various States of the world. It should have power to pass or revise all new tariff, quarantine, allen-exclusion, or like legislation affecting international relations. Moreover, it should take over and extend the work of the International Bureau of Agriculture, at Rome, with a view to the control of all staple products. It should administer the sea law of the world and control and standardize freights in the common interests of mankind. Without these provisions it would be merely preventing the use of certain weapons; it would be doing nothing to prevent countries strangling or suffocating each other.

These things being arranged for the future, it would be further necessary to set up an international boundary commission, subject to certain defining conditions agreed upon by the belligerents, to redraw the map of Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Moreover, this international tribunal, if it was indeed to prevent war, would need also to have power to intervene in the affairs of any country or region in a state of open and manifest disorder, for the protection of foreign travelers and of persons and interests localized in that country but foreign to it.

Such an agreement as that would at once lift international politics out of the bloody and hopeless squalor of the present conflict. But it needs the attention of such a disengaged people as the American people to work it out and supply it with weight. It needs putting before the world with some sort of authority greater than its mere entire reasonableness. Otherwise it will not come before the minds

It has seemed to me that the President's message is a mere paraphrase in loftler, statelier tones, more beautifully and more clearly expressed, but still a paraphrase, of the doctrine which Mr. Wells on behalf of his countrymen has put before the American people.

The whole argument presented by Mr. Wells is that the United States must enter the disputes of Europe or chaos will ensue; a chaos in which we will be necessarily involved. That the nations of that continent are incapable of either right thinking or right doing. If this be true, there is no world league, in which the countries of Europe must be the dominant power, that can either construct or maintain permanent peace.

The epigrammatic phrase in the President's message which is said to rival in its exalted spirit the most notable sayings of ancient or modern times, "It must be a peace without victory," is the final proof of complete bewilderment. In itself it is meaningless, for if the President intended to say that justice can not follow victory, the history of every age contradicts him. I am sure he felt this conflict between the epigram and the truth, for he immediately proceeded to declare that he must be allowed to put his own interpretation upon it, which was, in substance, that if the present war closed in a victory the triumphant powers would insist upon terms that would violate the principles which he had announced, and which we all recognize as the true basis of national existence. He knows, and we all know, that the belligerents totally disagree with respect to the cause of the war, the motives of those who brought it about, and what justice requires in bringing it to an end. In this passionate ferment of opinion we are asked, substantially, to force an agreement and then to fight for it through all the years to come.

I stand with the President in every moral effort which it is possible for him to exert to induce these warring people to end their devastating conflict, but I refuse to follow him when he leads the way toward the world sovereignty which he has pro-

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is my opinion that the motion made by the Senator from Iowa to take up his resolution and consider it at this time is in-fact, if not technically, out of order. He proposes here in his resolution that the Senate shall devote some time to a discussion of an address delivered by the President of the United States to the Senate on January 22. I desire to call his attention to the fact that that address is not before the Senate. The Senate has acted upon it by referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where it should properly go for consideration before it comes before the Senate.

At the proper time I shall take occasion to have this debate closed, because it seems to me manifestly unjust to the Senate and manifestly unfortunate that with only a few weeks of the session ahead of us, with a crowded calendar and night work in prospect, we should be detained with an academic discussion upon something not properly before the Senate.

I recognize, however, that the Senator from Iowa having brought this matter this afternoon before the Senate and having made certain interpretations of the President's address, it is proper to turn aside from our regular work for a short time to consider what the Senator has said.

Mr. President, in the first place, let me call attention to a The President's act in delivering this address and raising this great issue, not only in this country but in other nations of the world, has the substantial sanction of the people of the United States. At the Democratic national convention which met in St. Louis last summer and which nominated Woodrow Wilson for President the following plank was adopted. I shall read only that portion of it which is pertinent to what I have to say:

We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power, not only to make itself safe at home, but also to make secure its just interests throughout the world, and, both for this end and in the interest of humanity, to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live; that the small States of the world have a right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of peoples and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve those principles, to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and un hindered use of all nations.

Upon that platform the people reelected Woodrow Wilson President of the United States. I feel, therefore, justified in saying that when the President took occasion to deliver his address to the Senate, and thereby to take the first great step toward bringing about a league of nations for the preservation of the peace of the world, he was carrying out the declared will of the American people expressed at the ballot box at the last election, and not merely the decree of the party of which he is the head.

Mr. President, criticism is an easy matter. The President's address has been criticized in every nation of the world. It can be criticized here. It can be criticized in the committee to which it has been referred. But the fact remains that it will stand as the greatest document ever penned by man, considering the tremendous possibilities of its influence in the international affairs of the world. It has been received in every great country in the world. every great country in the world and read by millions of the people of the world, and it has met a responsive chord in every country. It is to-day an issue in every great nation, and it is to-day the greatest influence for hastening the advent of peace and bringing a close to this terrible war. That great document and bringing a close to this terrible war. which the Senator from Iowa has criticized here to-day, and upon which he asks the hasty judgment of the Senate, has hastened the advent of peace and probably saved millions of lives of the people of the nations at war.

Mr. President, there were obviously two purposes in the delivery of this message. One was to do what might be done toward hastening the conclusion of peace. Unquestionably and by general admission that influence is well at work by this time. The other was to suggest not a program, as the Senator from Iowa would say, but to suggest the principles upon which the United States might be willing after the end of the war to enter into a league of nations to guarantee the peace of the world. The President has suggested no program. and for much of the criticism which has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Iowa to-day I find no warrant whatever in the language of this document.

As far as the duty of the United States Senate is concerned. it would to my mind be next to a crime to do anything in this great body which would detract in the slightest degree from the influence of the President's address in foreign lands where it is working for peace. It is obvious that the United States can be committed to no program of action until the Senate is consulted. and in due time undoubtedly the Senate will be consulted. To make controversy at this time, however, even to indicate to the world that there is any considerable dissent from the great principles laid down in the address, or any great dissent in the United States from the desire of the President to promote peace, would not only be a great misfortune but it seems to me that it would be next to a crime.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has suggested that in due time the Senate of the United States will be consulted, and that it will have to be consulted before any program is carried out or in any way put in such form that it would be binding upon it and the other nations of the world. I have observed in practically all the nations of Europe the question which is being propounded, the question which Sir Edward Grey propounded, the question which has been propounded in Berlin and other places, is whether or not the Senate of the United States, which must be consulted, will approve of the President's program. They understand perfectly that the President's policy or principles, or whatever they are, if carried into execution, must be determined through treaties, through some kind of a national obligation, and that the Senate of the United States must approve of those treaties and obligations. I think if the President's suggestions are to have their full effect in the European countries it must be known, as Sir Edward Grey said, whether the people of the United States and their Government are behind this proposition.

Therefore it seems to me to be quite proper that we crystallize our views, if possible, and let the foreign Governments know precisely how we feel about it, either pro or con.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the immediate need of the world is to bring peace, and the President has said in his message, which is undoubtedly true, that with the terms of this peace we have nothing to do. Peace will come in Europe by the development of the demand for it among the people of Europe. That de and has been given a tremendous impetus in every belligerent country by the widespread circulation and discussion of the President's message. I would deplore as a terrible misfortune anything that might occur at this time in the Senate to detract from that effect, although I would be active as a Member of the Senate to assert the right of the Senate to pass upon the ultimate plan for entering into a league to enforce the peace of the world.
Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator must be aware that there are a great many people who believe the message delivered by the President to the Senate instead of making for peace is making for war. I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska believes that its influence will be profound in hastening peace. I very respectfully but insistently claim that it will have no such effect.

Mr. HITCHCCCK. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me. I was careful not to interrupt him, and I desire to speak as briefly as possible and to the point.

It seems to me that the question whether or not the President's message is going to shorten the present war is not subject It is already shortening the war.

to controversy. It is already shortening the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the war come to an end?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Since the President's message was delivered the sentiment of peace in every country of Europe has crystallized enormously.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The censorship has been removed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The censorship has been removed, and we are beginning now to get the true sentiment of Europe for the first time, and Europe is beginning to get ours.

Mr. President, I think any intelligent American realizes that in every one of the great countries of Europe that are now plunging toward bankruptcy and possible repudiation there is a strong sentiment in favor of steps to secure peace. every one of those countries, both the members of the Teutonic alliance and the members of the entente alliance, are embarrassed with the difficulties of taking the first steps, and only by the aid of a great neutral power like the United States, power from outside, can those steps be taken which will inevitably shorten the war.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska vield to his colleague?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Simply for a question. I can not yield for a longer interruption.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator if he believes that any action taken by the Senate on the President's note would detract from its beneficial effect?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think any criticism of it would be misunderstood abroad, no matter how high the motives are, such as the Senator from Iowa and my colleague from Nebraska undoubtedly are moved by. I think, moreover, that action is impossible, as we all know. We are now here within a few weeks of adjournment, as I have stated before. The business before us is probably more than we can attend to. To attempt at this time to enter into any serious discussion of this question is folly. There is no possible good to be derived from it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to his colleague?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield for a question. I will ask my colleague not to interrupt me.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to be placed in the attitude of criticizing the President. I have not offered any criticism. I have asked the Senator a question, and I want to repeat it. Does he believe any action taken by the Senate on the President's note would detract from its beneficial influence?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer yes, in order to make it short.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let me ask the Senator another question. Did he have that idea in view when he introduced the resolu-tion in regard to the President's former note, asking the Senate to approve it, and which the Senate passed? Was he considering that it would detract from the effect of the President's note on that occasion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it is hardly necessary for my colleague to criticize my action on that occasion. am entirely satisfied with my effort and entirely satisfied with the nonpartisan verdict by which the Senate passed my resolution and indorsed the President's action. But now, Mr. President, let me refer briefly to some of the criticisms made by the eminent Senator from Iowa upon the President's address

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion? I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but if this is going to a debate the Senator must understand that the debate is going to be continued. I have hesitated to push another resolution because I have no desire to force an extra session, but this address has been delivered here, it is of tremendous consequence and of tremendous moment, and if it is going to a debate, of course it is going to be debated. We should have a full and free presentation of all views.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am willing to have unanimous consent for an immediate vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. That means-

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am willing to discontinue the debate immediately, if that is the general consensus of opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS, Let us vote now on the resolution. Let us get unanimous consent to vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], is prepared to address the Senate, and he should have an opportunity to do so, as well as other members of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska upon what he asks for unanimous consent?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood a note of criticism in the remarks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], because I was proceeding to reply to some of the criticisms of the Senator from Iowa. I have not any desire to take up the time of the Senate. I am ready to vote now upon this resolution or to vote upon a motion to lay it on the table. I hesitated to make the latter motion, but I certainly do not think it is wise on the part of the Senate to go into an indefinite debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that my motion to take up the resolution has not yet been dis-Does the Senator from Nebraska suggest unanimous posed of. consent that my motion shall prevail and that the resolution shall be taken up?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.
Mr. WILLIAMS. To take a vote on the motion and vote it

Mr. CUMMINS. Why vote it down? Mr. WILLIAMS. Vote down the motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. We can not tell. The Senate may not vote it down.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I shall proceed for a few moments, inasmuch as unanimous consent seems to be out of the question, to reply to one or two of the criticisms made by the Senator from Iowa. His whole criticism is based upon the obvious error and assumption that President Wilson proposed a program to the United States and to the other nations of the world. The President was careful in his address to confine himself to the declaration of certain principles upon the adoption of which the United States might enter into a league to enforce the peace of the world. The President made no attempt to say what forces there should be or who should control them. He put emphasis upon the idea of disarmament rather than upon force. His idea was that the nations of the world should reverse their action of the past in preparing for war and reduce their armaments. He said nothing about a court to enforce the decrees. He said nothing about an independent power to supersede all the armies and navies of the world. He said nothing at all in favor of interfering with the internal affairs of the countries of the world. Yet the Senator from Iowa, if I understood him aright, declared that the President had proposed a plan which would result in an independent power of all the nations of the world interfering to suppress an insurrection in a single nation of the world.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I did not assert that, but the very eminent writer from whom I quoted asserted it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think right there in connection with that the Senator from Iowa remarked that if we had another civil war this power might determine it.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.
Mr. CUMMINS. I beg pardon of the Senator, but what he has stated was a part of the quotation which I made from Albert Bushnell Hart.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the other quotations from the eminent authority quoted by the Senator from Iowa were of equal folly, they were certainly worthy of no consideration here at all, because if there was one thing in the President's address that was noticeably emphasized it was that every people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, and unafraid.

Mr. CUMMINS. But not to go to war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the suggestion which I supposed the Senator from Iowa had indorsed, that a new central power to be created was to interfere in case of threatened insurrection, was obviously a straw man put up for purposes of destruction.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, I said nothing of the Some people might think the President's policy might lead to that result, but I was treating it solely from an exterior standpoint-the conflict between nations. Prof. Hart, however, is quite as firm an admirer of the President as can be the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa seems in some way to have gathered from the President's address the idea that this league of nations, which the President suggests, and which I think he should have the thanks of the American people for suggesting, involves in some way the creation of a new military and naval power in the world. He seems to think the President suggested an independent power to deprive nations of their sovereignty. Such a suggestion does not appear anywhere in the address, and it does not appear in the practice of nations. At this very moment we have two great leagues in the world fighting a war, and yet they have no supreme power; each one has its own navy; each one has its own army; and they are bound together simply by an agreement that they have made. We in the United States have been engaged in making treaties with the other nations of the world now for over a century

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will do so if the Senator will permit me to conclude this portion of my statement. It is hard for one who reads the President's address in a sympathetic spirit to see that it suggests anything else than a league of the nations of the world, bound by joint treaties with each other to live up to certain great principles for the welfare of humanity and the peace of the world. There is no thought and no suggestion here of militarism or of navalism in another form. On the contrary, the opposite is true. The suggestion is of disarmament; the suggestion is of smaller navies; the suggestion is of smaller armies; the suggestion is of justice and reason to take the place of force and violence.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield for a question.
Mr. LIPPITT. If the President's address does not mean something similar or along the line of the doctrine which was quoted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] from Prof. Hart, what is the meaning of the President's expression in that address that the United States must join the force and authority of this nation with the force and authority of other nations to enforce their decrees? Does not that expression "force" mean join the Armies and Navies of the United States to the armies and navies of the other nations? I do not know what other interpretation could be put upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I repeat the President of the United States has proposed no program, but he has laid down certain principles which he outlines, which he does not even propose now for adoption. In the very outset of his address he assured the Senate that he desired merely to disclose to Senators without reserve the thought which had been in his

Mr. CUMMINS. The thought and purpose. Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska to place an interpretation on these two sentences in the President's address:

That service is nothing less than this, to add their authority and their power to the authority and force of other nations to guarantee peace and justice throughout the world.

It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations, could face or with-

Does that not mean military force? Does not that mean military power? Does not that mean a combination of army and navy? If not, what does it mean?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, undoubtedly it means potential force; but the mere fact that the great powers of the world unite in a league for peace and make solemn pledges to each other to support certain great principles of government and certain great international policies will be sufficient to preserve the peace of the world, just as the creation of a police force in a city has the effect to establish order. So if the nations of the world can enter into a solemn agreement with each other that they will recognize the rights of man; that they will recognize the right of self-government; that they will recognize the rights of small nations; that they will not go to war without first submitting the question at issue to arbitration and to conferenceif such an agreement can be made, including the guarantee of the freedom of the seas, including the agreement upon a great reduction of armament—an enormous advance will be made toward establishing permanent peace. With the powers of the world all united upon certain great purposes for the admitted good of humanity, what reason is there to believe that any con-siderable power is going to rend such an agreement asunder after the terrible experiences of this war?

Does any Senator here doubt that every great nation of Europe regrets having been drawn into this war? Does any Senator here doubt that after this war is closed there will be such a development of democratic sentiment and of popular government in the nations of the Old World that such a war hereafter will be very difficult to force upon the people?

Mr. President, personally I have this idea, to which I have clung concerning the peace of the world in the future. I believe that the future peace of the world is going to depend largely on two great reforms: First, self-government, because a people that govern themselves are going to be very slow to go to war; second, upon the publicity of diplomacy. It is secret diplomacy and the act of a few individuals in the great nations of Europe that have drawn the world into this terrible struggle; but every intelligent person who has read the signs of the times believes that, after this war is over, a new era will begin. There will be a determined movement of the people, a great development of the democracies of every country of the Old World, to attain to something of the conditions which we have in the United States, in which war can only be declared by the legislative body, representing the people of the country, and in which treaties, before they go into effect to bind the country, must be submitted for ratification to the representatives of the people. Such a movement is already under way in Great Britain and has been for some years, but it is now gathering tremendous force. We shall live to see the day when secret diplomacy shall be ended in Great Britain and France and Germany and Russia; we shall live to see the day when war can only be declared by the representatives of the people in their parliaments or in their congresses. When such a time comes, do Senators think that any country will lightly break the agreements of the league to enforce peace that may be the great work of the future?

Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber have a rather grave responsibility in this emergency. It seems to me that the people of the United States who in a rather nonpartisan way voted for the President because they knew he stood for peace, because they knew he would exert the great powers of his office for peace, are going to hold to a strict accountability public servants who undertake from partisan motives to handicap or to impede the work which our great President has undertaken.

I feel confident that if any Senator on the other side of the Chamber tests public opinion in his own State he will find a great percentage of his Republican constituents as well as Democratic believe that the President has done a great thing, has done a noble act, has done an act that starts a new chapter in the history of the world. Those citizens will not be very tolerant with anyone who stands in the way of the success of that act, even though it is encompassed still with great difficulties and tremendous obstacles. There are obstacles, and the difficulties that are in the way are tremendous; but the object is so great that this country can well afford to take the lead in securing that object.

Mr. President, the present war has shown to the people of the United States that they are interested in the affairs of the world. So long as this war continues, it is an enormous embarrassment to the people of the United States; it is a great danger to the people of the United States at the present time. When this war broke out only a few countries of the world were engaged in it. All of the others declared their neutrality in the hope of staying out of it; but, one by one, other nations have been drawn into it, until to-day 13 nations of the world are involved in it. If it lasts long enough, others are likely to be drawn into the awful disaster. Mr. THOMAS. Including ours.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the Senator from Colorado says, per-haps including ours. We do not know, but certainly the possibilities are terrible enough to warrant us, even from the most selfish of motives, to do all that we can to put an end to the struggle. Even if we were not moved by the cries of humanity; even if our hearts had become so hardened that we did not respond to the sufferings of the wounded and the dying by the millions; even if we had no sympathy for poor Europe that seems to be going to its ruin; even if we had no thought for possible anarchy that may come after this war, yet on the most selfish and narrow lines we have a deep interest in bringing it to a close.

Mr. President, I believe the President of the United States in delivering this message to the Senate has not only carried out the will of his party as expressed in the platform of St. Louis and carried out the instructions of the people of the United States at the last election, but I believe he has taken the step which will serve to develop and expand the great principles which lie at the very foundations of our Government.

When the thirteen Colonies, with their 3,000,000 people, declared themselves free and undertook to set up an independent government in this country there was a feeling that they could live by themselves and unto themselves. That time has gone by. The 3,000,000 people have become a hundred million people. The little string of States along the Atlantic coast has been stretched clear to the Pacific Ocean, and we now touch, as the result of the Spanish War, whether we desire it or not, the politics of Asia on one side, as we do the politics of Europe on the other side. New York and the Atlantic coast, which were a month or six weeks removed from Europe at the time our Republic was established, are now almost across the border from Europe. Time has almost ceased to be of importance between the Atlantic coast and the harbors of Europe.

The war broke out, and we found the whole affairs of the United States upset. We find our commerce roughly changed in its course; we find ourselves unable to carry on legitimate business with certain belligerents of Europe; we find our mails upon the seas seized in violation of international law; we find ourselves prohibited from doing the business with neutral countries of Europe that we have the right to do under the terms of international law; we find vessels with Americans on board sunk in violation of international law. This administration now for more than two years has been struggling with these terrible difficulties and dangers. It has met with a success which has commended itself to the American people, but it may not be able to go on indefinitely. If this war goes from one chapter to another, and becomes in its final stages the desperate struggle of exhaustion and starvation, which it is likely to become if peace is not secured, the United States will have dangers to encounter which have not yet been encountered. So I say, Mr. President, we have a deep interest in anything that can be done to shorten this war. The President has taken a step, the first purpose of which is to shorten the war. Its second purpose is to secure, if possible, a league to enforce peace, if that peace can be established and that league can be formed man well-accepted American doctrines of justice and right and upon well-accepted American doctrines of justice and right and self-government.

Now, will any Senator do anything here that will serve to embarrass the President in his great work? If Senators are willing to interrupt the legislative program, if they are willing to make an extra session of this Congress necessary, will they still, beyond that, take up the time here in useless discussion upon a matter not before the Senate and for a purpose which the American people will interpret to be a purpose to embarrass the President?

Mr. President, I perhaps have gone further than I intended to go in making some reply to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins]. I hope we may now lay aside this matter, which is already in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, referred there by the vote of the Senate, and not properly before the Senate for discussion at this time. possible good can come from a discussion; and the inevitable interpretation of an effort to prolong the discussion will be that an attempt is being made to embarrass the President of the United States in a work which he has undertaken for the good of humanity, as well as in furthering the vital interests of the United States. I do not know whether it is possible to secure any agreement for a vote. I hope the Senator will not force me to resort to a motion to lay his motion on the table, but at some time that motion must be made if an end is not agreed upon to the discussion, because we must go on with the legislative work that is now pressing upon the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not interposing any objection.

Mr. President, am I recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska. I thought he had concluded. I desire to be recognized in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, moving to lay this motion on the table to-day would not prevent its renewal at any future

While I was absent I believe the Senator from Michigan stated that he understood I desired to speak upon this subject. I do; that is true. I intend to speak upon it briefly in the course of a few days, and I do not believe the Senate will refuse me that privilege. I do not believe, Mr. President, that it is possible to undertake to gag Senators and prevent their discussing any matter of importance not placed here by them but brought here

It is a question of great moment that has been brought here. It is in the public mind. There was a day in this country when it was undertaken even to deny the right of petition and prevent the discussion of slavery, but you can not prevent this discussion any more than you could prevent the discussion of slavery. What is in the public mind is going to be discussed. Discussion is not going to be prevented here or in the other House or in the press or anywhere else, and an attempt, I think, to prevent Senators from reasonably discussing the subject will hinder and not advance business. I am as anxious as anybody to have all the necessary business performed before the 4th of March, and I will do anything in my power to advance it; but I do not think that we shall reach that result by attempting to prevent Senators from speaking on this or any other subject which they deem of importance and which has been brought properly before the Senate, as this has been by the President.

No one appreciates more keenly than I do, Mr. President, the grave responsibility which rests upon all of us. It is a responsibility to perform our duty as we see it, and no threats from the suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

Senator from Nebraska are going to deter me or any other Sena-tor from doing his duty as he sees it. We may be easily terrified, but we are not so easily terrified as that, and I think the best way is to allow the matter to go on in its natural manner. There is no desire on this side to delay the necessary business of the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator, Mr. HUGHES. The Senator, I think, was not in the Chamber when the colloquy arose between the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. In that colloquy the Senator from Idaho, as I understood, intimated very strongly that if any further attempt was made to discuss this resolution on this side of the Chamber, it would lead to a protracted and prolonged discussion by Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who were against the resolution. That was what I gathered from his remarks, which caused the Senator from Nebraska to signify his willingness to cease the debate then, so far as he was concerned, and get a vote upon the pending motion by unanimous consent, or, in order to stop all further debate, to move to lay the resolution on the

Mr. LODGE. The resolution of the Senator from Iowa merely provides for fixing a time to discuss a particular subject. I have not the slightest desire to prevent a vote on that resolution.

Mr. HUGHES. That was all that was suggested.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to do that. I rose to say that I was not going to speak on the question of giving us time for the discussion. I wish to speak on the main question, the question which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] has discussed with such ability and which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] does not wish others to speak of, although he himself has been discussing it for nearly three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Nebraska and a great many other Senators would like to have this situation cleared up to the extent of finding out whether or not there is objection on the other side to vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. It is not my resolution. I have not the slightest objection in the world to voting on it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is what I desire to find out.

Mr. LODGE. A vote on this resolution will not prevent the discussion of the matters which are involved.

Mr. HUGHES. I have been here long enough to know that nothing prevents the discussion of anything in the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that if he will help me to carry the motion which I have made, and no further discussion upon it is desired, we can easily get a vote on it; but we can not get a vote on the resolution until it is before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, everybody knows that no practical good is sought or expected or can be attained by this discussion at this time. There is not an honest man in the Chamber who would say that he expects any practical legislative result of any description from this discussion. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] says there is no desire to delay the business of the Senate. Nobody cares what anybody's desire is, the act of delaying the business of the Senate is going on without any practical purpose in view. The Senator from Massachusetts is exactly right. You can not prevent a Senator from talking upon any subject under the sun, but you can put him in the ridiculous attitude of talking about nothing before the Senate, and when a motion is made you can bring the Senate to a vote upon that motion by moving to lay that motion upon the table. Thank God, the Senate has that one privilege left as a legislative tody. Its other func-tions seem to be purely deliberative.

A motion has been made to take up a certain resolution, and that is the motion now pending. I do not think any Senator owes any apology to anybody when there are only 29 or 30 working days of this session left, when he undertakes to stop the useless or worse than useless expenditure of public time by moving to lay that motion upon the table, and I therefore make that motion now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that, Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. The pending amendment is on page 25, where it is proposed, in line 12, to strike out "in all, $21,700," and to insert "for new school building, $12,000; in all, $33,700," so that the paragraph, if amended, will read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for new school building, $12,000; in all, $33,700.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] I think misunderstood my question with regard to the Fort Bidwell boarding school. I was not opposed, and am not opposed, to the establishment of Indian schools anywhere. I have become, I must say, a little bit skeptical in regard to the amount of good they do and in the manner in which they are being conducted and in which they have been conducted in the past. I am sorry to say so, but as a matter of fact their standards and the methods of management of those schools have not been just what the Indian is entitled to, in my opinion, or what the Members of this body and the other House of Congress believe them to be.

I am informed that the school at Fort Bidwell is located in an old fort, or barracks, buildings left there by the Army in the days when that country was being guarded against the depreda-tions of Indians; and I assume and do not doubt that they are in a bad state of repair. If they are, and if they have been for years, it is quite natural that it would not be a good place to educate children or to keep them. Children taken from their homes and put into schools, young children, mere children, are much impressed with their surroundings; and so I was in favor of the expenditure of money to build new and better buildings. Yet other institutions, where the buildings are newer and where the surroundings are, I presume, better than they are in that old barracks, are not carried on in a manner which justi-fies the expenditure of the money. The children would learn about as much and be better cared for in properly conducted day schools at home.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sheppard in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

I yield.

d. C.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope that anything I may have said will not be understood either by the Senator from Oregon or by any other Senator as a criticism of him. I certainly did not intend to criticize the Senator from Oregon. What I did say was that many of these mistakes are the mistakes of Congress. . If these schools are not conducted properly, then it seems to me it is the duty of Congress to change the conditions and make them such that those who are in control of these wards of the Nation will be properly taken care of. It is in the power of Congress to do that, and if Congress fails to do it then we have failed to do that, and if Congress tans to do it then we have lance to do our full duty.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with the Senator upon that matter. Congress gave authority to a body of executive officers to do this work for them, so that they would not have to attend to it themselves. Congress can not what the country supervising the conduct and management. go about the country supervising the conduct and management of children and of schools, inspecting their clothing and their food, and doing the thousand and one other things which it is necessary to do. They must and did delegate that authority to some one else. We receive our knowledge from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, whose specific duty it is to deal with these matters. The information should come to us in direct, simple, and explicit form, and it ought to be reliable, too, withal. That would allow us, then, either to do our duty or fail to do it, and the responsibility in that event would be upon us. But we receive all our information regarding the conduct of the affairs of the Indians from the Indian Bureau, whose duty it is to furnish it to us. They do so in a manner which is meager, unillustrating, and without a full statement of the facts.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon another interrup-tion, I also called attention to certain reports made by commissions appointed by the Congress. I called especial attention to the report made by the commission of which the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] was chairman, and I asked the question, How many of the Members of the Senate have studied that report?

I will say to the Senator from Oregon that we have information gathered by these commissions, and it is valuable informa-We do not derive our information altogether from the Indian Bureau, because these commissions have made extensive reports which would be very valuable if they were followed out.

Mr. LANE. There is truth in the Senator's statement. reports of commissions are innumerable and without end; but I do not think any Senator has the time to read all of them, although really it is our duty to do so, and I suppose we are negligent in that regard. There was an incident which happened at the Fort Bidwell school a short time ago, which I related a day or two ago, where five little girls ran away from the institution into the hills. Evidently they did not like it there. One froze to death, an 8-year-old girl; the feet of two other little girls were frozen and had to be amputated, and two are still

Now, that can not be a homelike institution. The treatment is not of such a nature that a child loves it as it would a home; and even though it were a pleasant place, children do get homesick, and Indians more than the children of any other race with which I am acquainted.

As I say, I am not impressed to the extent that I ought to be, perhaps, with the care and management of these boarding schools for children. I have visited some of them. I visited one a while back where I found leaky buildings, damp rooms, and no heat. The children were attending school in winter weather without heat. That condition was to be remedied before the winter was over, but the place had been allowed to run down through neglect. There were buildings with rotting sills, roofs leaking for lack of a shingle, and everything going downhill and deteriorating, and unnecessarily so, simply for the reason that they had not been kept in repair and given just ordinary care; and an appropriation of thousands of dollars was asked to build new buildings and to repair the old one. The comforts of a home were in a large degree absent. There were barren bedrooms and wards. Children who had come there to be trained in vocations, girls who had come to learn domestic science were kept in the kitchen for year after year washing dishes, peeling potatoes, scrubbing floors, and were unable to cook a meal. It was not a homelike condition, nor one of any particular advantage to the child. Many boys and young fellows were going to school but not learning a trade. In one school that I visited the boys were sent into a dairy to milk the cows, not in order to make dairymen or herdsmen of them, or to teach them to milk, or to separate the milk, or to make butter, but as a punishment, if you please. It was a disgrace to have to milk cows, visited upon them as such.

In one institution in which I visited I passed through a dormi-In one institution in which I visited I passed through a dormitory. It was vacant. I came back to it in half an hour, perhaps, and I saw a little boy in bed crying. I asked him what was the matter, and he said he had been whipped. I said, "For what?" He said, "For floating a boat in a pond." He had been playing with a boat in a pool left by the rain, and he had gotten his feet wet. I said, "Well, you were not hurt very much, were you?" He said, "I was." He was 6 years old, I think he told me, and it hurt, and he was crying. I said, "Well, I guess the woman would not beat you to amount to anything." He said, "She did"; and then she made him go to bed.

Another little fellow in another cot said, "I did not cry." I said. "Well. I wouldn't cry. little fellow, about a little switch-

I said, "Well, I wouldn't cry, little fellow, about a little switching." He said, "They don't switch us." I asked, "What do they do?" He replied, "They take off our clothing, and we are beaten with a piece of rubber hose."

Now, I want you to think of that. I do not know whether you have ever been beaten with a switch or been hammered with a rubber hose; but I will say to you that a length of rubber hose 2 feet long, made of 3-inch hose pipe, or 3-inch caliber rubber hose, is the next thing to a deadly weapon. You can kill a man with it. I will guarantee you can take any Senator here and take a 3-foot length 4-inch hose and beat him to death with it. It is a bludgeon. It leaves no surface mark; there is no such external evidence like a switch would make, but it reaches deep, and is the weapon of a cruel and cowardly person.

Such conditions are not ideal. There must be a change made for the better somehow. The larger boy students could help repair the building, put in tiling for drainage where necessary for drainage, and do the one hundred and one other things none of which are done at this time. We appropriate money for repairs which should be made in the institution itself. It was established to teach children vocational training. Why not give them practical instruction in such ways and at the same time keep the buildings in shipshape and good repair?
Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not disagree with the Senator from Oregon, and I think he has made a much stronger case than I could hope to do. My complaint is that when the Committee on Indian Affairs brings in an appropriation bill providing that Congress shall appropriate a certain amount of money for the welfare of the Indians we are at all times met with the statement that the appropriations are exorbitant.

I will ask the Senator from Oregon, if he will permit me, is it not possible that the appropriations are insufficient, and that it will be impossible for the Indian Office or those whose duty it is too look after these wards to do the work with the amount of money appropriated? For that reason I say that it is the fault of Congress and not the fault of the Indian Office.

Mr. LANE. That is the very point I was trying to make, that with the appropriations they receive, with care and economy and active interest in the affairs of the institution they could make the money go much further, and that much of the money is

As for the beneficial effect of the appropriation on a child in the way of education I would not like to say. I am beginning to doubt whether those children are securing many of the advantages which we try to obtain for them. I know they fall far short of receiving what they ought to. No; Congress has not done its duty, but is encumbered with the Indian Bureau. There are over 17,000 children out of school, with no opportunity to receive an education. That is wrong. But, on the other hand, much money has been wasted in the building of large institutions, which are mismanaged and neglected after the expenditure has been made.

In regard to those children who went out, one of whom died and the other two lost their feet, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs knew nothing about it. We knew nothing about it. Incidentally I happened to read it in a newspaper clipping which was mailed to me. The Indian Bureau said they had not heard of it.

There was a case which happened in another school which I dislike to relate. A young girl was taken sick. The physician diagnosed the case as pneumonia. She grew worse during the night. She had been placed in a hospital. They telephoned to the physician, who was away at a dance, as was the nurse. Two other Indian girls, 15 and 16 years old, were with her. The physician telephoned back to place here in a hot bath. They did, and in that bath she gave birth to a child. child died in the bathtub, and the girl mother a few days later also died. There were the two witnesses. One of them, I am informed, was sent to Alaska and the other to Montana. that physician dismissed? The Indian Bureau kindly asked him to go hence, and he was put upon another reservation, and the superintendent placed in charge of a reserve in another State.

We have no way of getting information in regard to the management of Indian affairs except incidentally. not time to be hunting down individual cases of injustice and wrong. It must go on with the larger work of looking after and attending to affairs in a general way. We have not time, as was shown here to-day, to attend to all of the ordinary affairs of legislation which are pressing upon us without full information concerning them. There are thousands of bills and resolutions before the body. No man has time to study them all or even to read them all. If he did, he would go insane; he can not analyze one-half of them. The bureau "system," as I said before, must be changed. There must be some simpler method. This one has grown for years and years with one error piled upon another for the reason that the whole method and foundation of it is wrong. It is on a wrong foundation.

The Senator called attention to the fact that we had never done our duty by the Indians; that most wars were brought on through our injustice to the Indians; that we took their land away from them, and have not made an adequate return. That is true. I think I know that as well as the Senator. I have a copy of a report here that was made in 1857 upon Indian affairs on the Pacific to the President of the United States, who at that time was Franklin Pierce; it was made by Jefferson Davis when he was Secretary of War. The report is full of instances of injustice done to the Indians, and the manner in which wars were brought about, and how the Indians suffered, and the inordinate greed and injustice of the white race in securing possession of their land and other property.

One instance is related here of some Indians up in northern California who were invited to dinner by a certain captain. It was a local title; he was not a military officer, but he had gone to look out for some Indians who had been in trouble with some whites. The captain went up into that country and failed to find them, but happened to come across a number of friendly and innocent Indians, about 40 in number, and invited them to his camp at night for dinner. While they were eating he killed them—men, women, and children—and scalped them and took their scalps down and paraded himself as a hero in one of the northern towns of California. That brought on trouble with all the surrounding Indians. There is a report on it here from one of the Government officers, and the old Indians will tell you about it. I have heard them relate the circumstances and narrating the incident as it is reported here in the official report.

That brought on a war. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is, on page 25, line 17, to strike out "in all, $21,700," and insert "for new school building, $9,000; in all, $30,700," so as to read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, including laundry equipment, $3,500; for new school building, $9,000; in all, $30,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is, on page 25, after line 23, to insert:

For beginning the enlargement and improvement of the irrigation project upon the Torres Indian Reservation, Cal., for the irrigation of approximately 3,000 acres of Indian land, in accordance with the plans and estimates submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000, to remain available until expended and to be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the total cost of said irrigation project shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask who requested that that amendment

Mr. ASHURST. I believe the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggested that the amendment should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REEDI

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] is in the city or not.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment was discussed at some length and fully explained last Saturday.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question in my mind was as to what Senator asked that it go over, because I thought he ought to be here if we are going to pass upon it at this time. I will ask the Senator from Arizona whether he knows if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] is in the city or not?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know. I was not aware until this moment that he is the Senator who requested that it should go

Mr. CLAPP. I could not answer the Senator definitely, but I happened to observe that he did not answer to the roll call

Mr. SMOOT. I knew that, and therefore asked the question. Mr. PHELAN. I am informed that the Senator from Missouri is now in New York.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I do not ask that the amendment shall go

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is on page 27, beginning with line 6, where the committee proposes to insert the following:

That the last proviso of the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892, reading: "Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said lands and their children," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read: "Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands and for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements for their benefit."

Mr. LANE. On this amendment I will say that the Indians have petitioned to have these funds divided among them pro rata in order that they may improve the allotments which have been granted to them and which they are unable to farm for lack of funds. I had forgotten that I had raised a point against the amendment, but I was going to suggest that a proviso be placed in it that they, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid per capita for the maintenance and improvement of their home allotments. If that amendment would be acceptable, I should like to offer it.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I ask the Senator from Arizona if he will accept the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to the amendment, and as far as I have the power or authority I accept it.

Mr. LANE. I move, then, that it be divided per capita among the Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to be used for the improvement of their homes and allotments.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is adopted, it is absolutely contrary to the first proviso.

Mr. LANE. Let the Senator make no mistake. The land will be sold, and then it will be administered for the building of trails. Of course it will be a benefit, it says so: but if you divert it to the use of the Indians for the maintenance of their homes and the improvement of their allotments, they will have a greater benefit.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator does not want to amend it by a proviso?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I propose to amend it in that manner.

Mr. FALL. I wish to suggest to the Senator unless there is an absolute direction that these funds shall be used in this way, and no other, they can at the present time be used in exactly this way in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LANE. For the improvement of the homes? Mr. FALL. Certainly. The maintenance of the Indians for the improvement of their homes in his discretion, and all you are proposing to do is to leave it to his discretion.

Mr. LANE. There is this difference: If it remains as it is, it will be administered so that the Indians will get none for their homes, and their desire is to have it diverted so as to have the money paid to them per capita.

Mr. FALL. I certainly have no objection, but I do not think the Senator improves it by his amendment.

Mr. LANE. It is to be paid per capita to the Indians for such use as they see fit.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question? Is it the. Senator's intention to strike from the proviso the expenditure of this money for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. LANE. It is my intention to get the money into the hands of the Indians to improve their homes and their farms. That is what they ask for. They petition for that. Is not that simple, plain English and a definite purpose? That does not mean building trails.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator what the provision would be if his amendment is adopted?

Mr. LANE. My understanding is that this timber, and I think it is valuable timber, worth millions upon millions of dollars, shall be sold and that the money is to be paid the Indians under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended upon the building of homes, the purchase of plows and horses, and for breaking up the land.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator to offer that as a proviso?

Mr. LANE. As an amendment. I propose to strike out all other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then the Senator would offer it as a substitute.

Mr. LANE. As a substitute or an amendment.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator, who is familiar with the conditions existing there, whether if this money is divided among the Indians per capita they will get the same use of it in the improvement of their lands?

Mr. LANE. Not all of them. A majority of those Indians are very shrewd and capable business men. There are some of them that are incompetents, and I suppose they will go off and spend the money foolishly; but the Indian has a right once in a while to spend his money foolishly if he wants to do so; but they have never had any of it to expend so far.

Mr. FALL. I merely wanted to understand whether it was the Senator's idea that this money was to go to the individual Indian to be used as he pleased.

Mr. LANE. Under the supervision, we will say, of the farmer, If he goes off on a spree, then, the farmer must Mr. FALL. go along with him?

Mr. LANE. If that is for the improvement of his farm; yes; but there is no whisky in that territory; it is dry territory.

Mr. FALL. My experience, having had a little to do with two or three farms, is that one farm may cost $1,000, we will say, to put it in proper condition for production, and another may cost $10,000, and the expenditure of each sum is absolutely necessary to achieve the result; but the Senator is proposing to divide this money per capita.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. FALL. All right; it is not my business; I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, these Indians have about $25,000 in the Treasury from the sale of timber. Under existing law it can be used "for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said land and their children.

Now, it is desired to add another provision, to the effect that this money may be used "for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements for their benefit." It seems that about 13 miles on the reservation are not covered by roads or trails, and the department says that it is very important to have authority to build the needed roads and trails so that the Indians may get their products to market. It is not the intention to use all the money for that purpose, but merely to use what is necessary to build the trail or road. It is still proposed to use a part of the money for the purposes mentioned in the first proviso; that is, for education and maintenance.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, my attention had been diverted for a moment, but I am informed that the amendment has been adopted. It is therefore useless to discuss it further.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator ought to put his amendment in such shape that it would amount to something.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has not the amendment to the amendment which is intended to be proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that we pass over the amendment and return to it later, which will give the Senator the opportunity to draw his amendment to meet the conditions which he desires to remedy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed The Secretary will state the next committee amendment which was passed over.

The Secretary. The next amendment which was passed over at the instance of Mr. Gronna is, on page 38, after line 3, where the committee proposed to insert the following clause:

where the committee proposed to insert the following clause:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $22,400 from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, in the purchase of lands embraced in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, described as lots 3 and 5, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, section 34, township 32 north, range 13 west, together with all the improvements thereon, in consideration of the relinquishment by the allottees of all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands and improvements, and of their right to select lieu land under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L.. pp. 855, 859), and the release of all their claims whatsoever against the United States or the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians by reason of said lands being required for reservoir purposes in connection with the irrigation system on the aforesaid Indian reservation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, there is appropriated for this reservation $25,000 for irrigation projects. I thought that to take $22,400 out of that amount would, of course, leave but a very small sum for any other improvements. This irrigation project, however, is not in my State, but is in the State which the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] in part so ably represents. As I understand, both Senators from that State desire this legislation, and so I wish to withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if the award in this case was not $20,000 instead of $22,400?

Mr. WALSH. The award, as shown by the letter which was read yesterday, was something over $22,000.

Mr. SMOOT. As the letter was read on yesterday by the Senator I understood the award was $20,000, and that interest had been added.

Mr. WALSH. The award was something over $22,000; but some time before the award was made a proposition was made by the Indians to take $20,000. Then, in the settlement and adjustment interest was figured on what they offered to take from the time they offered to take it down to the time that the adjustment was made, and it figured out $22,400. That was something less than the award.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is, on page 41, beginning in line 11, where the committee proposed to

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to lease for the benefit of the Navajo Indians in New Mexico such railroad lands as he may deem necessary for their welfare, $15,000, to be immediately available, and to be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in view of the fact that that item will incur considerable opposition, I have not been wholly satisfied with the justification for it, and I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over will be found at the bottom of page 53, line 23, where the committee have reported to insert the following proviso:

Provided further. That after the lands have twice been offered for sale at public auction the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall cause to be sold to the highest bidder, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, the surface of any lands remaining unsold and of any surface lands forfeited by reason of nonpayment of any part of the purchase price.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with reference to this amendment, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane], who is in the Chamber, is very much opposed to it. I therefore ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I second the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary. That completes the amendments of the committee which have been passed over with the exception of an amendment on page 27.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oregon if he has now prepared his amendment to that amendment?

Mr. LANE. I have my amendment to the amendment prepared.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I will wait for the Senator to offer it. Mr. FALL. There is one amendment which we passed over, unless it has been reached to-day, from lines 11 to 16, inclusive, on page 41. The amendment was passed over yesterday afternoon.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, that amendment has been disagreed to.

Mr. FALL. I did not know that that action had been taken in reference to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that amendment has been disagreed to. Mr. LANE. I now offer the amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 27, line 17, after the word "the" where it occurs before the word "maintenance," it is proposed to insert the words "pro rata improvement of individual Indian allotments and," so that it will read:

Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the pro rata improvement of Individual Indian allotments and maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if that concludes the committee amendments, I have one amendment I desire to offer. I do not offer it on behalf of the committee, because I have no authority to do so, but I offer it in my own right, and I ask that it be read. It is to insert a new paragraph on page 57, after

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 57, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the surface of any segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the State of Oklahoma which have been or may be condemned under the laws of the State of Oklahoma for State penal institutions or for county or municipal purposes, as authorized by Indian apprepriation bill approved March 3, 1909, for State penal institutions or for county or municipal purposes, shall be construed to include the entire estate, except the asphalt reserved.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the end sought to be accomplished by that amendment is substantially as follows: This provision would affect the title of the State to subsurface lands on which is located the State prison at McAlester, and it is deemed essential that holders of adjacent mining property should not be permitted to invade the land beneath the surface on which the prison grounds are located.

This legislation is asked for by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], and is regarded as necessary. It will embrace and have to do with about 800 or 900 acres. The authorities of the State take the view that mining under the prison for coal or other material and metals would be a menace to the police jurisdiction of the institution. That is the justification which has been submitted to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I gathered from the reading of the amendment, it is general in its application.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I so understood it.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not limited to any specific acreage. I may be mistaken, but that is as I understood the provision as

Mr. ASHURST. Let the amendment be stated again. It may read in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary against stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and I make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, some years ago we passed a law creating a commission to enroll the Chippewas of Minnesota on the White River Reservation. At that time the district court decided that in order to be a mixed blood within the purview of the former law the individual had to have one-eighth Indian blood. Consequently, when this enrollment law was passed it provided that the commissioners should ascertain and designate the quantum of Indian blood in each individual. Subsequently the Supreme Court of the United States held that any degree of mixture was mixed blood within the language of the former law.

Now, the ascertainment of whether an individual is of mixed blood or not is a relatively easy matter compared with the ascertainment of the exact quantum of Indian blood, and the commissioners asked last year that the law be amended by simply providing that they should find whether the allottee was of mixed blood. A provision was inserted in one of the Indian appropriation bills—I think in a bill that failed—and then a bill was introduced in each House to correct this matter. That bill also provided that certain decrees of the probate court should be validated. To that provision of the bill objection was made, and when we reached it the other day on the calendar, owing to the objection, I asked that it be passed over. The quantum of blood, since the Supreme Court has held that the ascertainment of the quantum is unnecessary, inasmuch as a mixed blood is a mixed blood. I assure the Senator that the amendment is not within the purview of any objection he has

Mr. LANE. Nor does it interfere with the rolls of the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. Not in the least. It has been recommended by Secretary Lane in Public Document No. 993, part 2, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure. Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the Senator, who seems familiar with the subject of mixed blood and races, why at one time certain American communities and distinguished statesmen encouraged the mingling of the blood of the Indian and of the white man, and, as I understand, proposed to subsidize marriages between them? Is the Senator aware that such is the historical fact?

Mr. CLAPP. I was not aware that they had ever been sub-

Mr. PHELAN. I have here an excerpt from the work of Senator Beveridge entitled "The Life of John Marshall," in which he states that, on motion of Patrick Henry, £10 sterling were offered, in a resolution proposed in the Legislature of Virginia, to white men who would marry Indian women, and Indian women were to be made an allowance for each child, I think, of £5. Such a measure passed second reading in the legislature at about the time when Patrick Henry was elected governor. I am not quite sure whether it was ever enacted into law; but John Marshall, in one of his letters, states that of all the bills introduced in that legislature he considered the measure referred to one of the most advantageous to the country. It is an interesting subject, when we are discriminating here against people of mixed bloods, to know that at one time it was considered a desirable thing in this country. It makes our obligation to the Indian greater and deeper.

Mr. CLAPP. I confess I never happened to run on to that historical fact, and it certainly is a matter of interest.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it would be of interest to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] if he were here, I am quite sure.

Mr. PHELAN. I am only seeking enlightenment, and I see that I have failed to obtain it.

Mr. PHELAN subsequently said: Mr. President, as the statement I have just made has been questioned, I should like to put the source of my authority in the RECORD, and I ask consent to print it in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What statement?

Mr. PHELAN. Concerning the historical fact that this Government once undertook to encourage intermarriage between the Indians and the whites by a proposition to offer subsidies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I did not criticize the Senator. hope he does not think I did. I am glad to get that informa-It is something entirely new to me, but I knew how it would arouse the ire of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. VARDA-

The matter referred to is as follows:

"A POET'S FANCY."

dar, owing to the objection, I asked that it be passed over. The department and the commissioners are now all agreed that the law should simply be amended so as to require only the ascertainment and recital of mixed blood, relieving the commissioners of the necessity of ascertaining the quantum of mixed blood. The Indian Office has also asked that the ascertainment shall not be evidence of or in any manner affect the question of the blood status of any other allottee involved in any suit by reason of the relationship of such allottee.

While it is true that this is perhaps general legislation, at the same time it is to carry into effect a law that is already on the statute books, and is one of those exigency matters which demand attention. I should therefore like to have the amendament which I shall send to the desk added at the end of the Minnesota items.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, would not that amendment involve and complicate the affairs of a great many Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all. It has no relation, I think, to what the Senator has in mind. He undoubtedly received a letter protesting against that portion of the bill relating to the probate proceedings. This affects the law in no way, except that it relieves the commissioners are now all agreed that the secent and his special proposed in the second of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders appear of the Puritains had not blended with the ribes of the wilders. Having passed the house on its first and second reading this bill would have become a law had not Patrick Henry been elected governor of Virginia, and so, as Madison phrased it, "been taken out of the way." Patrick Henry was not alone in advocating this measure. John Marshall, who became Chief Justice of the United States in 1801, and, holding the office for 35 years, did more than any one other man to convert the States into a Nation, was an earnest advocate of Patrick Henry's measure. In his Life of John Marshall Senator Beveridge says: "He earnestly supported Henry's bill for subsidizing marriages of natives and whites and was disappointed by its defeat. 'We have rejected some bills,' writes Marshall (to Monroe, December, 1784) 'which, in my conception, would have been advantageous to the country. Among these I rank the bill for encouraging intermarriages with the Indians."

It will be seen, therefore, that while Disraeli's regret may have been, as Senator Phellan says, but the expression "of a poet's fancy," that "fancy" was a very earnest conviction on the part of such builders of the Nation as Patrick Henry and John Marshall.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if his Mr. CURTIS. amendment embodies the provisions of House bill 14721

Mr. CLAPP. It embodies the first part, but it eliminates the reference to the probate court—that is, if the Senator has in mind the bill that I think he has.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have it read again, so that I may compare it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add, at the end of the Minnesota items, on page 35, after line 12, the following:

nesota items, on page 35, after line 12, the following:

That the seventh paragraph of section 9 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the roll herein provided for shall be made in triplicate and shall show the allottment number or numbers, together with the description of the property allotted, and the name, age, sex, and whether the allottee is of full Indian blood or mixed blood. The roll shall also state whether the person named is living or dead; and, if dead, the approximate date of death shall be stated, when it can be ascertained, together with the age of such person at death, as near as practicable. No allotment nor the allottee thereof shall be enrolled where there is a suit now pending, or hereafter commences prior to the completion of such roll, to cancel any conveyance of such allotment until such suit has been finally determined; nor shall the enrollment of any allottee be evidence of or in any manner affect the question of blood status of any other allottee involved in any such suit by reason of relationship of such allottees."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to insert in the Record a letter from the Department of Justice of this date, addressed to me and referring to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., January 30, 1917.

Hon. Moses E. Clapp, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: In reference to H. R. 14731, providing for an amendment of paragraph 7 of section 9 of the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat., 88), I have just been informed by Representative Halvor Steenerson, who introduced this bill, and Mr. R. J. Powell, a member of the enrollment commission thereby affected, that Mr. Steenerson and the promoters of the bill are willing to accept the substitute recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in his letter to Hon. John H. Steenerson, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, dated July 6, 1916, and printed in a supplemental report, No. 993, part 2, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The concurrence of the Department of Justice in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior was stated in his letter. There has been no change in the attitude of the departments in reference to this matter. I understand that it is feasible to incorporate the measure agreed upon in the Indian appropriation bill, now under consideration by the Senate, and we should be very glad if that could be accomplished. Very respectfully, F. J. Kearful, Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to a small amendment which I desire to offer, on page 75, line 13, after the numerals "$150,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 75, line 13, before the word "reimbursable" at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the line, it is proposed to lisert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make such additional surveys and examinations as may be required for the purpose of preparing and submitting with the estimates to be submitted before the first regular session of the Sixty-fifth Congress an estimate for the beginning of construction of a project for the watering of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation in substantial accordance with the plan outlined in House Pocument 1767 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, or such modification of such plan as the said Secretary may approve, $5,000.

Mr. ASHURST. This is a part of the reimbursable appropriation carried in the bill at page 75, lines 8 to 16?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. It is to go in just before the word reimbursable," on line 13, page 75.

Mr. ASHURST. And it is a part of this reimbursable appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Mr. ASHURST. I h

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an amendment on page 12 of the bill, line 15, after the figures "$10,000." This is a lump appropriation for the pay of judges in the Indian country. I made an explanation to the Senate Saturday as to the status of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico. In the justification of this requested appropriation of $10,000 it appears that they propose to pay a judge, whom I spoke of Saturday, the sum of $720 per year. The Pueblo Indians are very much opposed to the naming of any judge for them. In my judgment, there is no question that the law did not contemplate vesting in anyone any such power, and that to-day no one has any such power; but the Indians are not able to take this matter into the United States courts. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 12, line 15, after the numerals "$10,000," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no part of this nor of any other sum shall be used to pay any judge for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, and that no such judge shall be appointed for such Indians by any United States official cr employee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am familiar with the purposes of the amendment, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that is the case, then the

Mr. SMOOT. All Frestdent, it that is the case, then the amount of $10,000 is not necessary.

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Outside of the payment of the judge in New Mexico?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I think it is, Mr. President. I hope the amount will not be reduced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 13, line 5, I move to strike out "$3" and insert in lieu thereof "$4."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 13, line 5, where the bill reads " and actual traveling and incidental expenses, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty," the Senator from Arkansas moves to strike out "$3," and in lieu thereof to insert "$4."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that their per diem has been $3 for many years past, as he knows, of course

Mr. ROBINSON.

Mr. SMOOT. And if this is changed, it seems to me it ought to be changed in all the other appropriation bills, because the same reason that applies to an increase here would apply to other bills.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, concerning this amendment wish to say that the position of Indian inspector carried in this bill was created two years ago, I think. The service which these inspectors are required to perform carries them into the field, and for the most part keeps them away from home all the time. The per diem allowance is inadequate; $4 would scarcely be adequate; but my attention has been called to the fact that they are compelled to pay out of their salary a considerable sum for subsistence, for which this allowance is intended to compensate them, and I think the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the inspectors of the Indian Service living upon the Indian reservations are not put to nearly the expense to which many of the others are put.

Mr. ROBINSON. But, as the chairman of the committee remarks, they do not live on these reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I know they do not live there, but I mean their work calls them there, and it seems to me that the expense to which the Indian inspectors are put would not be nearly so great as the expense to which the other inspectors are put who travel all over the country and have to live in cities or towns.

Mr. ROBINSON. Some of these inspectors. Mr. President, have had service in many States during the last year. They are frequently called upon to attend court in localities where they are unable to maintain themselves upon this allowance. The allowance, in my judgment, is inadequate. I have made some investigation into it. I hope the Senator from Utah will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator's amendment is agreed to, then, of course, we will have to increase the $30,000 to $40,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that will not be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the $30,000 is too much as it is. Mr. ROBINSON. I think the $30,000 will be adequate. The chairman of the committee thinks so, also.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the $30,000 will be adequate, am very much in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. These inspectors-and there are only six of them—are frequently called upon to assist the United States district attorneys in the preparation of cases, and very frequently they go from State to State. I am very sufficiently convinced that the per diem of $3 is not sufficient.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say there are only six inspectors?

Mr. ASHURST. I think there are only six. Mr. SMOOT. What salary do they get?

Mr. ROBINSON. Twenty-five hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the chief inspector gets not to exceed $2,500, but all those inspectors certainly do not get $2,500.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the inspectors receive $2,500 each. Mr. ASHURST. They each receive $2,500, and there are only Mr. ASHURST. They each receive $2,500, and there are only six in the service. They perform technical work. They are the confidential men upon whom the Department of the Interior is obliged to rely in the preparation of many cases.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, it seems to me that they must get $5,000 each, if it requires $30,000 to pay six of them.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the salary. Mr. SMOOT. No; that is the salary, per diem and all. I am speaking of the per dlem as well.

Mr. ROBINSON. They are only allowed a pier diem when they are actually in the field.

Mr. SMOOT. If they were allowed $3 a day for 300 days, it would be $900. Suppose they drew $1,000 in the way of per diem and they got a salary of $2,500; that would be $3,500 for the salary and per diem expenses. Now, there are only six of them. That would be only $21,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator began his argument by stating that the $30,000 was inadequate.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not say that now, upon the statement of the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that the Senator does not say so now; but I think the $30,000 is more than ample to meet the requirements of the service if the amendment I have offered is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, on the statement made by the Senator, it ought to be reduced now. Even with the $4 per day it ought to be reduced.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, during the last year all of the fund that was appropriated for this purpose was not used and the department turned back a considerable sum. I do not remember how many thousand dollars, but I think between six and ten thousand dollars was turned back last year.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if there are just six of these inspectors and they draw $2,500 a year each, and their per diem is even $4 a day, it is very easy to figure out just exactly what we ought to appropriate for them; and in any case the amount could not possibly exceed $25,000. Why appropriate more than

Mr. SMOOT. Well, let it go into conference. Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask, just for information, before voting on the amendment, whether it costs any more per diem for these inspectors than it does for the special agents, who get $3 per diem. including sleeping-car fare, or who get sleeping-car fare aside from the $3 per diem? And what about the $3 per diem which is provided for the transportation and incidental expenses of all officers and clerks in the Bureau of Indian Affairs? Should not that be increased also? Is there a different scale of ilving? Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to the query of the

Senator from New Mexico, I think it is true that a more liberal allowance should be made for the per diem of these inspectors than for the special agents to whom he refers. The character of work which the inspectors perform carries them into remote districts, and frequently compels them to incur expenses which the special agents do not necessarily incur. They are a different class of officers, and they perform a different class of service. Their services are on a broader scale and extend over a greater

Mr. FALL. I have no doubt the Senator is very familiar with the character of the expenses incurred by each class of employees and could explain the facts very satisfactorily to the Senate. I have not any objection to the amendment, except that it is another illustration of the asininity-if I may be allowed to use the word—of formulating, in the way we do, an Indian appropriation bill at every session of Congress. Some day or some time a different system is going to be inaugu-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 70 of the bill, after the semicolon in line 22, I move to add "for a storage battery, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available."

The Secretary. On page 70, line 22, after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "for a storage battery, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately avail-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, one year ago an appropriation of $2,500 was made for providing an electric-light plant for the Indian school at Tomah, Wis. They are buying their electric light from the city of Tomah, and have been paying $170 a month for it. The rates have gone up, and from the 1st day of January they will be increased 100 per cent. One year ago we made an appropriation of $2,500 for the purpose of purchasing a generator engine, switchboard, and storage battery. The amount appeared to be sufficient at the time to install a complete lighting system for this school; but the increase in the price of material has been such that the generator engine purchased under the legislation of last year absorbed $2,042 of the appropriation and the switchboard $368, leaving a balance of only $90. It is necessary, in order to complete the plant, to have this storage battery; and from the best information I can get as to what it would cost, obtained from Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol here, I fixed the amount of the appropriation at $1,500, or so much thereof as may be neces-No more than is necessary will be expended. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Without this expenditure that which has already been invested will be useless. With it we will make a saving on what they are now paying for the electric light that will in one year, at the rate which they are paying the company that supplies the electric current to this school, save almost as much as the total

Mr. ASHURST. Would the Senator from Wisconsin object to inserting the amendment after the semicolon in line 22?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is where I offer it to be inserted. Mr. ASHURST. And change the numerals accordingly?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment in order to get the question in conference that this bill may await the action that will be taken on section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for increasing the salaries of those officials who draw less than $1,000. I ask that the amendment be read, and I ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add as a new section the Sec. 27. That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not wish to make a point of order if I could upon this amendment because, as the Senator from Kansas said, he would like to have it go to conference. He is entitled to that right and courtesy, but I should like to have read a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior upon a bill very similar to this amendment now proposed by the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as re-

The Secretary read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 18, 1917.

Hon. Henry F. Ashurst,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr Dear Senator: I have your letter of January 6, requesting report upon proposed amendment to H. R. 18453, under which the compensation of employees in the Indian Service would be increased.

This question, of course, is one for Congress to determine; but it seems that if such an increase is to be granted it should be uniform and not differentiate between employees of the Government in different branches of the service.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment is exactly the same as was adopted upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Identically.
Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear the Senator from Utah.
Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator from Kansas if his amendment is not identically the same in language as that which was adopted upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and the Senator from Kansas said it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator from Kansas whether the latter part of the amendment is the same?

Mr. CURTIS. It is the same, word for word.

Mr. ASHURST. It is the same as the provision which was carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same identical amendment known as the Smoot amendment. If we are going to give it to one part of the Government employees, we ought to put it upon every appropriation bill, and I think the Senator will agree to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, considerable has been said in the way of implied but not malicious criticism with respect to the management of the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have here an article which appears on page 270 of the Indian School Journal issued by the United States Indian School at Chilocco, Okla., printed by the pupils. I ask unani-mous consent that it may be printed in the Record without reading.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. FALL. For what department?
Mr. ASHURST. The Indian Department.

Mr. ASHURST. The Indian Department?
Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read. It is very short.
Mr. FALL. I should like to hear it.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the article? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the article.

Mr. FALL. If I can I withdraw my request for the reading of this very interesting article, and withdraw any objection whatsoever to its printing. I think we all recognize the ear-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The article will go in the RECORD without reading in full.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

It is a report of stupendous achievement that Commissioner Cato Selis has just submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. When one reads in the pamphlet the account of all that has been done he marvels that one man has had time and strength to carry out so successfully so many projects calling for much study and the exercise of great ability along so many distinct lines.

To have developed and carried out the "reimbursable" plan for helping poor but honest and industrious Indians to independence, to have waged a winning fight against the liquor traffic in and abour reservations, to have made dishonest guardians of Indian minors account for millions that they had confidently expected to make their own, to have waged so successful a health campaign, to have provided for the inauguration in the schools of the sane vocational course of instruction now in operation—each appearing a good-sized undertaking—along with the numerous other accomplishments scarcely, if at all, less important, and to have set all in harmonious motion was a gigantic task. The battle is still on against the crooked guardian, the grafter, and the booze peddler, against tuberculosis and trachoma, against all the physical dangers that beset the baby coming into the world; while cattle on a thousand hills belonging to the Indians ithousands of additional acres in cultivation, great numbers of Indians litving in complete independence who but yesterday were leaning upon the Government, all bear witness to the constructive power of the tireless, enthusiastic man at the head of the Indian Bureau.

No one is more desirous than the commissioner that the Indian Bureau go out of business at the earliest day that such closing can be accomplished with safety to the people from whom all Government props are being removed as rapidly as seems wise. He does not covet the emoluments of a job the holding of which costs him thousands of dollars annually from private resources; but the cry of the grafter and the assistant grafter for immediate removal of every impediment to the plying of their business does not convince or disturb him nor does it interfere with the vigorous performance of every duty.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there is a matter I desire to say a word about. In 1863, I think it was, following the Sioux massacre in Minnesota, Congress passed a law forfeiting the annuities due the Sioux Indians. There were two general groups of these Indians, the Sissetons and Wahpetons, and then the other group known as the Sasteins and Wangetons, and then the other group known as the Santee Sioux. Before my predecessor died he had taken up the effort to do justice to these Indians. Clearly the Government of the United States has no moral rights to forfeit the annuities due its wards because the wards revolt. He died before the work was completed. Some years ago we passed a law giving the Sissetons the right to bring an action. The bill has been introduced and has been passed several times by the Senate, giving the same right to the Santee Sioux. It was passed through the Senate at this Congress and is now in the House, but everyone knows the difficulty of getting legislation through the difficulty of getting legislation through the House.

I am going to ask to put that bill at the end of the Nebraska items as an amendment. I put it there because, although originally these Indians were entirely, I think, from the State of Minnesota, to-day a large portion of them, I think perhaps a major portion, live in the State of Nebraska, but a great many still remain in the State of Minnesota. The bill, as I said, has almody possed the Senate at the present Congress. already passed the Senate at the present Congress. A similar bill has passed Congress several times. I think it was on the Indian appropriation bill that failed two years ago, if my memory serves me correctly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

Sec. 28. That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sloux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sloux. Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed; and said act of forfeiture and all subsequent acts and parts of acts and treaties inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed for the purposes hereof: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act and shall determine and include the present value of the same and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against such amount so found all payments or other provisions, of every name and nature, made to or for said bands by the United States, or to or for any members thereof under the autority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which are properly chargeable against said unpaid annuities.

That upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at t

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] in the discussion yesterday gave notice he intended after the committee amendments were passed upon to move to strike out the paragraph beginning on page 52, line 21, down to and including line 5 on page 53.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope that action will not be taken. If the Senator will pardon me, this particular item has been carried in the bill now for three years. The Senator from Georgia has been a Member of the Senate during the time it Now, when the two Senators from Oklahoma most unfortunately are absent, both by reason of illness, I trust that such action will not be taken. It is an important item, and in my opinion it is a just and necessary item. Neither of the Senators from Oklahoma can be here for the reason I have stated. One is seriously ill at his home in this city and the other is ill in Oklahoma, and will not be here before the bill is passed. The item was carried in the bill in 1914 and 1916, and it was in the bill in 1915. No objection that I have ever heard to the item has been made in the Senate. This seems to be a most inopportune time to take up a serious item like this in the absence of both Senators from the State. I recognize the courtesy the Senator from Utah is extending to the Senator from Georgia in calling attention to it, but I am very anxious that this item shall be retained in the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Utah pardon me? Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I hardly think it would be fair to Oklahoma for this reason: Whatever may be said as to the wisdom or justice of the measure, and I think it is a very wise and just measure, in view of the large amount of their land that is held beyond the power of taxation, I believe we should make provision to assist them in their public schools. This has been in the bill right along as it came from the House, and I am inclined to think that possibly it might embarrass the State, without any notice whatever, when they have every reason or right to suppose it would be continued at least for a time, now suddenly to withdraw it. I think if the Senate feels it has been unwise to give this assistance or unwise to continue it, surely it is at least due to the State of Oklahoma that they have notice so that they may make necessary provision hereafter to take care of it, but suddenly to cut out that amount from what may properly be called the revenues of the State might very seriously embarrass them. It strikes me that without any notice it is hardly a fair thing to do, even if we had the power to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to make a motion to strike it out. I simply did what I would want every other Senator to do if I were out of the Chamber when a bill was about to pass from the Committee of the Whole into the Senate, to call attention to the fact of a notice that had been

Mr. GRONNA. Wi Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that I have inquired into this matter and I am sure if we struck out the provision it would embarrass those people. It was stated by some Senator that the lands given to the Oklahoma Indians are taxable. I am informed that they are not. It would cripple the schools. We can not at this time let this item go out. As the chairman has said, it would hardly be fair to the Senators from Oklahoma to take out this item when they are both absent.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, as I said, I do not know whether the Senator from North Dakota was in the Chamber. I am not going to make a motion, because I do not know enough about it to know whether it is right or whether it is wrong; but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] gave notice yesterday that as soon as the committee amendments were disposed of he wished to make a motion to strike out this paragraph. I thought it was nothing more than fair to the Senator from Georgia to give him notice that the bill was about to pass from Committee of the Whole into the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from New York withhold the motion?

Mr. O'GORMAN. The executive session will take only a few minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. I think we can pass the bill before the recess, and I do not want an executive session now. I shall call for the yeas and nays and do everything I can to resist the motion. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw his I think we can conclude the consideration of the bill in a few minutes.

Mr. O'GORMAN. This is a very important bill, but it is not the only important business which is before the Senate of the United States. Under the program we have but 15 minutes before a recess will be taken, in any event, and there is some important executive business which can be disposed of in that time.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I will assure him he will not do a bit of executive business. I shall consume the whole time.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I could not yield to any suggestion of that kind from any Senator, especially from one whose good opinion I value as highly as I do that of the Senator from Arizona. Upon reflection he must know that that is scarcely a fair proposition to advance.

Mr. ASHURST. I have had no notice of the motion. It was made without consulting me.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The bill which the Senator has in charge I appreciate is a very important measure, and it will be disposed of in due course, but we are to convene again at 8 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, we could not in my judgment take up the Indian appropriation bill in the evening session. That is to be devoted wholly to the Porto Rican bill. I withdraw the apparent discourteous statement I made; but I am very earnest about this matter. I want to have this bill disposed of. It will go over until to-morrow if we go into executive session now. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw the motion.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will any injury be done to any interest even if the bill goes over until to-morrow?

Mr. ASHURST. I am anxious always to have Democrats get into office just as quickly as they can, but I think the few nominations can wait one more day, having waited so long.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It will not interfere with the Senator's bill. I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York moves

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). Owing to the pair I have with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Sim-Mons], who is absent, I am constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], who is absent.

I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] and for that reason withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my

The roll call was concluded.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Indian appropriation bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I had proposed to offer a substitute for the bill, but I do not find that amount of interest in matters pertaining to Poor Lo that I think he deserves, and so I will not offer it at this time. I'will, however, vote against the passage of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass? The bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), under the order previously made, the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. James in the chair). The special order is the Porto Rican bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the further formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if that was not agreed to at the time the Senator had the bill brought up?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there was objection to it; the bill was read about halfway through and then the morning hour expired. I desire to have it read for action on the committee amendments and amendments following.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, on page 1, after line 6, to insert the subhead "Bill of rights."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 16, after the word "State," to insert "or any officer thereof," so as to make the clause read:

That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under the government of Porto Rico shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign State, or any officer thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 21, after the word "warrant," to insert "for arrest or search," so as to make the clause read:

That no warrant for arrest or search shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be selzed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that that is really a transposition. The same provision is found on page 5. It did not belong there and we transposed the paragraph to the point where it should be. I think it is exactly the same.

Mr. SMOOT. I find no amendment on page 5 of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. When that is reached I will ask that it be stricken out. The Senator will notice in line 12, page 5, the same language is used-"that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause.'

Mr. SMOOT. It is the Senator's intention to move to strike out those words?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; transposing the language from that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 20, after the word "institution," to insert "or association," and in line 22, after the word "such," to insert "and no appropriation shall be made for charitable, industrial, educational, or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation, or community not under the absolute control of Porto Rico," so as to make the clause read:

That no public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, sectarian institution or association, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary as such, and no appropriation shall be made for charitable, industrial, educational, or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation, or community not under the absolute control of Porto Rico. Contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee would like to strike out the words "and no appropriation shall be made," because the same subject matter relates to it. It is simply surplus language. Insert the word "or."

The SECRETARY. Beginning the amendment with the word

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 5, after the word "law," to insert "and on warrant drawn by the proper officer in pursuance thereof," so as to make the clause read:

That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law, and on warrant drawn by the proper officer in pursuance thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 6, to insert:

That the rule of taxation in Porto Rico shall be uniform.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 7, to insert:

That all money collected for any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the Treasury and paid out for such purpose only, except upon the approval of the President of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15, page 5.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In behalf of the committee I move that lines 12, 13, 14, and 15 be stricken out because it is the same language that was inserted on page 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 5 in the House text strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive, in the following words:

That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Secretary to read the text of the bill now, because by simply stating the amendment it is impossible to follow the text to which the amendments apply. The formal reading of the bill was dispensed with, so I ask the Secretary to read the whole of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 5, line 16.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 6, line 8, before the word "municipality," to insert "subdivision or," so as to make the section read:

as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from Porto Rico, but taxes and assessments on property, internal revenue, and license fees, and royalties for franchises, privlieges, and concessions may be imposed for the purposes of the insular and municipal governments, respectively, as may be provided and defined by the Legislature of Porto Rico; and when necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by Porto Rico or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law, and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That no public indebtedness of Porto Rico or of any subdivision or municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property, and all bonds issued by the government of Porto Rico, or by its authority, shall be exempt from taxation by the Government of the United States, or by the government of Porto Rico or of any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or by any State, or by any county, municipality, or other municipal subdivision of any State or Territory of the United States, or by the District of Columbia. In computing the indebtedness of the people of Porto Rico, bonds issued by the people of Porto Rico secured by an equivalent amount of bonds of municipal corporations or school boards of Porto Rico shall not be counted.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if it was the intention of those favoring the bill that 7 per cent shall be the aggregate amount of the indebtedness of the State or of the subdivision or of the municipality?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that that is the same provision which came from the House. It is the intention to limit the total amount of bonded indebtedness of the island to 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its

Mr. SMOOT. Does that mean 7 per cent of the indebtedness as far as the State is concerned or as far as the State and the subdivision or the municipality are concerned?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It says "public indebtedness of Porto Rico."

Mr. SMOOT. "Or."

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)-

Or of any subdivision or municipality thereof shall be authorized or lowed in excess of 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its allowed in

My understanding of that is that the municipality can have My understanding or that is that the municipality can have a bonded indebtedness of not exceeding 7 per cent of its valuation, and the Territory or the island can have a bonded indebtedness not exceeding 7 per cent of the tax valuation.

Mr. SMOOT. Or a subdivision?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the word "subdivision" should not be in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be that they have some subdivisions, but I do not believe that they have for municipal purposes

Mr. SMOOT. What I was trying to learn was whether any subdivision of Porto Rico will be allowed to incur an indebtedness of 7 per cent of the value of the property of Porto Rico.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Evidently no subdivision would be allowed to incur an indebtedness in excess of 7 per cent of the tax valuation in that subdivision.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that that construction will be placed upon it, but really it looks to me like the aggregate amount of indebtedness on the value of all property in Porto Rico, subdivision or municipality, shall never exceed 7 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You mean the total of it all?

Mr. SMOOT. Of it all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have no way, it seems to me, of deter-ining that amount. I think that provision is in the constitumining that amount. tions of most of the States.

Mr. SMOOT. In most of the States, of course, it only applies to 5 per cent of the valuation of the property.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; but, for instance, in the city of Denver there is that same limitation; the State of Colorado has the same; and so in all the other counties. The city of Denver, being in Denver County, it would be the same. It might make a variation there.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, of course, that some cities allow 72 per cent; some allow 5 per cent; and some allow as low as 3 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. The authority for that, however, is always In other words, we are not passing a law for the This law says "the aggregate tax valuation of its prop-Does the Senator mean by it the Porto Rican property, or does he mean the Porto Rican property or the subdivision property or the municipality property?

Mr. SHAFROTH. When it is applied to Porto Rico, its property; when applied to a municipality, then its property. The word "subdivision" was inserted there as a Senate committee amendment. It was not put in in the House. If the Senator desires to have it stricken out I am perfectly willing that that shall be done

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care to have it stricken out if there is any good reason why it should remain.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was thought that there are some political subdivisions there that are not in municipalities.

Mr. SMOOT. We certainly do not want to allow a political subdivision the right to incur an indebtedness up to 7 per cent on the taxable valuation of property.

Mr. FALL. The county is a political subdivision, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. A subdivision.

Mr. FALL. They have not any counties in Porto Rico, but under the old Spanish style in all Spanish countries it is the municipality. Municipality does not mean there what it means here. But the word "subdivision" is a definite word.

Mr. WARREN. Is not a school district?

Mr. FALL. They are political subdivisions. Under this wording they would be allowed 7 per cent. The county, or what corresponds to a county, would be allowed 7 per cent and the municipality would be allowed 7 per cent, and Porto Rico itself would be allowed 7 per cent. That would be my construction.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if there are any subdivisions, Mr. FALL. Under the old Spanish law the municipalities did not comprise the limit of a city or town, but comprised a county 20 miles square. Sometimes they comprised 24 miles square, and it was known as a municipality.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to know why this language was inserted, the House having passed the bill without it.

Mr. FALL. My judgment is that it is simply a conflict in understanding-the political subdivisions in Porto Rico-as to what political subdivisions in Porto Rico are. Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I understand he thinks it would allow 7 per cent indebtedness for Porto Rico, and they would yet have the liberty of 7 per cent in each municipality.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that would be correct.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think that is entirely too high a figure?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are various checks on it besides

Mr. WARREN. The Territories-I recall the Territory of Wyoming and some others—by act of Congress were limited to 2 per cent, covering all kinds of indebtedness, and when they came in as States and adopted a constitution they kept within the limit, as I remember, of about 2 per cent, and then provided in cities and school districts different or specific percentages, according to what they did. For instance, a city could allow for sewerage and waterworks beyond the smaller limit that would apply as to ordinary expenses. It seems to me the Senator's understanding is right, and if we are going to have the law provide 7 per cent in Porto Rico and 7 per cent for the various school districts and the counties and subdivisions, whatever it may be, it is in the power of those communities to run away with the credit of their localities and of the country

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are interested in keeping the matter down. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WARREN. So is Cuba, and so have other countries

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have here exactly the same that was allowed in the Philippines bill.

Mr. WARREN. If we are going to have any limit at all, it ought to be one that would be restrictive in fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado if he understands this to be the case. Under this provision there could be an indebtedness of 7 per cent on the aggregate tax valuation of the property of Porto Rico, and there could be the same amount on the municipality. That would be on that property 14 per cent. Then, if there is a subdivision in the municipality, there would be another 7 per cent, and that would be upon the property in the subdivision 21 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator wants to cut out the subdivision, I am perfectly willing. I do not think it applies in many instances there. It may have been intended to apply to a sewer district or something of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we ought to say so, because in all the provisions authorizing the States to use their credit or borrow money it is always specifically stated, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] said, that the percentage shall be so much upon the taxable valuation of the property, and then they can borrow so much for internal improvements. This, it seems to me, is very loose. An authorization of 21 per cent of the taxable property in Porto Rico is pretty heavy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator in charge of the bill will permit me, I suggest that this section go ever.

I think it might be clarified, and there is some little doubt about it. If we do not get through the bill to-night, there will be time to rectify it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. HARDING. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado a question in relation to this section. Is it the intention of the sponsors of the bill to exempt all the subdivision and municipal bonds from Federal and State taxation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that is the provision of the law. Mr. HARDING. That is a provision that is not granted to any State in the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be, but it is the same provision that we have extended to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Ohio will yield to me for a moment, in the consideration of this bill it was thought that this special exemption should be given in order to make this security as attractive as possible. Those people there are undeveloped, and it is for the purpose of enabling them to develop their country to make the securities attractive by extending that exemption. It was thought by the committee that it would probably be better for those people.

Mr. HARDING. I have no insistent objection. I wondered if the reading of the section was clear; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the section will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if it would not be very much better to have the native of Porto Rico make a declaration that he desires to become a citizen of the United States; that is, to provide just the reverse of the proposition in Then a person who had not sufficient interest to become a citizen, or who is indifferent as to whether or not he is a citizen, will not be covered into citizenship, unless he at least shows enough interest to make an application for citi-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Utah that that matter has been the subject of a good deal of controversy in Porto Rico. When the island came into the possession of the United States the Porto Ricans all wanted to become citizens, and there was no protest. The Unionist Party, which is the strong party there, declared in favor of it. Afterwards, on account of certain differences, the Unionist Party declared for independence, and then they became violently opposed to coming into citizenship. Then there was a proposition which was presented here in Congress in favor of collective citizenship; that is, that all Porto Ricans should come into citizenship of the United States unless they file a declaration that they do not so desire.

Mr. President-Mr. FALL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Has it not been the universal custom of the United States in the acquisition of any territory to embody exactly this provision in the treaty of acquisition? It was so in the case of Louisiana in 1803, of Florida in 1819, of New Mexico and California and Arizona and Texas in 1846. In the treaties and in the organic acts with reference to the acquisition of any of that territory there has been just this provision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that is true.

Mr. FALL. All residents there were regarded as citizens of the United States, unless within a limited period of time they declared their intention to remain citizens of some other

Mr. SMOOT. There is, of course, this difference: In all the cases which the Senator from New Mexico has mentioned the territory was a part of this continent, adjoining the United States, and it became a part of the United States through purchase or otherwise. Does the Senator from New Mexico remember how it was as to any territory outside the continental limits of the United States?

Mr. FALL. There was the acquisition of Hawaii. Mr. SMOOT. How was it as to Hawaii? Mr. FALL. The residents of Hawaii all came in as citizens of the United States. Even the Japanese who were born in Hawaii are citizens of the United States. They are now increasing there much more rapidly than any other race we have

Mr. SMOOT. They constitute more than half of all the people of the island.

Mr. FALL. They will soon have control there. have Japanese Delegates in the Congress of the United States. Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah will find that this provision is practically the provision which we have made in every similar instance. As I recollect, the only reason it was not done in the first instance was because of the fact that we had the Philippine proposition at the same time. They did not know exactly what they wanted to do.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it very strange that we should under-take to compel a person in Porto Rico, or in any territory over which we took control, to declare his intention not to become a citizen of the United States. I thought it would be very much better to have every one of them declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States. Then we should know that everyone who did so declare would at least have interest enough in the matter to become a citizen.

Mr. FALL. The theory upon which this Government has ever acquired any further territory has always been that it proposed to erect sovereign States of the Union in that territory as soon as they were fitted for statehood. That has been the universal custom from time immemorial until the acquisition of the Philippine Islands after the war with Spain. It has been the universal custom to incorporate all the inhabitants in the acquired territory immediately as citizens of the United States, except where by treaty provision the mother country ceding that country to the United States required us to allow its citizens the privilege of remaining citizens of the country from which the territory was acquired, in the event they so desired.

For that reason, as I say, in the treaty by which we acquired Louisiana in 1803, Florida in 1819, and the Mexican territory in 1846, the mother country in each instance agreed by treaty that those who did not desire to become citizens of the United States should have the privilege of remaining citizens of France or of Spain or of Mexico, as the case might be. Those who did not within one year-which has been the period heretofore limitedfile a declaration of intention to remain citizens of the foreign country became incorporated immediately as citizens of the United States. Of course it was all upon the theory that eventually those Territories were to be erected into States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, in the hearings before the committee when it had under consideration this bill I was very much impressed by some of the Porto Ricans who came before the committee and gave testimony. I do not think there was one of them who did not deep down in his patriotic heart cherish the hope that some day his country might be an independent sovereign political entity; and down deep in my heart I sympathized with him. I do not think any man, however good he may be, is good enough to govern another man without that man's consent. I know the United States are not good enough to govern Porto Rico without Porto Rico's consent.

So far as I am personally concerned, I really think it is a misfortune for the United States to take that class of people into the body politic. They will never, no, not in a thousand years, understand the genius of our government or share our ideals of government; but the United States has taken this island; the investments that have been made there by American white men will induce the Government to continue to hold it; and if the island is going to become a part of this Republic, I do not see any other way to treat the inhabitants thereof. It is very much more convenient to do it in this way, by one dragnet act, than it would to require them to come individually and to make their requests to be made a part of the Government or to be made citizens of the United States.

We considered that matter carefully, and while I have no desire in the world to coerce them, I really had rather they would not become citizens of the United States. I think we have enough of that element in the body politic already to menace the Nation with mongrelization; but if the Porto Ricans are going to be held against their will, as we are holding them now, then we ought to legislate for their interests. We should make the coercion as palatable as possible.

Mr. FALL. It is our duty to give them some citizenship, is it not?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator that we ought to do that if we are going to hold them. We have taken them against their will; we are holding them now against their will. If it were submitted to a vote, there would not be 1 per cent who would vote in favor of becoming a part of these United States.

Mr. FALL. We have deprived them, however, of the protection of Spain. They can no longer appeal to their mother country as Spanish citizens; they can not appeal to the United States today as American citizens; they can not appeal, of course, to Porto Rico, because Porto Rico can not enforce their rights anywhere in the world they may go. We have placed these people in the most anomalous position that the people of almost any country were ever placed in; they are citizens of no country.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Absolutely; and I do not think that the natives there are getting what they are entitled to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did the testimony before the committee show such a condition existing as that just pictured by the Senator from Mississippi, that not 1 per cent of the Porto Rican people would vote in favor of becoming citizens of the United States?

Mr. VARDAMAN. That was not stated in the testimony. There were some eloquent statements made before the committee. One young man appeared before the committee, with whom I was greatly impressed, who pleaded for the independence of Porto Rico, for the right to govern their own country, for the sanctity of their home that had been invaded and the sovereignty over which had been taken from them; but recognizing the fact, which any well-informed man who understands the Anglo-Saxon disposition in dealing with subject provinces will recognize, that independence is impossible, and since independence is not going to be given them, the majority of them expressed a desire to come in under the terms of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question of the Senator because I have received very many letters and petitions asking for the passage of legislation along this line, and also inclosing very many resolutions passed by organizations in Porto Rico-business organizations, religious organizations, and political organizations-and I thought from the correspondence that I have had and the information I have received that a great majority of the people of Porto Rico desired this legislation and preferred it even to independence.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, I do not think that any of them do, but they realize that independence is impossible.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it is possible I may have misunderstood the statement of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman]; but if I interpret his statement correctly, it was to the effect that not to exceed 1 per cent of the Porto Ricans would vote to become citizens of the United

Mr. VARDAMAN. I stated that merely as my opinion. If the question of independence were submitted to them, to choose between being a dependency of the United States or having their independence, I do not believe I per cent of them would vote to become a part of the United States. If they should do otherwise they would prove themselves utterly unfit for citizenship in a free country, for a man who does not desire to be free and independent has not the elements of manhood in him essential to the making of a desirable citizen of this Republic.

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly the way I understood the Senator from Mississippi. I was just going to say that it seems to me that it is not wise for us at this time to enact a law that will compel those people to become citizens of the United States. because that is not government by the consent of the governed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me,

I differ with the Senator from Mississippi with relation to that There was a time when the parties to which I have referred insisted upon the right of independence, but since the European war broke out, and they see how helpless small nationalities are, they have ceased any agitation against this provision of the bill, and we have now in Washington representatives of the Unionist Party and representatives of the Republican Party, both satisfied with this very provision of the bill. For that reason, I believe that the great mass of the people down there are in favor of this provision.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, that statement does not help the situation at all. That would be a matter of fear, and not a question of patriotism.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will state, if the Senator will permit me, that, in my judgment, the conclusion reached by those people was brought about by our failure to give the Filipinos their independence. Those who have any intelligence realize that they are not going to be given their independence, and, since that is not going to be done, they prefer to have this bill. The Senator from Colorado is correct when he says that they would rather have this bill passed as it is than to live as they are living to-day. If, however, you will give them the slightest excuse to hope for independence, I repeat what I said, that I do not believe 1 per cent of them would prefer being a part, a subject province, of the United States to being independent; and it is perfectly natural that they should so feel; but if we do not enact this legislation now, our failure to do so will, I fear, serve to encourage those people to hope for the unattainable.

Mr. GRONNA. Or, in other words, we are simply giving them rights which they in the future will not exercise; we are giving them the same privileges that are given other citizens of the Over 250,000 vote there now. They have exercised the privileges accorded them and they want to retain the privileges which accorded them and they want to retain the privileges which they have had all the time. So far as this provision is con-cerned, I am satisfied that they will not only consent to it, but that they will be glad to get it just as it has been written in

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, we have had before us a bill which seeks to prevent certain people from entering our borders. Of course, I admit we are not under obligations to them as we are under obligations to the Porto Ricans, but under the immigration bill which we have had before us we exclude people who do want to come to our shores and who are anxious to become citizens of the United States. On the other hand, we are trying to pass a bill here to-night compelling the people of Porto Rico, unwilling though they may be, to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, I have always believed that patriotism is what makes the citizen; that the mere fact of passing a bill or enacting a law does not make for good citizenship. Unless the people whom we make citizens desire to become a part of our great Government, unless patriotic motives move them to ask for this great privilege, I do not think we are helping our Government by taking in a class of that kind.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield to the Senator. Mr. HARDING. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if section 5 does not make it possible for any resident of Porto Rico to refrain from becoming a citizen if he so desires?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I understand that. But that is an entirely different thing. There may be many Porto Ricans who will not know in six months that a law has been passed by the United States Congress making them citizens of the United States, whether they want to be citizens or not.

Mr. HARDING. If that be true, I do not think it will make very much difference to such a citizen to what Government he gives his allegiance.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, I want to ask the Senator is that the character of people that we want to have as citizens of the United States

Mr. HARDING, Well, in the uplifting work in which this Government is engaging I think it is becoming for us to make worthy people of such as we can.

Mr. GRONNA. We have just been dealing with the aboriginies of this country, the American Indians, and we are com-plaining because we have to provide appropriations of public funds to civilize them and to educate them. We have heard a great deal of complaint on that account on this floor within the last two days. Now, we are taking in all classes of people and providing that anyone who lives in this country and on this island, whether it is a Jap or whether it is an Asiatic belonging to any other country, shall be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. President, I shall not, of course, object—it would make very litle difference whether I should object or not—but I want at least to give these people a year to think it over. Six months is not sufficient time; and I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado if he would object to striking out "six months" and providing that the time shall be 12 months?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept that amendment. It is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. GRONNA. I make that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 7, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "six months" and insert "one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Also in line 22 of the same page.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is right.
The Secretary. It is also proposed, in line 22, to strike out The Secretary. It is also proposed, in line 22, to strike out six months" and insert "one year."
The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GRONNA. Also in line 24.
The Secretary. In line 24, page 7, the same amendment is proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Also in line 3 of page 8.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "six months" and insert "one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to the end of section 7, the last section read being as follows:

United States, privileges which, according to the statements of members of the committee, they never will accept or exercise.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand the Senator. I think, if voting is a test, that they will exercise the privileges accorded.

SEC. 7. That all property which may have been acquired in Porto Rico by the United States under the cession of Spain in the treaty of peace entered into on the 10th day of December, 1898, in any public bridges, road houses, water powers, highways, unnavigable streams and the beds thereof, subterranean waters, mines or minerals under the surface of private lands, all property which at the time of the cession belonged, under the laws of Spain then in force, to the various harbor works boards of Porto Rico, all the harbor shores, docks, slips, reclaimed lands, and all public lands and buildings not heretofore reserved by the United States for public purposes, is hereby placed under the control of the government of Porto Rico, to be administered for the benefit of the people of Porto Rico; and the Legislature of Porto Rico shall have authority, subject to the limitations imposed upon all its acts, to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable: Provided, That the President may from time to time, in his discretion, convey to the people of Porto Rico such lands, buildings, or interests in lands or other property now owned by the United States and within the territorial limits of Porto Rico as in his opinion are no longer needed for purposes of the United States. And he may from time to time accept by legislative grant from Porto Rico any lands, buildings, or other interests or property which may be needed for public purposes by the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I am asking for information only: Have proper reservations been made for Army and Navy posts? Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will notice the language of the bill, it provides that certain property of the United States shall be placed under the control of Porto Rico. We do not lose the title to it, and it is intended that if we need it for military purposes we can use it. It is not the title that we grant to them, but simply the control of it for the time

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think that they would naturally conclude that it amounts to the same thing? Does the Senator think that we should specifically retain anything further than what has been retained?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think so. I think it is done for that very purpose. And it does not provide that this shall be done as to all of the property; it provides that it shall be done as to public lands and buildings not heretofore reserved.

Mr. WARREN. If our reservations have been complete, very well. I did not understand, however, that they were complete.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. Mr. WARREN. Is not something further needed for the Navy?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have been for 18 years studying the question of what they needed down there. If the Senator in the meantime can suggest any amendment, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. WARREN. No; I merely asked for that information, to know whether both the Army and Navy and other branches of the Government had considered the pendency of this bill and its terms so that they have made the reservations necessary. If the Senator can assure me that they have, that is all I desire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can state that this bill originally came from the War Department, and consequently they evidently did take that matter into consideration.

Mr. WARREN. So far as the War Department is concerned, yes; but not the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed,

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 11, line 10, after the words "United States," to strike out "whether on articles produced and used within the island or," and in line 13, after the words "United States," to insert "or consumed in the island," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in Porto Rico as in the United States, except the internal-revenue laws: Provided, however, Hunted States, on articles produced under the internal-revenue laws of the United States, on articles produced in Porto Rico and transported to the United States, or consumed in the island, shall be covered into the treasury of Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 11, line 20, after the word "act," to strike out "must" and insert "shall," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That all judicial process shall run in the name of "United States of America, ss, the President of the United States," and all penal or criminal prosecutions in the local courts shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of "The People of Porto Rico"; and all officials authorized by this act shall be citizens of the United States, and, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Porto Rico.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the committee has an amendment there which I should like to have presented, and it is this: Strike out, in line 20, the words "authorized by this act must" and insert in lieu thereof "and voters in Porto Rico," so that it will read: "And all officials and voters in Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed, on page 11, line 20, to strike out "authorized by this act must" and insert "and voters in Porto Rico shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I also want the word "officials" inserted after the word "offices," in line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 11, line 22, after the word "offices," it is proposed to insert the word "officials."

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that it will read "officials shall take an oath to support the Constitution."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, let us have that read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary. Before the word "shall," on line 22, page 11, it is proposed to insert the word "officials."

Mr. WARREN. I will ask to have the Secretary read it as it will read after it has been amended.

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

And all officials and voters in Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States, and, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, officials shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 11, line 25, after the word "to," to insert "any official of," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That all reports required by law to be made by the governor or heads of departments to any official of the United States shall hereafter be made to an executive department of the Government of the United States to be designated by the President, and the President is hereby authorized to place all matters pertaining to the government of Porto Rico in the jurisdiction of such department.

make the clause read:

That the following executive departments are hereby created: A department of justice, the head of which shall be designated as the attorney general; a department of finance, the head of which shall be designated as the treasurer; a department of the interior, the head of which shall be designated as the commissioner of the interior; a department of education, the head of which shall be designated as the commissioner of education; a department of agriculture and labor; the head of which shall be designated as the commissioner of agriculture and labor; and a department of health, the head of which shall be designated as the commissioner of health. The heads of the four remaining departments shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of Porto Rico. The heads of departments appointed by the governor are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to revert to line 11, page 13, and senator in charge of the bir to revert to line 11, page 13, and ask him if he does not think it would improve the language of the section to strike out the pronoun "his" in line 11 and insert in place thereof "the President's"?

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that it will read how?

Mr. HARDING. So that it will read:

Until communication can be had with the President, and the President's decision therein made known.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to that.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 13, line 11, before the word "decision," it is proposed to strike out the word "his" and insert "the President's."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 20, after the word incumbency," to insert "and those appointed by the governor shall have resided in Porto Rico for at least one year prior to their appointment," so as to make the clause read:

Mr. SHAFROTH I wish to move a committee amendment

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to move a committee amendment there. In line 18, I move to strike out "one year" and insert "ninety days." It seems that the appeal from the auditor should be made in a shorter time.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. There is a mere verbal change that should be made, if I may suggest it to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will be glad to hear it.
Mr. LODGE. Why not strike out "of the," in line 25, and of the," in line 3?
Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well, I have no objection.
Mr. LODGE. I think it makes it a little smoother.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Probably it does.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Again, on page 20, line 25, strike out the words of the."

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only words to be stricken out, I understand, in each instance are the words "of the." The PRESIDING OFFICER. "Of the."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, page 21, line 16, after the word "legislature," to insert "and perform all of the duties of secretary of Porto Rico as now provided by law"; in line 21, after the word "shall," to strike out "designate" and insert "appoint"; and in the same line, after the word "some," to strike out "officer or employee of the government" and insert "person," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 22. That there shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice-and consent of the Senate of Porto Rico, an executive secretary at an annual salary of $4,000, who shall record and preserve the minutes and proceedings of the public-service commission hereinafter provided for and the laws enacted by the legislature and all acts and proceedings of the governor, and promulgate all proclamations and orders of the governor and all laws enacted by the legislature, and perform all of the duties of secretary of Porto Rico as now provided by law, and perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Governor of Porto Rico. In the event of a vacancy in the office, or the absence, illness, or temporary disqualification of such officer, the governor shall appoint some person to discharge the functions of said office during such vacancy, absence, illness, or temporary disqualification.

Mr. LODGE. I move to strike out the words "of the" in line 16, so as to read: "and perform all the duties."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee desires to offer an amendment there. After the word "and," in line 16, page 21, insert: "until otherwise provided by the Legislature of Porto Rico."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to offer another amendment for the committee. After the word "law," in line 17, page 21, I move to insert the words "except as otherwise specified in this

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 16, to insert as a subhead "Legislative department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, page 22, line 17, after the word "legislative," to strike out "power" and insert "powers," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. That all local legislative powers in Porto Rico, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives, and the two houses shall be designated "the Legislature of Porto Rico."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is proper at this juncture to interpose an amendment. I wish to move to strike out on page 23, beginning at the word "and" in line 10, "and who does not own in his individual right taxable property in Porto Rico to the value of not less than $1,000 and assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that we are reading the bill now for action upon the committee amendments and when those are disposed of the bill will be open for individual amendments, and the amendment will then be in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if in any event that amendment will not go over until to-morrow?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know; I am trying to get the bill through to-night, but it does not look like it. The chances are that we will not get it through.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust the Senator will permit it to go over, for there are features which to my democratic thought are very objectionable. On page 24 I find another of a similar character, and then on page 37-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that he will be given an opportunity to express his views and to propose amend-ments, but I should like to run on for a little while and see whether or not we can not complete the bill to-night.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If that is understood, I shall have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are several amendments proposed to the bill besides the committee amendments. Of course, the Senator from New Jersey can withhold his amendment until the committee amendments are acted upon.

The next amendment was in section 26, page 23, line 12, after "$1,000," to insert "assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes," so as to read:

SEC. 26. That the Senate of Porto Rico shall consist of 19 members elected for terms of four years by the qualified electors of Porto Rico. Each of the seven senatorial districts defined as hereinafter provided shall have the right to elect two senators, and in addition thereto there shall be elected five senators at large. No person shall be a member of the Senate of Porto Rico who is not over 30 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of Porto Rico for at least two consecutive years, and, except in the case of senators at large, an actual resident of the senatorial district from which chosen for a period of at least one year prior to his election, and who does not own in his individual right taxable property in Porto Rico to the value of not less than $1,000 assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will go over. The next amendment was, in section 26, page 23, line 19, after the word "senate," to insert "for the session," and in line 22, before the word "elected," to insert "declared," so as to read:

Except as herein otherwise provided, the Senate of Porto Rico shall exercise all of the purely legislative powers and functions heretofore exercised by the executive council, including confirmation of appointments; but appointments made while the senate is not in session shall be effective either until disapproved or until the next adjournment of the senate for the session. In electing the five senators at large each elector shall be permitted to vote for but one candidate, and the five candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be declared elector.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire of the Senator if he has thought out exactly how that system would work. For instance, each elector is to vote for only one of the five candidates for senator at large, and it might be possible that a man might be elected senator who would not get over three or four votes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator the object of that is to have minerity representation and not the political system of putting up a set of nominees and sweeping them in by the same vote. It was thought wise in Porto Rico to have a minority representation, so that they could concentrate their vote on one, and by that means a minority of the voters down there would have one representative in the senate. That was the object and purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can see the object; but the point I have in mind is that the electors, for instance, can only vote for one and there are five to be elected. It might be possible that these electors will know A, B, C, and D, and perhaps will not know some one else who might be fit for the senate. They might not vote for more than four, and it might be that one man would get one vote and be elected senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think there is any likelihood of that, because any man who gets a nomination from any political party will have some strength. The object is to give minority representation, so that there will not be a solid vote of one political party down there.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is supposed that there will be nominations before the election?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; there will be nominations before the election. For instance, the Socialist Party would have by that means an opportunity to have one man in the senate or in the house.

Mr. FALL. It would be perfectly feasible, however, to elect one, as the Senator from Florida suggests. Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not likely that there would be one man not voted for.

Mr. FALL. Is it not possible?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is possible, but hardly conceivable. The man would be nominated by a political party and he would get some votes

Mr. KENYON. Each candidate could vote for himself, I take it.

Mr. FALL. If there is a provision that each candidate can vote for himself, in all probability under the provision five would be elected, but it is very possible there would be no opposing candidate if only five were candidates and they were all agreed and nominated by one convention or by two conventions getting The bodies would then have to mutually agree so as together. to enable them to elect five.

The next amendment was, in section 27, page 24, line 8, after the word "right," to strike out "taxable" and insert "and pay taxes upon," and in line 9, after the words "Porto Rico," to insert "of the assessed value of not less than $500," so as to make the section read:

make the section read:

SEC, 27. That the House of Representatives of Porto Rico shall consist of 39 members elected quadrennially by the qualified electors of Porto Rico, as hereinafter provided. Each of the representative districts hereinafter provided for shall have the right to elect one representative, and in addition thereto there shall be elected four representatives at large. No person shall be a member of the house of representatives who is not over 25 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who does not own in his individual right and pay taxes upon property, real or personal, situated in Porto Rico, of the assessed value of not less than $500, and, except in the case of representative at large, who has not been a bona fide resident of the district from which elected for at least one year prior to his election. In electing the four representatives at large, each elector shall be permitted to vote for but one candidate and the four candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be elected.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to make a reservation on page 24, line 7, beginning with the word "and" and encompassing that portion of the line and the eighth and ninth, down to and including the words "assessed value of not less than

Mr. SHAFROTH. That will come up at the time when individual amendments are offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 28, page 24, line 21, after the words "made by a," to strike out "commission of three persons to be appointed by the governor, one member of which shall be chosen by him from each of the two political parties casting the highest number of votes at the last general election, and the third member of which shall be chosen at his discretion," and insert "the executive council of Porto Rico"; on page 25, line 5, after the word "said," to strike out "commission" and insert "executive council"; in line 9, before the word "days," to strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty"; and in line 10, after the word "final," to strike out "In case said commission shall fail within such period to make a report redistricting the island, then the executive council of Porto Rico shall be empowered, and shall proceed at once, to redistrict the island as indicated, and their report, when approved by the governor, shall be final," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 28. That for the purpose of elections hereafter to the legislature the island of Porto Rico shall be divided into 35 representative districts, composed of contiguous and compact territory and established, so far as practicable, upon the basis of equal population. The division into and the demarcation of such districts shall be made by the executive council of Porto Rico. Division of districts shall be made as nearly as practicable to conform to the topographical nature of the land, with regard to roads and other means of communication and to natural barriers. Said executive council shall also divide the island of Porto Rico into seven senatorial districts, each composed of five contiguous and compact representative districts. They shall make their report within 30 days after the approval of this act, which report, when approved by the governor, shall be final.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 29, page 26, line 6, after the word "boundaries," to insert "of senatorial and representative districts and," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 29. That the next election in Porto Rico shall be held in the year 1916 upon the date now provided by law, and that there shall then be chosen senators and representatives as herein provided. Thereafter such elections shall be held every four years. That all other elective officials, except those as to which it is otherwise provided in this act, shall be elected upon the same date, beginning with the year 1920, and that the term of office of all municipal officials expiring at the close of the year 1918 is hereby extended until the officials who may be elected to fill such municipal offices in 1920 shall have duly qualified: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Legislature of Porto Rico at any time to revise the boundaries of senatorial and representative districts and of any municipality or to abolish any municipality and the officers provided therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge if he does not wish to change the date on page 25?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was just going to call attention to section 29, which provides that

Mr. GRONNA. The date 1916 should be changed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the Chair has recognized the Senator from North Dakota, who is suggesting an amendment on page 25. Then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is all right.

Mr. GRONNA. The bill provides for an election in Porto Rico in 1916, and the date should be changed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I recognize that that should be changed, but I thought we would take that up when the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] presents an amendment which he has introduced here, which somewhat changes it all, For that reason I ask that the paragraph may go over until the Senator from Washington presents his amendment, when individual amendments are in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Colorado to accept the amendment changing the

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think we had better let the section go over without any amendment, because the Senator from Washington has a very comprehensive amendment which he is going to present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the section will go over.

The reading of the bill was resumed at section 30, on page 26. Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the committee has an amendment to offer at that point to strike out lines 9 and 10 and the first four words of line 11, on page 26, and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 26 it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 9, the words "That the terms of office of senators and representatives shall be four years from the 1st of January following their election" and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the term of office of senators and representatives chosen by the first general election shall be until January 1, 1921, and the terms of office of senators and representatives chosen at subsequent elections shall be four years from the 2d of January following their election.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, in section 30, page 26, line 17, after the word "occurred," to insert:

And no senator or representative shall, during the time for which he shall have been elected, be appointed to any civil office under the government of Porto Rico, nor be appointed to any office created by act of such legislature until four years after his term of office shall have

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 31, page 26, line 25, after the words "per day," to insert "for the first 90 days of each regular session and $1 per day for each additional day of such session," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. That members of the Senate and House of Representatives of Porto Rico shall receive compensation at the rate of $7 per day for the first 90 days of each regular session and $1 per day for each additional day of such session while in session and mileage for each session at the rate of 10 cents per kilometer for each kilometer actually and necessarily traveled in going from their legislative districts to the capital and therefrom to their place of residence in their districts by the usual routes of travel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 33, on page 27.

Mr. SHAFROTH Mr. President, the committee has an amendment to offer at that point, to strike out, on page 27, from line 17 to 20 and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 27 it is proposed to strike out the following language:

That the first regular session of the Legislature of Porto Rico provided for by this act shall convene on the second Monday in February, 1917, and biennially thereafter.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the first regular session of the Legislature of Porto Rico provided for by this act shall convene on the 28th day after the next election provided for herein, and regular sessions of the legislature shall be held blennially thereafter, convening on the second Monday in February of the year 1919 and on the second Monday in February of each second year thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, in section 33, page 27, line 20, after the word "thereafter," to strike out "but no regular session shall continue longer than 90 days, not including Sundays, holidays, or days during which both houses may by concurrent resolution, with the approval of the governor, have agreed to a recess"; on page 28, line 1, after the words "require it," to strike out "and shall call the senate in special session at least once each year on the second Monday in February of those years in which a regular session of the legislature is not provided for"; and in line 7, after the word "call," to insert " and he shall call the senate in special session at least once each year on the second Monday in February of those years in which a regular session of the legislature is not provided for," so as to read:

The governor may call special sessions of the legislature or of the senate at any time when in his opinion the public interest may require it, but no special session shall continue longer than 10 days, not including Sundays and holidays, and no legislation shall be considered at such session other than that specified in the call, and he shall call the senate in special session at least once each year on the second Monday in February of those years in which a regular session of the legislature is not provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 34, on page 28, line 14.

Mr. SHAFROTH. After the name "Porto Rico," in line 14. page 28, the committee desires to insert the words "except as hereinafter provided."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary. On page 28, line 14, after the name "Porto Rico," it is proposed to insert "except as hereinafter provided," so as to read:

SEC. 34. That the enacting clause of the laws shall be as to acts, "Be it enacted by the Legislature of Porto Rico." and as to joint resolutions, "Be it resolved by the Legislature of Porto Rico," except as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, in section 34, page 28, line 20, after the word "majority," to insert "yea-and-nay"; in line 21, after the word "house," to insert "and entered upon the journal"; and, in line 25, after the word "to," to strike out "that" and insert "the," so as to read:

"the," so as to read:

That the enacting clause of the laws shall be as to acts, "Be it enacted by the Legislature of Porto Rico," and as to joint resolutions, "Be it resolved by the Legislature of Porto Rico." Bills and joint resolutions may originate in either house. The governor shall submit at the opening of each regular session of the legislature a budget of receipts and expenditures, which shall be the basis of the ensuing biennial appropriation bill. No bill shall become a law until it be passed in each house by a majority yea-and-nay vote of all the members belonging to such house and entered upon the journal and be approved by the governor within 10 days thereafter. If when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for his signature he approves the same, he shall sign it; or if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, which house shall enter his objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 14,

Mr. SHAFROTH. At that point, on line 14, after the word "law," I move to insert the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 29, line 14, after the word "law," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the President of the United States shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within 90 days from and after its submission for his approval; and if not approved by him within such time, it shall become a law the same as if it has been specifically approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, in section 34, page 29, line 17, after the word "items," to insert "or any part or parts, portion or portions thereof"; in line 20, after the word "items," to insert "parts or portions thereof"; and, on page 30, line 1, before the word "days," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty," so as to rend:

If any bill presented to the governor contains several items of appropriation of money, he may object to one or more of such items, or any part or parts, portion or portions thereof, while approving of the other portion of the bill. In such case he shall append to the bill, at the time of signing it, a statement of the items parts or portions thereof to which he objects, and the appropriation so objected to shall not take effect. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within 16 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevents its return, in which case it shall be a law if signed by the governor within 30 days after receipt by him; otherwise it shall not be a law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 15, to insert: The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 15, to insert:

Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and may, in its discretion, from time to time publish the same, except such parts as require secrecy, and the yeas and nays on any question shall, at the desire of any two members, be entered on the journal.

The session of each house and of the committees of the whole shall be open, unless when the business is such as ought to be kept secret, in which event a motion must be passed by a yea-and-nay vote authorizing the secret session.

Neither house shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting.

No law shall be passed except by bill, and no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose.

or amended on its passage through either house as to change its eriginal purpose.

No act of the legislature shall take effect until 90 days after its passage, unless in case of emergency (which shall be expressed in the preamble or body of the act) the legislature shall by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house otherwise direct. No bill except the general appropriation bill for the expenses of the government only, introduced in either house of the legislature after the first 40 days of the session, shall become a law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question in regard to the provision relating to secret sessions. I think that perhaps it has been changed since I read it and since it was considered in committee. What is the use of providing for secret sessions in the Porto Rican Legislature? Does the Senator think it is a good idea for Congress to bequeath to these people that unfortunate custom that prevails here?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There might come up for consideration by the Porto Rican Legislature some question which would make the holding of a secret session desirable. This provision is similar to general provisions in State constitutions; but if the Senator moves to strike it out, I shall not resist his motion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I reserve the right to do so.

Mr. FALL. I will make the motion right now, and settle it. Mr. VARDAMAN. I think it will be better to strike it out.

I do not see any necessity for it at all.

If the Legislature of Porto Rico is authorized to legislate for the people of Porto Rico, it has itself enough in-telligence to know whether or not it ought to go into secret session. If it thinks it should, it can do so by vote, without the Congress of the United States imposing a secret session on them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator will make that motion. Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, this does not force secret sessions on them. It simply gives permission to hold such

Mr. FALL. They will be permitted to hold them if they have all the legislative powers we give them here, without saying anything on the subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I move that that provision be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator does not mean the entire paragraph, as I understand it, but only from the word "open," in line 22.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I mean the provision in regard to secret

Mr. SHAFROTH. The part which the Senator moves to strike out is all after the word "open," in line 22, the remainder of that paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 22, after the word "open," it is proposed to strike out "unless when the business is such as ought to be kept secret, in which event a motion must be passed by a yea-and-nay vote authorizing the secret session."

Mr. HARDING. Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how the Legislature of Porto Rico can elect to hold a secret session under that provision in the organic law?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, we are striking out that part now, so that there will be no secret sessions held.

Mr. HARDING. I understand we are striking it out, so that the organic law will specifically provide that—

The sessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall

Mr. SHAFROTH.

Mr. HARDING. If it is desired to leave it optional, the whole paragraph should be stricken out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There seems to be objection to that. I am generally in favor of open sessions. This provision, however, was put in with the idea that it was wise to do so, but I have got to get this bill through.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let it go out. It does no good, and may do some harm.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The objection which is made by the Senator from New Mexico and by the Senator from Mississippi is that they are opposed to any permission to hold secret sessions

Mr. FALL. I am opposed to secret sessions there or here or anywhere else.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So, I accept the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Very well; let it go out.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire what it is proposed to strike out? Is it proposed to strike out the whole paragraph or only the words after the word "open."

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "open," so that it will read:

The sessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, that will leave the bill, then, so that the sessions of the legislative bodies of Porto Rico and of committees of the whole must be open.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, I am very strongly in favor of that; but I think it smacks a good deal of hypocrisy for a body that holds secret sessions and keeps up the antiquated and hoary-headed fetich itself to impose open sessions on these

Mr. VARDAMAN. We are trying to tell the people of Porto Rico in their government to do what they ought to do, and not to do as we do.

Mr. KENYON. We had better reform ourselves first.
Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, some of us want to do that; but we can not. We can, however, do this.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I object to the acceptance of the amendment. I am not in accord with the Senators about I can understand that there are occasions when there must be secret sessions of a legislative body, notwithstanding the disposition to throw everything open. I am opposed to putting a provision in the organic law of Porto Rico that absolutely forbids the holding of such sessions. If anything is done, we ought to strike out the entire paragraph or else leave it as it is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARDING. I do.
Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding of the contention that has been made by certain Senators here is not that there shall never be any secret sessions of the senate. The Senate from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], for instance, who I know has been quite active in that matter, has simply contended for a change in the regular custom, so that instead of having the regular custom of secret sessions in connection with all executive business, his idea is that sessions should be open except in those special cases where the senate decides it necessary to have closed sessions.

While I am on my feet I should like to call attention to one other matter in this amendment which is now proposed to be stricken out, and that is the proviso that requires a yea-and-nay vote before a secret session is held. I think that is a very good provision, so that men who vote for a secret session will be known and their votes will be recorded. There is in that a good deal of the same sort of protection as in the provision of our own Constitution, which gives the right to a yea-and-nay vote under certain circumstances.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from Washington will agree, will he not, that if the sentence be left in the organic actsessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall be open "-no secret session will be possible; that it would not be lawful ever to hold a secret session?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do agree to that, and what I have just said was intended to be in agreement with the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio offer an amendment to strike out the words "the sessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall be open "?

Mr. HARDING. I have some doubt about the wisdom of striking out the entire paragraph from line 21 to line 24, inclusive; but if anything is stricken out the entire paragraph should be stricken out. Personally, I am in favor of leaving it as it is, because we embody the suggested reform as affecting the United States Senate by leaving in the organic act as here provided a provision for the holding of secret sessions on motion, after a

Mr. SHAFROTH. We are trying to expedite matters as much as we can, for I do not know when I shall be able to get another session for the consideration of this bill, and I will ask the Senator if he will consent to let that go over? Mr. HARDING. If the whole paragraph goes over, I have no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the clause goes over I have one word I wish to say about it. The Senate of the United States could very well modify its rules and provide possibly for secret sessions for the consideration of foreign affairs and open sessions as to other matters. The Legislature of Porto Rico will have no right to consider foreign affairs; there will never be any foreign affairs or treaties or matters of that kind brought before the legislature of that island. The senate of Porto Rico may act, as is the case in the Senate of the United States, on nominations sent to it. The senate of Porto Rico may act in the matter of the confirmation of those officials who are appointed by the governor, but that would be the only case, reasoning by analogy, when they would go into secret ses-

I do not believe in secret sessions, and I do not believe in authorizing these people to hold secret sessions of their legislature when we are just making them citizens of the United States. I believe in compelling them to conduct the business that comes before them in open and not in secret session, particularly in view of the statement that has been made here by the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge, that these very people would prefer, if possible, if they could bring it about, to become citizens of Porto Rico or to have an independent government and not remain citizens of the United States. We are conferring upon them, to my mind, the greatest privilege that a living human being can have, namely, citizen-ship of the United States; and I believe in compelling these people whom we are endeavoring to make American citizens to conduct the legislative business that we are placing in their hands in open and not in secret sessions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator any objection to letting this matter go over to a later time?

Mr. FALL. I have no objection to that, but I wanted to express myself now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. President, I want to express my concur-Mr. JONES. rence in what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] has While I am in favor sometimes of having secret sessions in the Senate, I think, as a general rule, the sessions of the Senate should be open. I can appreciate some situations that would warrant us in holding secret sessions, but I can not think of any condition of affairs that would warrant these people to transact their business in secret session. I do not remember of any case in connection with the organization of a Territorial government for any of the Territories that have subsequently become States where we have ever had any provision of this kind, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if there are such instances?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; in the constitution of the State of Colorado this identical provision is found.

Mr. FALL. Yes; but not in the organic act by the Congress of the United States creating it a Territory.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but in the constitution of the State a similar provision is found.

Mr. JONES. That is your State constitution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not insisting upon it. The only thing I should like to do is to get this matter passed over, so that we can make some headway with the bill. No doubt if it comes up

Mr. JONES. Of course it will come up again if it is passed

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; it will come up again. Mr. JONES. I think it ought to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. After the word "legislature," in line 6, page 31, I move to insert "except the general appropriation bills for the expenses of the government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 31, line 6, after the word "legislature," it is proposed to insert "except the general appropriation bills for the expenses of the government."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment, as

No bill shall be considered or become a law unless referred to a committee, returned therefrom, and printed for the use of the members. No bill, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be embraced in any act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be ended only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.

Every bill shall be read at length, on three different days, in each house; all substantial amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill; and no bill shall become a law except by vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

Except as otherwise provided in this act, no law shall extend the term of any public officer, or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment, nor permit any officer or employee to draw compensation for more than one office or position.

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments, as in case of other bills. The general appropriation bill shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, interest on the public debt, and for public schools. All other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing but one subject.

The legislature shall not delegate to any special commission.

The legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, or association any power to make, supervise, or interfere with any municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes, or to perform any municipal function whatever.

No obligation or Hability of any person, association, or corporation, held or owned by Porto Rico, or any municipal corporation therein, shall ever be exchanged, transferred, remitted, released, or postponed, or in any way diminished by the legislature, nor shall such Hability or obligation be extinguished except by payment thereof into the proper treasury.

any way diminished by the legislature, nor small such information of congation be extinguished except by payment thereof into the proper treasury.

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on the question of adjournment, or relating solely to the transaction of business of the two houses, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of both houses, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a structure.

Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, offer, give, or promise any money or thing of value, testimonial, privilege, or personal advantage to any executive or judicial officer or member of the legislature to influence him in the performance of any of his public or official duties, shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

The offense of corrupt solicitation of members of the legislature, or of public officers of Porto Rico, or of any municipal division thereof, and any occupation or practice of solicitation of such members or officers to influence their official action, shall be defined by law, and shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

A member who has a personal or private interest in any measure or bill proposed or pending before the legislature shall disclose the fact to the house of which he is a member, and shall not vote thereon.

In case the available revenues of Porto Rico for any fiscal year are insufficient to meet all the appropriations made by the legislature for such year, such appropriations shall be paid in the following order:

Mr. SHAFROTH. In line 12, page 35, after the word "year," I move to insert "including available surplus in the insular treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 12, page 35, after the word "year," it is proposed to insert "including available surplus in the insular treasury."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, what are we agreeing to now? Several amendments have been passed over, and some modifications have been made; but this is all one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is all one amendment proposed by the committee. The Senator from Colorado is merely perfecting his amendment. It will all come up for consideration as amended.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but what I am getting at is this: As we pass each of these paragraphs, is it understood that they are agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is all one amendment. The part the Secretary has been reading for some time is all one amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I said, but the chairman says "no." What I am getting at is this: I understand that the chairman is very anxious to have the bill read through instead of taking up these matters and disposing of them as we come to them. For that reason there are some things I do not care to-night to raise a question about.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that if, at any time, he wishes to recur to any of these provisions, I shall be perfectly willing to cooperate with him in any way to have the matter come before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that the matter commencing on page 30, line 16, on up as far as the Secretary has gone, is all one amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. All one amendment, and yet part of it has been passed over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. And up to line 18, on page 36, it is all one amendment. The Senator from Colorado is merely offering his amendments to the amendment to perfect it. Then it will be submitted for agreement or rejection. The Secretary will continue the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment, as follows:

First class. The ordinary expenses of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the State government, and interest on any public debt, shall first be paid in full.

Second class. Appropriations for all institutions, such as the penitentiary, insane asylum, industrial school, and the like, where the inmates are confined involuntarily, shall next be paid in full.

Third class. Appropriations for education and educational and charitable institutions shall next be paid in full.

Fourth class. Appropriations for any other officer or officers, bureaus or boards, shall next be paid in full.

Fifth class. Appropriations for all other purposes shall next be paid. That in case there are not sufficient revenues for any fiscal year to meet in full the appropriations of said year for all of the said classes of appropriations, then said revenues shall be applied to the classes in the order above named, and if, after the payment of the prior classes in full, there are not sufficient revenues for any fiscal year to pay in full the appropriations for that year for the next class, then, in that event, whatever there may be to apply on account of appropriations for said class shall be distributed among said appropriations pro rata according as the amount of each appropriations for that class shall bear to the total amount of all of said appropriations for that class for said fiscal year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me move an amendment there. After

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me move an amendment there. After the word "year," in line 4, page 36, I move to insert "includ-ing available surplus in the insular treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 36, line 4, after the word "year," it is proposed to insert "including available surplus in the insular treasury.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment, as follows:

All appropriations and parts of appropriations for any fiscal year not paid by the revenues of such fiscal year shall not be or become an obligation of Porto Rico or the treasury thereof.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Now I ask that section 35, beginning on page 36 and running over onto page 37, may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be permitted, the question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. President, that refers to this entire amend-Mr. JONES. ment, commencing on page 30 and going to page 36. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the committee is unanimously in favor of this amendment?
Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator mean this entire amendment?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think there was any objection

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rose to request the chairman of the committee to let this amendment go over. I do not I think when the State issues its obligations and the citizen buys them he ought to be protected. The average man who takes a State warrant does not know whether it is in the first or second class, but he has the right to indulge the presumption that it will be paid. I would rather limit the privilege of the Territory to incur these debts than to permit the citizen to buy them and then be defrauded of his money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the reason of that provision is this: We had in the State of Colorado no law with respect to the issuance of warrants of the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth class; and the result was that there were warrants issued until they piled up a debt, which was paid during my administration by the issuance of bonds to the extent of $2,100,000, which the officers had issued according to the order in which the appropriations had been made. The legislature made vast quantities of appropriations in excess of the estimated revenues.

Now, we have found that by following this law, if you make an appropriation in excess of the revenue, it is no obligation whatever, and the auditor and the treasurer are forbidden to do it; and not since that time has there been a single warrant even issued by the various officers of the State of Colorado.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think it would be better to make it a criminal offense for the legislators and for the fiscal officers of the State to issue these obligations of the State, and thereby protect the citizen who in good faith invests his money in State securities? The average man does not know, when a State warrant is handed to him, whether there is money in the treasury to pay it or not; and if there is not money in the treasury to pay it, if it happens to be one of the third or fourth class, this man is defrauded of his money. is simply justifying the Territory in repudiating its obligations to which I can not give my consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no. The object and purpose of that is to prevent the issuing of them. The people will understand that warrants of the fourth class will not be paid, and consequently the auditor will not issue them. That is a direction to the auditor not to issue them, and it is a direction to the treasurer not to pay them.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] asked a moment ago if the committee was unanimous in this bill. Not, of course, due to any fault of the Senator who has charge of the bill, but merely my own fault, I, as one member of the committee, was not present when this bill was agreed upon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; and I am perfectly willing to let this go over

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let it go over.

Mr. FALL. Let me make this suggestion: We have got to deal with it at some time. You have got to take it up and take the time of the Senate with it at some time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but the reason why I want as much done as possible is so as to show that I am pretty well through with the bill, and I want another night for its consideration. If I state that I have only gotten through 10 or 12 pages, they will say, "Oh, you can not get through that bill in a week."

Mr. FALL. That may be all right, Mr. President; but we are proceeding upon a theory that never has been considered in the creation of an organic act for any Territory of the United States. The Senator has written here a constitution for a sovereign State. He has taken the constitution of the sovereign State of Colorado. Why did he not take the organic act of the Territory of Colorado as enacted by the Congress of the United States as an example?

Mr. SHAFROTH. These are limitations that it seems to me are very desirable, and have proven very desirable in my State.

Mr. FALL. Very well; I have the floor, I think, if the Senator will allow me to proceed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Contains:

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly. Mr. FALL. Then the Senator can answer the objections which I am making.

You are suggesting to us that we pass one after another of these provisions. You limit the legislature as to what it can do by specifically providing for the island a constitution such as the people of the State of Colorado have provided for themselves in their sovereignty. The State of Colorado came in from a Territorial condition by permission of the United States. Prior to that time the people of Colorado had to refer every law that was enacted by the Legislature of Colorado to the Congress of the United States. The people of New Mexico had to do the same thing up until five years ago, until they came into the Union by consent of the Congress. They were not sovereign before that time. In the case of the people of Porto Rico, an island in the Atlantic where you are simply creating a lot of new American citizens, you are making them sovereign—as sovereign as the State of Colorado. The Congress of the United States retains no power to pass upon their acts. Why, sir, there never has been a measure of this kind presented to the Congress of the United States in the creation of a Territory. That is the objection.

Now, look at the absurdity of it. After adopting the constitution of the State of Colorado, with all of its limitations upon the legislative department, then you provide, in section 37:

That the legislative authority herein provided shall extend to all matters of a legislative character.

Without any restriction whatsoever, and still you do not provide that those acts of that legislature shall be referred back to the Congress of the United States for approval or disapproval. Not a State of this Union has ever been admitted which had been created into a Territorial form of government prior to its admission except it had that limitation in its organic act. Congress of the United States has maintained control. For the first time in the history of legislation in this country we are giving absolute constitutional government to the people of Porto Rico, who have never been citizens of the United States. Now, these objections must be met at some time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the provisions that are contained here and which are inserted are limitations. They are not grants.

Mr. FALL. Exactly; they are limitations.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.
Mr. FALL. Then you follow it by a general grant, which any court in the world would construe as conferring upon the legislature all other powers of any kind or character, and your limitation is gone.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. If you confer general powers and then limit those powers, they may be words of limitations. If you undertake to limit powers and then confer absolute, general powers, where is your limitation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, here is our limitation, on page 28:

If when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for his signature he approves the same, he shall sign it; or if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, which house shall enter his objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it.

Mr. FALL. That is simply conferring, not limiting.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Wait; that is a limitation.
Mr. FALL. Oh, no; it is simply conferring the legislative power upon your appointed governor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I understand; but there is another provision, if the Senator will wait just a minute, which I will show him:

If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of all the members of that house shall agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members of that house it shall be sent to the governor, who, in case he shall then not approve, shall transmit the same to the President of the United States. The vote of each house shall be by yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against shall be entered on the journal. If the President of the United States approve the same, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If he shall not approve same, he shall return it to the governor so stating, and it shall not become a law. If any bill presented to the governor—

And so forth

And so forth.

Mr. FALL. Then you are conferring upon the Governor of Porto Rico powers that never were conferred upon the governor of any Territory in the history of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I do not know about that. this: I know that the governor is appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. FALL. As was the governor of every Territory.
Mr. SHAFROTH. And therefore he does not represent the people of the Territory. Consequently, if there is any attempt upon the part of the legislature to do a thing that in any way is not in accordance with the views of the President, there is the governor to check it; and not only that, but the matter comes on appeal to the President of the United States. So it seems to me that it is very well safeguarded.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, to repeat again, every organic act—and I defy the Senator to show an exception—has contained the provision which I have suggested, that the acts of the legislature should be referred to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, now—
Mr. FALL. I will ask the Senator to suspend for one moment, please. Every organic act that I know anything of has vested in the governor of the Territory—the governor appointed by the President of the United States—the veto power, and it has been provided that the legislature could pass a bill over his veto. For the first time, now, you have made another innovation. You have provided that the governor, in the event he vetoes a bill, must forward his veto for approval or disapproval to the President of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the very statement which the Senator makes shows the inconvenience of having every act of the legislature of one of these possessions referred to the Congress of the United States. As chairman of this committee, I have had occasion to have presented to this Congress various bills from the Territory of Hawaii, and some of them have lain for two years without any action of approval whatever; and yet all of the acts of Hawaii do not have to be approved. Some of them do.

Mr. President, the very inconvenience of getting the Senate of the United States to reenact everything that the legislature of Porto Rico will do is something that, it seems to me, should not be the law as to Porto Rico. It appears to me that the limitations that are placed in the bill are limitations for the good of the people. Mr. FALL.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield. Mr. FALL. The chairman does not know anything more about this bill than I do. There is a provision on page 30 that these laws shall be referred to the Congress of the United States, and Congress can nullify them. I did not know it; neither did he.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, Congress could nullify them. There is no doubt about that. It always possesses that power,

Mr. FALL. I withdraw my objection.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not say the law has to be ratified by the Congress. It simply says Congress reserves the right, and it is important that it should reserve the right. What the Senator was talking about was that in the Territorial days everything had to be ratified. Laws do not have to be ratified now

Mr. FALL. The Senator has been mistaken about one or two things to-night as to the contents of the bill; but the Senator did not make any such mistake as that, because the Senator has been familiar with the organic acts of the other Territories. He did not say they had to be referred for ratification to the Congress of the United States, but that they were referred by the organic act itself to the Congress of the United States. This provision on page 30 is the usual provision in organic acts. I simply overlooked the fact that the committee placed the provision in this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. FALL. I have already withdrawn it.
Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.
Mr. JONES. It might be a small matter, but I wish to ask the chairman about the provision beginning on page 31, line 14, which says:

No bill shall be considered or become a law unless referred to a committee, and returned therefrom, and printed for the use of mem-

Does that mean that no bill can be considered that has been referred to a committee until after the committee has reported it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it seems to me so.

Mr. JONES. Does it mean that if a committee sees fit to stifle a bill by not reporting it it can do it, that there is no remedy?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose a minority report can be made. Mr. JONES. It is not a question of supposition. The question is what is meant by that language.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The object of the provision is to prevent the hasty consideration of bills. If the house or the senate are in favor of a measure they can require the committee to

Mr. JONES. That is not what I am trying to get at. Can the committee under this language here be discharged?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose so. It seems to me that that can be done.

Mr. JONES. I doubt it very much. I think this gives the power into the hands of a committee to stifle legislation absolutely if it desires to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator any amendment to offer? Mr. JONES. I think we ought to have a provision there providing that either house may, by a majority vote, discharge a committee from the consideration of any measure referred to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will propose that amendment I will accept it.

Mr. JONES. I propose that amendment. In line 16, after the word "members," I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided. That either house may, by a majority vote, discharge a committee from the consideration of a measure and bring it before the body for consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. Would it not be better to have that language inserted after the word "therefrom," in line 15?

No bill shall be considered or become a law unless referred to a committee, returned therefrom, or discharged from further consideration by the committee in which the bill originated, and printed for the use of the members.

Mr. JONES. I rather think it reads better to put it in as a proviso, authorizing either house by a majority vote to discharge a committee from the consideration of a measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The Secretary. On page 31, line 15, after the word "members" and before the period, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That either house may by a majority vote discharge a committee from the consideration of a measure and bring it before the body for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. As I understand it, the whole amendment goes

Mr. SHAFROTH. And any other amendment to it. We will

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, then, the amendment proposed by the committee as modified will be agreed to except that part reserved by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. JONES. I do not understand the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair says that, without objection, the amendment proposed and which has been read by the Secretary as modified by the amendments offered is agreed to, except that part reserved by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JONES. I do not think that ought to be done, Mr.

President. The Senator from Mississippi has suggested some objections to the same, and I think the whole amendment ought

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the whole amendment will go over. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Before we reach section 35 I should like on page 25, to strike out section 29 and insert in lieu thereof the following.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary. On page 25, line 16, strike out the House text, section 29, and insert:

text, section 29, and insert:

Sec. 29. The next election in Porto Rico shall be held in the year 1917 upon the 16th day of July. At such election there shall be chosen senators, representatives, a Resident Commissioner to the United States, and two public-service commissioners, as herein provided. Thereafter the elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, beginning with the year 1920, and every four years thereafter, and the terms of office of all municipal officials who have heretofore been elected, and whose terms would otherwise expire at the beginning of the year 1919, are hereby extended until the officials who may be elected to fill such offices in 1920 shall have been duly qualified: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Legislature of Porto Rico at any time to revise the boundaries of senatorial and representative districts and of any municipality, or to abolish any municipality and the officers provided therefor.

Mr. LODGE. That seems to me to be a very important amendment. I have listened to it, but I must say I can not understand what the effect of it will be. I think the amendment ought to be printed and go over, so that we can see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and the amendment will go over

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in section 35, page 36, line 24, after the words "Porto Rico," to strike out "who is not" and insert "unless he is"; on page 37, line 1, after the word "is," to strike out "not"; in the same line, after the word "or," to strike out "who is not" and insert "unless having the said qualification of citizenship and age he is"; and, in line 4, after the words "per annum," to insert "Provided, however, That all legally qualified electors of Porta Biog at the last ground clean. legally qualified electors of Porto Rico at the last general election shall be entitled to register and vote at elections for 10 years from and after the passage of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 35. That the qualified electors of Porto Rico, for any election whatsoever, shall consist of those citizens that will be hereafter registered in accordance with the terms of this act and of the laws of Porto Rico hereafter enacted. That no person shall be allowed to register as a voter or to vote in Porto Rico unless he is a citizen of the United States, over 21 years of age, and who is not able to read and write, or unless, having the said qualification of citizenship and age, he is a bona fide taxpayer in his own name in an amount of not less than $3 per annum: Provided, however, That all legally qualified electors of Porto Rico at the last general election shall be entitled to register and vote at elections for 10 years from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask that section 35 down to and including the words "per annum," in line 4, on page 37, may go over. I think I will propose a substitute for it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment and the section goes over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee desires to offer an amendment there, to strike out from lines 8 to 12, inclusive, on page 37, and to insert the following.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 37 strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive, and insert:

That the qualified electors of Porto Rico shall at the next general election choose a Resident Commissioner to the United States, whose term of office shall begin on his qualification and shall continue until the 4th of March, 1921. At each subsequent election, beginning with the year 1920, the qualified electors of Porto Rico shall choose a Resident Commissioner to the United States, whose term of office shall be four years from the 4th of March following such general election.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Right there I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the section preceding section 35 went over, and if this is agreed to you will find yourself in this position: Under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota the citizens of Porto Rico are given 12 months in which to declare their intentions to remain citizens of Porto Rico and not become citizens of the United States. I can make it for the Record, Mr. President, so that the Senator can read it to-morrow, if he can not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is being addressed by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. It is all right. The Senator from New Mexico wishes to place his remarks in the Record so that they may be read. The position the committee is going to find itself in is this, I am afraid: Under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota the period in which every resident of Porto Rico has to determine in his own mind whether he will become a citizen of the United States or not has been extended for 12 months. The election provided in this bill must be held prior to 12 months. Yet the qualification for electors states that they shall be citizens of the United States. They will not be citizens of the United States until they have elected as to whether they will remain citizens of some other country. Or if you allow them all to vote and treat them all as citizens of the United States, then they can vote at the election and thereafter declare that they were not citizens of the United States. In the entire bill, unless you reconcile this by some means, you will have a conflict that will cause you a good deal of trouble.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator desire that this amendment shall go over?

Mr. FALL. I understood it had gone over. I was just making a suggestion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but as for the last amendment I offered-

Mr. FALL. I was not referring to the last one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 35 has already been passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand the point the Senator from New Mexico makes, there will be 12 months to wait before anybody is qualified to vote.

Mr. FALL. Before we know whether they are qualified or not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Exactly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The law provides that they shall be quali-Mr. SHAFROTH. The law provides that they shall be qualified citizens of the United States unless within that time they file a protest. Everybody is presumed to be eligible who voted at the preceding election. It is not intended to take away their right.

Mr. FALL. The situation, I think, will be this: That every man in Porto Rico-Chinaman, Jap, Englishman, German, or anyone else-can vote at the first election unless you prohibit his voting in some way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is limited to those who have voted at the preceding election.

Mr. FALL. And others. You classify them. You are attempting to make qualified voters citizens of the United States, and properly so. No one but a citizen of the United States should be allowed to vote; but you are providing a 12 months' period in which a man can elect to become a citizen. The consequence is that they might all vote at the first election and thereafter declare that they were not going to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The presumption is that they are citizens and that they have the right of citizenship.

Mr. FALL. I can refer the Senator to a case that went to the Supreme Court of the United States from his own State, and also one that went from my State, in which that presumption

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the chairman a question about the proviso in section 35. It is true it has gone over. I read it over rather hurriedly. It provides—

That all legally qualified electors of Porto Rico at the last general election shall be entitled to register and vote at elections for 10 years from and after the passage of this act.

What happens to them after 10 years?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that there is an amendment which is going to be proposed either by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] or by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] which clarifies that and gives them the right to vote continuously without any limitation whatever. I wanted to defer any consideration of that until that amendment is

Mr. JONES. I did not know that.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I was personally in favor of that amendment, but some members of the committee objected, and we compromised on a 10-year basis. But that will come up when the proposition is presented.

Mr. JONES. Was it the idea of the committee to permit these people to vote for 10 years and after that that they could

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the provision and the intention

Mr. JONES. I mean was that the intention in the proviso? Mr. SHAFROTH. The only intention was to have an educational qualification, and that they should be permitted to vote for 10 years, in order to give them the opportunity for 10 years to qualify themselves to vote thereafter. That is the object. But I must say that I was not in favor of that except as a compromise. What I was in favor of was a different provision, which is contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], namely, that they should be entitled to vote just the same as they have been voting, without qualification.

Mr. JONES. That amendment is going to be proposed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it is going to come up

The next amendment was, in section 36, page 38, line 3, before the words "years of age," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the section read:

"twenty-five," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 36. That the qualified electors of Porto Rico shall, at the general election in 1916, and every four years thereafter, choose a Resident Commissioner to the United States, whose term of office shall be four years from the 4th of March following, and who shall be entitled to receive official recognition as such Commissioner by all of the departments of the Government of the United States, upon presentation, through the Department of State, of a certificate of election of the governor of Porto R.co. The Resident Commissioner shall receive a salary, payable monthly by the United States, of $7,500 per annum. Such Commissioner shall be allowed the same sum for stationery and for the pay of necessary clerk hire as is now allowed to Members of the House of Representatives of the United States; and he shall be allowed the sum of $500 as mileage for each session of the House of Representatives and the franking privilege granted Members of Congress. No person shall be eligible to election as Resident Commissioner who is not a bona fide citizen of the United States and who is not more than 25 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language. In case of a vacancy in the office of Resident Commissioner by death, resignation, or otherwise, the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a Resident Commissioner to fill the vacancy, who shall serve until the next general election and until his successor is elected and qualified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 37, page 38, line 21, after the word "legislature," to insert: "but the legislature may in the interest of economy consolidate departments, or abolish any department, with the consent of the President of the United States," so as to make the clause read:

No executive department not provided for in this act shall be created by the legislature, but the legislature may in the interest of economy consolidate departments, or abolish any department, with the consent of the President of the United States.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask about that amendment. First the text provides;

No executive department not provided for in this act shall be created by the legislature

Then the amendment provides:

but the legislature may in the interest of economy consolidate departments, or abolish any department, with the consent of the President of the United States.

Could Congress annul that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe it could under the general provision there.

Mr. JONES. By an act that has the consent of the President? Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so, under the general provision that is contained in section 34, page 30, line 2:

All laws enacted by the Legislature of Porto Rico shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, as provided in section 23 of this act, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same.

So evidently any law which they passed under this amendment would be repealable by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. JONES. As I understand this provision, the legislature may consolidate the departments. It is a little different from the other provisions. I judge the President does not have to give his express consent to the general acts of the legislature before they become effective.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.
Mr. JONES. This provides that the law can not become effective without the consent of the President. It is different from the other provisions. I wanted to know whether if after the President gives his consent Congress can go on without the consent of the President and annul it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so, because the act of Congress receives the consent of the President also in his approval of the annulment which is made.

Mr. JONES. Then, does the act of dissent by Congress require the approval of the President?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. JONES. It does not say so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Congress reserves the power and authority to annul the same. It is by act of Congress

Mr. JONES. The President is not a part of Congress. Mr. SHAFROTH. So far as signing the bill he is.

Mr. JONES. This does not provide that it shall be a bill. Congress can in any way express its dissent to these laws, and then they cease to exist.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think not. The power is reserved to annul the same, and the only way is by a joint resolution or by a bill.

Mr. JONES. I think a concurrent resolution could accomplish the purpose. Mr. SHAFROTH.

I do not think so.

Mr. JONES. That is an act of Congress.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the President is a part of Congress, with relation to the passage of bills. He must sign the bills. Mr. JONES. I do not think it would have to be done by a bill

Mr. CLAPP. It is an affirmative act; but when it comes to a matter of negation, vested in Congress, as this bill provides, it is a question whether the President would have to sign it.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading) All laws enacted by the Legislature of Porto Rico shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, as provided in section 23 of this act, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the

That is, to annul it by an act or by a joint resolution. I will state the object of the amendment. It was thought they might attempt to abolish some department there that is necessary to proper administration and which the President might feel should be retained. On that account we thought it was a wise provision to make in cases of that kind. They were given the power to abolish departments; but if the President dissents, then that would end it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not questioning the wisdom of that, but what I was trying to get at was, after the President has given his consent, as expressly provided for here—and this can not, like general legislation enacted by the legislature, becan not, the general registation charter of the Resident has approved it—whether the general provision giving Congress the power to annul any act of the Porto Rican Legislature would apply in a case like this, so that Congress could annul the act after the President has given his consent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it seems to me that Congress could.
Mr. JONES. Then we would have a conflict between the President and Congress, because the President can approve an act and then Congress can turn around and annul it, and, of course, if the President should veto that act of Congress it would amount to nothing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; Mr. President, as a part of the legislative act the signature of the President is necessary, and it becomes, as a matter of fact, a part of the legislative act.

Mr. JONES. That is what I suggest. Then, in reference to this matter, if the Senator is correct, that the President must sign any resolution that Congress passes dissenting from the act of this legislature, we should have a case where the President, having approved the act of the local legislature, would necessarily disapprove the action of Congress in trying to annul it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If he disapproves it, that is his privilege under the veto power, and Congress, of course, can pass it over his head. In that event the very act which the President signed is annulled, notwithstanding the fact that he signed the original act and made it a law.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but you have an inconsistent proposition here if you require the President to give his consent or his dissent to this act of the legislature before Congress is supposed to pass on it at all. I do not myself believe that this would require the action of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me perfectly plain that this provision does not require the President to approve the legislation; but it is simply a limitation on the legislature. The legislature can not abolish a department or consolidate a department unless the President consents. If the President does consent to the legislation, he only consents that the legislature may do the act contemplated in accordance with this provision, but at the same time Congress has the power under the provision to annul that legislation.

Mr. JONES. After the President approves it?

Mr. FLETCHER. After the President has consented, so far as he is concerned, to the legislation consolidating or abolishing departments

Mr. JONES. That is an approval of it by the President, is it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not left to him to approve the legislation or to disapprove it.

Mr. JONES, Oh, yes, it is.
Mr. FLETCHER, He merely consents to the consolidation or the abolishment of departments.

Mr. JONES. But the legislature may in the interest of economy consolidate departments. How will it do so? legislation. Or it may abolish any department. How? By legislation, with the consent of the President. It passes such legislation and sends it to the President. If he objects to it, that ends it. If he approves, the consolidation becomes effective; and yet does the Senator contend that after the President has approved it and the consolidation has become effective, we can turn around and annul that?

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. JONES. If we can, we can do it without the President's

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; we could do it. If the President's consent was not made necessary here, we could do it just the same whether the President consented or did not consent, or whether we allowed him to consent or not.

Mr. CLAPP. It does not present the inconsistency, I think, which the Senator from Washington thinks it does.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think the consent of the President has anything to do with the character of the legislation except to limit the power of the legislature.

Mr. CLAPP. For instance, the Governor of Porto Rico vetoes a bill and then it is passed over his veto. It is then sent to the President, and if he approves it, it becomes a law; yet that does not interfere at all with Congress subsequently repealing that law. The mere fact that the President acting in one capacity has approved an act, I do not think should be urged as an inconsistency, in view of the power lodged in Congress subsequently to repeal it.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that after the President has approved a law that has been vetoed by the governor and which has been passed over his veto, Congress could not annul that law without the President's consent?

Mr. CLAPP. I am not certain whether under this provi-Mr. CLAPP. I am not certain whether that sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not; but, even sion a mere annulment would require consent or not single consent o if it did, it would not present any serious inconsistency. The President to-day signs a bill, and to-morrow we repeal it, notwithstanding he has signed it.

Mr. JONES. But he has to sign the repealing act also.
Mr. CLAPP. I know he signs the repealing act; but the Senator from Washington was rather urging that it would be inconsistent to expect that the President would approve of legislation enacted in Porto Rico and then afterwards sign a repeal of that same law. I do not see anything inconsistent in that.

Mr. JONES. That was not my position at all,

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I understood the Senator to contend for.

Mr. JONES. My position was that under the general provisions of this act we provide that laws passed by the legislature may be annulled by Congress. It does not provide for their approval by the President before they become laws; they become laws without the President's approval, and they continue laws unless Congress annuls them; but here is a particular provision with reference to a particular class of legislation under which, if the legislature by its legislative act sees fit to consolidate departments, that act does not become effective until the President consents to it; in other words, until the President approves it. The question which came up in my mind was whether under this particular section Congress would have the right to annul an act consolidating departments after it had been approved by the President.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think that that would interfere at all with the right of Congress to annul that law. It becomes a law not alone by the act of the legislature and the Governor of Porto Rico, but also by the act of the President, just as a law passed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and vetoed by the Governor of Porto Rico and passed over his veto and referred to the President and approved by the President becomes a law. Clearly Congress could just as readily repeal that act that had become a law through the exercise of the veto power and the subsequent approval by the President as it could repeal a law that went no further than the Legislature and the Governor of Porto Rico. So I do not think there could be any question about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask that the reading of the bill be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the following provision on page 39, beginning in line 7:

The terms of said elected commissioners shall commence on the 1st of January following their election—

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, on page 39 I move to strike out from line 5 to line 8, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 39 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive, and insert:

to be elected by the qualified voters at the first general election to be held under this act and at each subsequent general election thereafter. The terms of said elective commissioners elected at the first general election shall commence on the twenty-eighth day following the said general election, and the terms of the said elective commissioners elected at each subsequent general election shall commence on the 2d day of January following their election.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it was hard to follow the amendment suggested, as it was read so rapidly. I tried to follow it, but I could not possibly make out what object the amendment intended to accomplish.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will tell the Senator the object of the amendment. This bill was reported in July last; it was expected that it would be passed shortly thereafter, and that elections would be held at a certain time following the passage of the bill. Inasmuch, however, as the bill has gone over until this time, it is necessary to adjust these matters so that the term of office of these commissioners will expire at a certain time. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not catch the meaning of it from the reading.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the Secretary state the amendment again, and read it more slowly.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not catch the meaning of it from the reading, and if the Secretary will read it more slowly, then I can follow and see just what changes in the bill are proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 39 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, down to the word "election," in line 8,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It includes the word "and" in line 8.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The word "and" is also stricken out.

The Secretary. On page 39, after line 4, it is proposed to strike out "to be elected by the qualified voters at the first general election to be held under this act and quadrennially thereafter. The terms of said elective commissioners shall commence on the 1st of January following their election, and," and insert "to be elected by the qualified voters at the first general election to be held under this act, and at each subsequent general election thereafter.'

Mr. SMOOT. "And at each subsequent general election thereafter

The Secretary read as follows:

And at each subsequent general election thereafter.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that mean quadrennially?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was intended to have this election in July, which would be shortly after the bill was reported, and then the terms of all officers would expire, I think, in January following the election, in which case it would have been proper to have described it as being quadrennially; but instead of that, it now being nearly the 1st of February and the bill not having yet been passed, the election can not be held until next July, and so it is necessary to make the first terms less than four years. That is the purpose and object of this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the general election provided for by this amendment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Secretary to state the rest of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

The terms of said elective commissioners elected at the first general election shall commence on the twenty-eighth day following the said general election.

Mr. SMOOT. The twenty-eighth day? Mr. SHAFROTH. That is, four weeks afterwards. The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment, and shall commence on the twenty-eighth day following the said election, and the terms of the said elective commissioners elected at each subsequent general election shall commence on the 2d day of January following their election.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And thereafter there will be a four years' term. The provision is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be all right, Mr. President, but I can not couple it up with the provision in the bill which it is proposed to strike out.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Senator if it would not be a good thing when we conclude to-night to have the bill reprinted with all the amendments which have been adopted, for there are very many of them?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it would be; but let us first finish the reading of the bill. It can be done inside of 20 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary proceeded to read section 39.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he will not pass over section 39 at this time, because I have an amendment to that section which I desire to offer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; that is satisfactory.

Mr. FALL. I should like section 38 also to be passed over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; that is satisfactory.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, sections 38 and 39 will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was, in section 40, page 41, line 4, after the word "repealed," to insert:

Provided, That said head tax shall not apply to residents of Porto Rico coming and going either for business or social purposes.

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 40. That the exemption of aliens arriving in Porto Rico from the payment of the head tax provided by section 1 of the act of Congress of February 20, 1907, is hereby repealed: Provided, That said head tax shall not apply to residents of Porto Rico coming and going either for business or social purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 7, to insert as a subhead "Judicial department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 41, page 41, line 16, after the word "Senate," to insert "of the United States," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 41. That the judicial power shall be vested in the courts and tribunals of Porto Rico now established and in operation under and by virtue of existing laws. The jurisdiction of said courts and the form of procedure in them, and the various officers and attachés thereof, shall also continue to be as now provided until otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, That the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and the Legislature of Porto Rico shall have authority, from time to time as it may see fit, not inconsistent with this act, to organize, modify, or rearrange the courts and their jurisdiction and procedure, except the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 42, page 42, line 20, after the words "United States," to strike out "Provided, however, That no person who declares his intention not to become a citizen of the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of this act may thereafter be naturalized"; on page 43, line 2, after the words "United States," to strike out "not domiciled in Porto Rico"; and in line 4, after the words "value of," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,000," so as to read:

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint one district judge, who shall serve for a term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified and whose salary shall be $5,000 per annum. There shall be appointed in like manner a district attorney, whose salary shall be $4,000 per annum, and a marshal for said district, whose salary shall be $4,000 per annum, each for a term of four years unless sooner removed by the President. The district court for said district shall be called "the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico," and shall have power to appoint all necessary officials and assistants, including the clerk, interpreter, and such commissioners as may be necessary, who shall be entitled to the same fees and have like powers and duties as are exercised and performed by United States commissioners. Such district court shall have jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in the district courts shall have jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in the district courts of the United States, and shall proceed in the same manner. In addition said district court shall have jurisdiction for the naturalization of allens, and for this purpose residence in Porto Rico shall be counted in the same manner as residence elsewhere in the United States. Said district court shall have jurisdiction of all controversies where all of the parties on either side of the controversy are citizens or subjects of a foreign State or States, or citizens of a State, Territory, or District of the United States, wherein the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest or cost, the sum or value of $2,000, and of all controversies in which there is a separable controversy involving such jurisdictional amount and in which all of the parties on either side of such separable controversy are citizens or subjects of the chara

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 44, page 45, line 3, after the words "prosecuted to," to insert "the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and to," in line 5, after the words "United States," to insert "as now provided by law," and in the same line, after the word "law," to strike out "in any case wherein is involved the validity of any copyright, or in which is drawn and contains the strike the in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States, or wherein the Constitution of the United States, or a treaty thereof, or an act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in dispute, and in all other cases in which the sum or value of the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, exceeds the sum or value of $5,000. Such writs of error and appeals shall be taken within the same time, in the same manner, and under the same regulations as writs of error and appeals are taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the district courts," so as tomake the section read:

SEC. 44. That writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico may be taken and prosecuted to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and to the Supreme Court of the United States, as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 45, page 46, line 5, after the word "selected," to strike out "and" and insert a comma, and in the same line, after the word "drawn," to insert "and subject to exemption," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 45. That the qualifications of jurors as fixed by the local laws of Porto Rico shall not apply to jurors selected to serve in the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico; but the qualifications required of jurors in said court shall be that each shall be of the age of not less than 21 years and not over 65 years, a resident of Porto Rico for not less than one year, and have a sufficient knowledge of the English language to enable him to serve as a juror; they shall also be citizens of the United States. Juries for the said court shall be selected, drawn, and subject to exemption in accordance with the laws of Congress regulating the same in the United States courts in so far as locally applicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 46, page 46, line 14, after the words "Porto Rico," to insert:

Provided, That $500 a year from such fees, fines, costs, and forfeitures shall be retained by the clerk and expended for law-library purposes under the direction of the judge.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 46. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 24, to insert as a subhead, "Miscellaneous provisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 51, page 48, line 14, after the word "governor," to strike out "$10,000" and insert $5,000," so as to make the section read:

"$5,000," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 51. That, except as in this act otherwise provided, the salaries of all the officials of Porto Rico not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall be such and be so paid out of the revenues of Porto Rico as shall from time to time be determined by the Legislature of Porto Rico and approved by the governor; and if the legislature shall fall to make an appropriation for such salaries, the salaries theretofore fixed shall be paid without the necessity of further appropriations therefor. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of Porto Rico appointed as herein provided by the President shall also be paid out of the revenues of Porto Rico on warrant of the auditor, countersigned by the governor. The annual salaries of the following named officials appointed by the President and so to be paid shall be: The governor, $8,000, in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of Porto Rico, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental; heads of executive deputatives of the supreme court, $5,000; associate justices of the supreme court, $5,500 each.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator why the

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator why the Governor of Porto Rico should be paid $1,000 more than the Governor of Hawaii or the Governor of Alaska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say that the organic act made the salary of the governor $8,000, and it has been $8,000 ever since. The House put the provision at $10,000 and the Senate Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico struck out $10,000 and inserted $8,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Even if that were the case, we could provide now for the salary that the governors should receive hereafter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator why I asked the ques-on. I know that for the last four years the Governor of the Hawaiian Islands has asked for an increase, and it has been proposed many times that the Governor of Alaska should be paid a greater salary than is paid in Hawaii because of the extremely high cost of living in that country. You not only pay the governor $8,000 here, but you provide that "in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of Porto Rico, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental." Now, that is not fair to the Governors of Hawaii and Alaska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President, there is a difference between these possessions. Porto Rico has a population of 1,250,000.

Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Mr. SHAFROTH. The Hawaiian Islands have a population of only about 250,000.

SMOOT. Yes. Mr. SHAFROTH. This palace that is given to the Governor of Porto Rico, it is true, is a large building-I have been in itbut it is necessary for the governor to have a sufficient salary to maintain himself. There are certain expenses there that he has to take care of, and we thought that to leave it just as it has been would be best. So we struck out $10,000, which the House provided, and inserted $8,000, the same that he has been getting ever since the islands came into the possession of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the Governor of the Hawaiian Islands perhaps has more entertaining to do than the Governor of Porto Rico has. The Senator has been there, and he knows that the Governor of Hawaii is under the expense of maintaining a home-not only the running expenses of it, but he has to pay the rent of it, unless a particularly dear friend of his may allow him, part of the time, to live in his home, which I know has been the case. This is quite unfair, I think. not want to ask for a yea-and-nay vote on this, so I will ask the Senator to let it go over to-night.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Because I do want a record vote upon this proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. Mr. SMOOT. While asking that, I want to ask also to have the balance of the paragraph go over, because you provide here that the chief justice of the supreme court shall receive $6,500, and you also provide that the associate justices of the supreme court shall receive $5,500 each. Now, the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii receives $6,000 and the associate justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii receive $5,500, just the same as is provided in this bill for the associate justices of Porto Rico. There is an inconsistency in that, and it ought to be corrected, because the Senator knows that in the very next appropriation bill that will be passed the salaries provided here will not be asked to be reduced, but the salaries that are paid to the chief justices of Hawaii and Alaska will be asked to be creased. So I ask that this may go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I join in the request that the whole paragraph may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the section will be passed over. The Secretary will continue the reading of

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 55, page 50, line 3, after the word "public," to strike out "Provided, That the certificate by such notary shall be accompanied by the certificate of the executive secretary of Porto Rico to the effect that the notary taking such acknowledgment is in fact such notarial officer."

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 55. That deeds and other instruments affecting land situate in the District of Columbia, or any other Territory or possession of the United States, may be acknowledged in Porto Rico before any notary public appointed therein by proper authority, or any efficer therein who hax ex officio the powers of a notary public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 57, page 51, line 4, after the word "constituted," to insert: "Provided, however, That all appointments made by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the executive council as thus constituted, in the executive council as authorized by section 13 of this act, or in the office of executive secretary of Porto Rico, shall be regarded as temporary and shall expire not later than 20 days from and after the assembly and organization of the legislature hereinbefore provided, unless said appointments shall be ratified and made permanent by the said Senate of Porto Rico."

So as to make the section read:

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 57. That this act shall take effect upon approval, but until its provisions shall severally become operative, as hereinbefore provided, the corresponding legislative and executive functions of the government in Porto Rico shall continue to be exercised and in full force and operation as now provided by law; and the executive council shall, until the assembly and organization of the Legislature of Porto Rico as herein provided, consist of the attorney general, the treasurer, the commissioner of the interior, the commissioner of education, the commissioner of health, and the commissioner of agriculture and labor, and the five additional members as now provided by law. And any functions assigned to the Senate of Porto Rico by the provisions of this act shall, until this said senate has assembled and organized as herein provided, be exercised by the executive council as thus constituted: Provided, however, That all appointments made by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the executive council as thus constituted, in the executive council as authorized by section 13 of this act, or in the office of executive secretary of Porto Rico, shall be regarded as temporary and shall expire not later than 20 days from and after the assembly and organization of the legislature hereinbefore provided, unless said appointments shall be ratified and made permanent by the said Senate of Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now ask that the bill be printed with the amendments that have already been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that will be very confusing. I do not believe we will gain much by it, because so many of the provisions have been passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. A number of amendments have been offered from the floor and agreed to; and I will ask that the amendments that have been agreed to may be printed in small capitals, so as to show the difference between those and the ones that have not been agreed to. Does the Senator think that when we begin to vote upon the bill the Senators who have not been here to-night, not having heard the amendments offered, will know anything about what the bill contains?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, the RECORD will contain it all. Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, however, that Senators do not always have time to read all of the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to expedite matters in every way I can. If the Senator thinks any additional information would be given by what he proposes, I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly think it would, or else I would not ask it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. I have no objection to it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. This is what I desire done: In the case of all the amendments that have been offered on the floor of the Senate to-night and agreed to, I should like to have them printed in small capitals, the amendments still pending being printed in italics, and a reprint of the bill as amended. The amendments agreed to can be printed in small capitals, and then they would not interfere with the amendments that are now pending, which will be printed in italics hears none, and it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair

The order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows: Ordered, That H. R. 9533 be printed showing the bill as amended in small capitals and stricken-through type, the amendments pending in Italics, and the paragraphs passed over in brackets.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that we meet to-morrow night and finish this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not agree to that to-night, Mr. President. That matter can be taken up to-morrow in the morning

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that that is one of the reasons why I did not want a reprint, because I do not believe it can be

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes. I will assure the Senator that it can be done just the same as the printing of any other matter.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 408, be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 50 minutes p. in.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 31, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, January 30, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in Heaven, that though men come and go, Thy Spirit lives on in the heart of each succeeding generation, bringing order out of chaos, harmony out of discord, peace out of war, good out of evil. For faith is stronger than doubt, hope than despair, love than hate. Make us, we pray Thee, tractable to the Spirit, that we may be led into the higher and purer realm of thought and action in the common daily duties of life; which in the last analysis is the test of a welldeveloped character for which we hope and aspire and pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 20209. An act to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the Judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7924. An act authorizing the county of Beltrami, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said county; S. 6133. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to John D. Sherwood, of Spokane, Wash., the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation at Spokane, Wash., and to accept the conveyance to the United States of other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War and suitable for a rifle range in exchange for the land so overflowed; and

S. 7910. An act authorizing the city of Bemidji, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near that place.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. Jones and Mr. Martine of New Jersey members of joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Labor.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6133. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to John D. Sherwood, of Spokane, Wash., the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation at Spokane, Wash., and to accept the conveyance to the United States of other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War and suitable for a rifle range in exchange for the land so over-flowed; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes. Pending that motion I would like to see if we can not come to some understanding in respect to general debate upon the bill. If it would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney], I suggest that we run along with general debate without fixing any definite time, with the hope that by, say, 2 o'clock to-morrow we can finish the general debate; and if not, we can then let it run along an hour longer, until 3 o'clock.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I think we need more time than that for general debate. I suggest that the gentleman let it run along until to-morrow at some late hour—say, 3 or 4

Mr. KITCHIN. That would be satisfactory to me. Mr. FORDNEY. I have requests for at least six or seven hours upon this side of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. The bill is a short one—only 12 pages long and I would like to finish it to-morrow night.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will it be agreeable to run along with general debate until 4 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us say 3 o'clock; and then, if we do not finish it, we can extend it for an hour longer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that he would like to finish the bill to-morrow night-I presume he would like to finish it to-night. For the convenience of Members, is it the intention of the gentleman to ask the House to sit late to-morrow night to finish the bill or will we adjourn at 6 or 7 o'clock?

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope that we will not stay later than 7 o'clock. I think we can finish the reading of the bill, and then perhaps take the vote on the next morning.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he make a request that the time for general debate be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, pending my motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Michigan. Is

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentle-man from North Carolina that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20573.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. Sherley in the chair.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, my purpose is, if not interrupted too much, to consume about 20 minutes in explanation of the bill and then reserve some time for myself in which to

I have often thought what a great genius a man would be if he could find some way to write a revenue bill entirely satisfactory to the people who would have to pay the tax under it. I have thought of every conceivable way for the last eight or ten years in which such a bill could be written, but I am just as far off from the discovery now as I was when I began. Of course every tax bill, it matters not how large, how small the tax, will meet with severe and violent opposition from the man who will have to pay the tax under it.

We all realize the necessity for an additional revenue meas-That necessity has been created by the votes of the Republicans as well as the Democrats. I said, when I presented the bill at the last session, that if it had not been for the increase in the appropriations for the Army and the Navy and fortifications not a dollar of new taxes would have to be levied. I say now in respect to this bill that if there had not been any increase except the normal increase in appropriations for the Army, Navy, and fortifications last session and this session this bill would not be necessary. Every dollar of new taxes levied in the act of the last session and in this bill is made necessary by the votes of Democrats and Republicans alike for the marvelous increase of appropriations in the Army, Navy, and the fortification acts, which the advocates of those increases euphoniously call "preparedness." The responsibility can not be put by either side upon the other. Democrats and Republicans alike are responsible for the necessity for additional revenue legislation. Whether the additional legislation which the Republicans propose or which the Democrats present to the House is the wiser or better I shall discuss later.

The estimates by the Treasury Department of disbursements for the ensuing fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for which we are appropriating this session, are $1,368,445,000.

The total amount of revenue from all sources, exclusive of the post office, including the big receipts from the revenue act of last session, is estimated for the next fiscal year to be $1,001,750,000. This makes a difference of $366,695,000, being the estimated excess of disbursements over receipts. If we deduct from that $64,305,000, which is estimated to be in the general balance fund on June 30, 1917, we have $302,390,000. Now, we should add to that $100,000,000 in order to have a safe, wise, working balance in the Treasury. It ought to be at least that much. This has been the opinion of the last several administrations. Sometimes it falls below that. It fell below that at times under the Roosevelt administration and at times under the Taft administration. It is less than that now. As stated, we ought to provide for at least $100,000,000 as a general working-fund balance. Adding that, we have $402,390,000, which we must meet either by proceeds of bonds or by additional revenue legislation, or both. We propose and recommend the issue of bonds, which I will explain later on in detail, to finance and reimburse the Treasury for expenditures on account of the Mexican situation, the construction of the Alaskan Railway, the armor-plate plant, and the purchase of the Danish West Indies, I think it was all agreed and understood by Republicans and and Democrats alike when we presented the revenue bill last session, that we would finance the Mexican situation expenditures by the issue of bonds. It has been the custom of not only this Nation but of all nations to defray such expenditures by bonds, because it is impossible to anticipate by revenue legislation how much will be required or how little. We did not know when we presented the revenue bill of last session whether the present situation or the then situation would exist 2 months, 5 months, or 12 months, and we could not know whether it would cost $125,000,000, $200,000,000, or what. So we did not provide in the revenue act for such expenditure.

Last session the Treasury Department estimated it would only cost about $125,000,000. We did not expect to remain on the border so long, nor do we know now how much longer our troops, or some of them, will have to remain. The department now estimates that the total expenditures for the border trouble will by June 30, 1917, reach $162,418,000. It is estimated by the department that by the end of the fiscal year 1918-June 30, 1918—the expenditures on account of the Alaskan Railway will amount to $21,838,000. The armor-plate plant, authorized by last session's naval appropriation act, will cost $11,000,000. For these expenditures the Treasury will be reimbursed by the proceeds of bonds. They total $195,256,000. Deducting this from the $402,390,000 will leave $207,000,000 which is absolutely necessary to meet by additional revenue legislation. Now, gentlemen, we present a bill for the consideration of the Congress, which from some quarters will have more opposition, receive more protests and denunciation than any bill we could present, and yet, in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, it is the wisest and the most equitable and least burdensome bill that has yet been suggested. I shall first take up for explanation the portion of the bill over which there are the least contentions. We propose, in addition to the present authorization of Panama Canal bonds. to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $100,000,000 of bonds.

The amount of Panama Canal bonds now available for issue is $222,000,000. This with the additional $100,000,000 authorized by the pending bill will make a total authorization of $322,000,000. The authorization in this bill becomes necessary in order to finance by the proceeds of bonds the following: $162,418,000, Mexican situation expenditures; $35,000,000, the total authorized cost of the Alaska Railway; $25,000,000 for the purchase of the Danish West Indies; $11,000,000 for the armor-plate plant; $50,000,000 for the requirements of the shipfor by sale of Panama Canal bonds; and $20,000,000 for the nitrate plant, which also was authorized last session to be taken care of by the issue of bonds. This gives a total of $303,418,000, The available amount of Panama Canal bonds, $222,000,000, lacks $81,000,000 of being enough to finance these specific objects to which I have alluded, and therefore this bill provides for an additional issue of bonds, not to exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000.

In another section of the bill the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue, instead of the $200,000,000 now provided by law, $300,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness. Under the present law, which is an unrepealed part of the Payne Act. the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue $200,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, drawing 3 per cent interest, running not longer than one year, but the total amount of such outstanding certificates of indebtedness at any one time not to exceed $200,000,000. This was incorporated in the Payne Act in order to take care of any temporary deficit during a current fis-cal year and is still the law. We increase that $100,000,000, and instead of the $200,000,000 now authorized, if this bill is enacted into law, the Secretary will be authorized to issue $300,000,000. The reason for this is that income taxes and the excess-profit taxes provided for in this bill will all come into the Treasury practically during the months of May and June in a lump sum and not be spread proportionately over the year, like indirect taxes or like the internal revenue from beer, whisky, and

And so from about January until May and June, without such an issue of certificates, there would be a hiatus in col-lection of a large portion of the taxes, or a deficit amounting sometimes much over $200,000,000. When the amount of income and excess-profit taxes is collected in May and June these certificates of indebtedness issued to supply this hiatus or deficit will be paid off.

The two taxing features of the bill are an increase in the estate tax and a tax on excess profits. In regard to the estate tax we simply increase the present rates 50 per cent. So the estate tax is exactly like it is in the present law, except that we increase each of the rates 50 per cent. In other words, where an estate now pays 1 per cent it will pay 1½ per cent; if it pays 2 per cent, it will pay 3 per cent, and so forth, all the way up.

Before discussing the excess-profits tax let me call attention to the first provision of the bill—that is, Title I:

This title provides that the receipts from the excess-profits tax and one-third of the receipts from the estate tax provided in this bill, together with $175,000,000, the additional revenue collected from the taxes levied in the revenue act of September 8, 1916, shall be set aside as a special preparedness fund to be used toward defraying the expenses for the Army and Navy and fortifications. It is provided, however, that should there be no other money available in the Treasury to meet current obligations that the Secretary of the Treasury may use this fund for other purposes, but like sums so disbursed must be returned to this fund.

We made this provision that everyone in this country will know, and especially everyone who will pay a tax under this bill will know, that every dollar of it goes for increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and fortifications.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. SWITZER. As to the excess-profit tax, I would like to have an explanation as to whether a corporation would be allowed to exempt 8 per cent of its capital in addition to the $5,000 referred to in the majority report,

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I am going to reach that.

Every gentleman here knows that the tax measure last session and this tax measure are necessary because of the in-creased appropriations for the Army and Navy and fortifica-tions. We set side by the terms of Title I the taxes collected under this bill, with the earmarks of increased preparedness appropriations upon them, into a separate fund to be expended only for Army and Navy and fortification purposes. And we take $175,000,000, annually collected under the last year's tax bill and add to that fund. We estimate that $175,000,000 is the amount of additional revenue which that bill, made necessary by increases of appropriations for preparedness, raised over the revenues produced under the then existing law. And yet, in addition to such separate fund, on account of the immense appropriations for the Army and Navy and fortifications, we will have to take annually more than $300,000,000 from the general fund to help defray such appropriations.

Now, as to the excess-profit tax. In the first place let me say that this excess-profit tax will in a large measure be paid by partnerships whose members and by corporations whose officers and directors, Democrats and Republicans, in every section of the country were loud clamorists for "preparedness;" who peremptorily demanded of Congress these huge increases of appropriations which make necessary this bill as well as the revenue act of last session. The advocate of such appropriations, who pays a tax under this bill and under the bill of last session, will know that not a dollar of it will go for so-called "pork barrels" in the river and harbor bill, or in the publicbuildings bill, or for any other so-called "pork barrel" bill, but every dollar of it will go for what he desired and what he demanded, namely, for increased appropriations for "preparedness." While many whose partnership or corporations will have to pay taxes under this bill will protest as loudly against this bill as they shouted for the big appropriations which it will

I am glad to say that some are patriotic enough, are fairminded enough, appreciate its equity enough, to approve this excess-profit tax, and will pay it willingly. Not all the preparedness advocates and clamorists are seized and dominated by the impulse of avarice. An officer and large stockholder of one corporation has told me that his corporation will pay $100,000 by reason of the provisions of this bill. "I am willing to do it," said he. "My corporation ought to pay it. We demanded preparedness; we are willing to help pay for it. We know if we make sufficient profits for this Government to get $100,000 from us we have made large and immense profits, and do not begrudge the Government the small part it gets. I wish we could make profits enough to pay the Government, under this bill, $1,000,000 instead of $100,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

What I would like to ask the gentleman Mr. MADDEN. from North Carolina is this: If he will be kind enough to tell the House why, in levying this tax on excess profits, the committee confined it exclusively to corporations, partnerships, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies, which in many cases are only organized because of the fact that the individuals who compose these companies have not sufficient money to engage in a business enterprise themselves, whereas the individual who is engaged in business by himself, on his own account, is so engaged because of the fact that he has sufficient capital to enter the business world without requiring the cooperation of other citizens with small means? Why the man, for example, with a sufficient amount of money to be able to run alone is exempt while the man or woman who have not enough money to go into business with on their own account and must combine with other people are taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would have preferred for the gentleman to have asked that long question-

Mr. MADDEN. It is a very simple question.
Mr. KITCHIN (continuing). And argument later on, because I was going to come to that. But I will answer the gentleman now. In the first place the gentleman's assumption is contrary to actual business experience. It is the copartner-ship and corporation that gather in combination large capital for large enterprise, and not the individual. In exceedingly rare cases there doubtless are individuals, who as such, engage in big business. But even the individual with ample capital for large enterprise prefers and usually does, for manifest reasons, engage in them through the agency of the corporation. This bill, as the gentleman says, taxes only corporations and copartnerships, and does not apply to individuals.

The individual in the present income-tax law pays not only the normal tax of 2 per cent, but is in addition chargeable with a surtax running from 1 per cent up to 13 per cent, graduated according to the amount of income. The corporation pays only the normal tax of 2 per cent; does not, like the individual, pay a surtax, whether its income is big or little. The partnership as such pays no income tax at all. This is one reason why we did not include individuals in the excess-profit tax provision.

Another reason is the administrative difficulty which such a tax on individuals would present. The individual, having no partner or others, like stockholders or officers of a corporation, to account to, as a rule keeps no books as to his investments, his capital, his surplus, and so forth. He is engaged in various activities from which he derives his income, and the capital invested in such activities would be most difficult to ascertain.

There was another consideration that weighed somewhat with the committee in not applying the excess-profit tax to the individual. Under the present income-tax law an individual with same capital, in same business as a copartnership, perhaps in competition with it, is entitled to only one exemption of $3,000 if a single man, or $4,000 if married; while each member of the partnership is entitled to $3,000 if single, or $4,000 if married. If there are three partners and all married, there would be an exemption of $12,000, while the individual would have only $4,000.

If we applied the excess-profit provision to individuals, then, in addition to the several exemptions of partners under the income-tax law, the several partners would have the advantage of deducting a reasonable amount for the several salaries of the partners for their personal services, while the individual, if allowed any deduction on this account, would only receive deduction for one—his salary. And the stockholders of a corporation, two or more, if officers or employers, for their personal services would be entitled to deduct the reasonable salaries of each as against the individual's deduction of one salary.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question? Mr. KITCHIN. I will,

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman from North Carolina say whether he believes the corporations are not owned by individuals, and that the individuals are taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; corporations are owned by individuals, but you take an individual and consider what he can do himself, outside of combination with others, and you will find he can not become a trust or a monopolist to control the prices of articles of commerce or of the necessities of life.

Mr. MADDEN. Would this bill include a man like John Wanamaker, who is running an individual concern?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it would not include rare individuals like John Wanamaker, whose income runs into the hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions, but he pays under the in-come-tax law much more income tax than a corporation of like business and capital and income, because he pays a surtax and the corporation pays none,
Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Where did the gentleman get his information that individuals do not keep books? How do you levy an income tax upon an individual if he does not keep books

Mr. KITCHIN. I remind the gentleman that the income under the income-tax law deals only with incomes and has nothing to do with the investments, amount of capital, surplus, and so forth. I know how much income I have, and the gentleman knows how much income he has, and yet it would be difficult to sit down and ascertain how much capital you have invested. We pay on the income, mattering not how much or in what way our capital is invested.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the standpat Republicans generally are complaining that by this bill we permit the corporations and copartnerships to have an exemption of $5,000. Why, gentlemen, who first gave corporations an exemption of $5,000? The Republican Party. The gentleman from Illinois voted for it himself. In the Payne Act did we not have a corporation tax of 1 per cent, and did it not give to every corporation an exemption of $5,000? In the income-tax law, as to incomes, we did exactly what you say we ought to -we did not give the corporations any exemptions at all. We did what the gentleman now says is right, and they did what the gentleman now says is wrong. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. I was asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the gentleman was asking me insinuat-[Laughter.] ing questions.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman ought not to put words into someone else's mouth.

Mr. KITCHIN. You are satisfied with the $5,000 corporation exemption?

Mr. MADDEN. I am satisfied that the Democrats have no consideration whatever for any business enterprise in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. KITCHIN. That is the right reply——

No special consideration.

Mr. ASWELL, Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. KITCHIN. Everybody knows that 25 or 30 years ago a statement like that would have had the unanimous applause and approval of the Republicans in the House. It would have been new, but only about half a dozen applauded that because it has become so stale and unprofitable. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.

I trust now I can have without interruption a few minutes in which to explain the nature and operation under the bill of the excess-profit tax. The bill provides for a tax of 8 per cent on the net profits or incomes of copartnerships and corporations which are in excess of, first, $5,000, and, second, 8 per cent net profit on the "actual capital invested." Such net incomes or profits of a corporation is its next income shown by its incometax returns, under the present income-tax law-that is, we take the net income of a corporation according to such income-tax returns as the starting point or basis of calculation for the exemption or deduction and for the tax. Capital does not include borrowed money. On borrowed money they have a deduc-tion for interest. "Actual capital invested" means and includes (1) actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value at the time of payment of assets or property read in a the cash value. of payment of assets or property paid in other than cash, and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits employed in the business. Now, before this tax can attach to any copartnership or corporation, it must have the first, or $5,000, exemption or deduction from the net profits, and then, in addition to the $5,000, it must have a further exemption or deduction of 8 per cent clear net profit on the entire capital actually invested, including capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, an exemption of 8 per cent clear profit after paying all taxes, overhead charges, salaries, labor and cost of raw material, wear and tear of machinery and buildings, interest, and everything. Then the amount of net profit or income in excess of such exemptions is taxed 8 per cent. I am not such a business man like my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but I will be glad to put everything I can save in any stock or any investment that would guarantee me clear 8 per cent net profit. It is twice as much as the widows and orphans of this country get on their little money loaned out, because on the average in this country, after paying municipal, county, and State taxes, they have left net about 4 per cent.

And yet before this tax attaches all corporations and all copartnerships, big and little, get $5,000 flat exemption and then 8 per cent net profit upon the entire capital invested, including paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits.

Mr. PLATT. Would the gentleman be willing to put all his money in a mining stock that yielded no more than 8 per cent? If before anybody else gets any of my money Mr. KITCHIN. I am guaranteed $5,000 and 8 per cent clear, I would be willing to put it anywhere, so far as this tax is concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman talks about guaranteeing 8 per cent. I think if the gentleman and his party can guarantee 8 per cent, they can have every dollar that every investor in the United States has got to invest.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, the gentleman misunderstood. I said before this tax attaches, and so far as this tax is concerned, there must be a guarantee of 8 per cent before the Government gets anything.

Mr. REAVIS. As I understand the purpose of the bill from reading it, and the gentleman's statement, it is to tax business-not to tax corporations or partnerships, but the business of those institutions.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is to tax the excess of net profits or incomes of copartnerships and corporations, as I have just explained, except incomes of partnerships, derived from agriculture or from personal services.

Mr. REAVIS. I am asking solely for personal information. If that is the purpose of the bill, why should not the profit of a business in the hands of an individual pay the same tax as the profits of a business in the hands of a partnership or cor-

Mr. KITCHIN. I might not have answered that to the satisfaction of the gentleman when I replied to a similar question of the gentleman from Illinois, but the reasons I gave to him are the reasons why the individuals are not included in the provisions for the excess-profit tax.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say that the capital invested in a corporation was not liable to this tax up to 8 per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. The excess of the net profits above (1) $5,000, and (2) 8 per cent of the capital invested, including surplus and undivided profits, is liable to a tax of 8 per cent; that is, after deducting from the net profits or incomes these two exemptions the excess only is taxed at the rate of 8 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Take a railroad company, for instance, that has capital invested in its tracks, equipment, and Would that be exempted?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the gentleman does not understand me. The exemptions are $5,000 and 8 per cent of the capital invested, including surplus and undivided profits. These two exemptions are deducted from the net profits or incomes before the tax of 8 per cent attaches, and it then attaches only on the profits or income in excess of the two exemptions. Let me illustrate. Take a corporation or a partnership, without any surplus or undivided profits but with a capital paid in, in cash or in assets turned in, of $100,000. The entire capital invested is Now, before this tax attaches at all from the net profits or income there is first a deduction of $5,000 and then a deduction of 8 per cent of the $100,000 invested, which is $8,000. Adding these two exemptions or deductions, we have $13,000 to be deducted from the entire net profit or income before the corporation or copartnership is liable for any tax. So in the case of a $100,000 corporation or copartnership, before the tax attaches at all it must make, clear of everything, a net profit upon its capital of over 13 per cent. If the corporation or copartner-ship makes 8 per cent, it is not taxed at all. If it makes 10 per ceut, it is not taxed at all. If it makes 12 or 13 per cent, it is not taxed at all, because there is no net profit or income in excess of the exemptions or deductions. But suppose it makes 15 per cent; in other words, makes $15,000 profit on $100,000? That is not much of a protective-tariff manufacturers' profit, I must admit, but it strikes me that is a mighty good profit, 15 per cent net, clear of everything. Now, you deduct $13,000; that is, the flat deduction of $5,000, plus 8 per cent upon the capital invested, which is $8,000, totaling $13,000. Deducting the $13,000 from the entire net profit or income of $15,000 leaves

$2,000, which is the income or profit in excess of the exemptions or deductions allowed, called the excess profit. Upon this excess profit the bill provides for an 8 per cent tax. Eight per cent of this $2,000 is $160, the amount of tax this corporation or partnership would have to pay.

Gentlemen, the man inside or outside of this Capitol who says that $100,000 capital of a copartnership or corporation making $15,000 clear net profit is burdened by having to pay $160 to help support this Government, to help, in their own language, to prepare this Government for properly defending itself against attacks by the foreign powers of the world, is a mighty small, narrow, avaricious man. [Applause.] Suppose this $100,000 capital stock corporation had a surplus and undivided profits of $50,000, then the deductions or exemptions would be $5,000 plus 8 per cent on the capital stock and surplus and undivided prof-Eight per cent of this would be $12,000; adding to this the $5,000 makes $17,000 exemption from the net profits before the tax attaches; that is, it would have to make over 17 per cent on the capital stock before paying any tax.

SNYDER. Has not the gentleman overlooked the 2 per cent that must be collected first?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; I have not overlooked that. That is the 2 per cent normal tax under the present income-tax law. This per cent, as well as all other taxes, is credited or deducted as part of the business expenses before arriving at the net profits or incomes

Mr. ADAIR. Would not the 2 per cent already paid under the other law be included as a part of the expense of the busi-

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; certainly. It makes no difference how much the county tax, or city tax, or State tax, or income tax, or any other tax that is levied may be, the amount so paid is deducted and credited before the net profit is ascertained as a part of the expenses of the business. The copartnership or corporation must have as one of the exemptions 8 per cent net profit after paying all taxes, salaries, and every other expense of the business before this tax attaches at all. In other words, so far as this tax is concerned, it makes no difference whether the corporation or partnership pays $1,000 or $100,000 of city, county, State, and Federal taxes, that $1,000 or $100,000 must be deducted and allowed as part of the expenses of the business; and after déducting that, with all other expenses, it is entitled to the 8 per cent clear net profit plus $5,000 before this tax is levied.

If the gentleman will pardon me, I have been a Mr. MANN. little under the weather and have not paid as much attention to this bill as otherwise I would, or perhaps I would not ask How do you arrive at the amount of capital invested? Here is the New York Central Railroad, for instance, which has a capital stock and a bonded indebtedness. what it pays in the way of dividends, but I think 5 per cent now. It may earn as a profit as much as 8 per cent a year, deducting a portion of it for depreciation and betterment, which I suppose is done under the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission, carrying the same as surplus. Will you take the capital stock of the New York Central Railroad as the amount invested; or, if the Interstate Commerce Commission had valued the New York Central Railroad-which it has not yetwill you take their valuation as the amount of capital invested?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. The bill itself explains what is capital actually invested. It is cash actually paid in, the actual value of assets, at the time of payment, paid in other than cash-paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits.

Mr. MANN. I venture to say in the case of the New York Central Railroad that it is impossible to arrive at those figures. Mr. KITCHIN. Then, in the case of bonds, the bill provides that it does not include borrowed money—which of course covers bonds-by the corporation and partnership, but they deduct their 6 per cent or 4 per cent, or whatever it is, which they pay on the bonds, and thus they get the benefit of that.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman made the statement that there would be no 8 per cent tax at all until the corporation had made 13 per cent upon its capital.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is in the case of a $100,000 corporation, without surplus and undivided profits. If it has surplus and undivided profits the deduction would be more as the 8 per cent exemption would be calculated on such surplus and profits as well as on the capital stock.

Mr. NORTON. Of course. That is not true when the capital is more than $100,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to get to examples of corporations and partnerships of more than $100,000 later on if not interrupted. But such larger corporations and partnerships have exactly the same exemption, namely, the flat deduction of $5,000 and the 8 per cent. Suppose we take a $50,000 capital stock corporation. Before the tax attaches there must be the flat exemption of $5,000 and the further exemption of 8 per cent on the capital, or $4,000, which would total $9,000. In other words, a $50,000 corporation before the tax touches it must make 18 per cent on the capital stock. Let us now take a $500,000 corporation or partnership. Before the tax attaches it has a $5,000 exemption, and then 8 per cent upon $500,000, or $40,000, making a total exemption of $45,000. Of course, the $5,000 exemption does not cut as much figure in the amount of percentage of deduction in a $500,000 corporation as it does in a corporation of $100,000, but statistics show that a $500,000 or larger corporation, in a large majority of cases, has surplus and undivided profits which will amount to as much as the capital stock; so that in a majority of cases a $500,000 corporation having an equal amount in surplus and undivided profits will have exempted to it, in addition to the flat $5,000, 8 per cent of the original capital and the surplus and undivided profits, making a little over 16 per cent on the original capital; that is, $85,000 total exemption.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman make the statement for the benefit of the House that he made to me in private conversation in respect to this? Suppose that a firm several years ago was organized with a captal of $1,000,000, a sawmill and timber proposition, for instance. Since that time they have paid no dividends, but have added profits to the original capital to the extent of half a million dollars, while in the meantime the value of their property has enhanced another half a million dollars. The question is whether you are going to permit them to deduct a profit upon the million and a half or two millions, or what sums, or are you going to fix a date upon which time that value shall be based?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that in the case he cites, the 8 per cent deduction would be upon a million and a half dollars. In other words, you paid in first $1,000,000. Then, instead of taking the dividends and putting them into your pocket you put them back into the company, say, a timber company, to the amount of $500,000. That is your surplus or undivided profits. So your deduction would not be 8 per cent upon a million dollars, but would be 8 per cent upon the million and a half dollars. The bill provides that it is actual cash or assets paid in, and the surplus and undivided profits upon which the 8 per cent deduction is calculated. Now, then, in that case you would have, instead of a deduction or exemption of $80,000, a deduction of $120,000, plus the $5,000 exemption. Let me ask you, between you and me, do you not think a concern that put in a few years ago a million dollars and then has $500,000 of surplus and undivided profits and makes up on that $125,000 clear money every year, is able and ought it not to help pay a little upon excess profits for the country's "preparedness"?

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree that that suggestion is right. But suppose the $1,000,000 were invested 20 years ago and no dividends paid since that time, but the profits returned to the extent of half a million dollars?

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand that. A deduction, as I explained, of 8 per cent would be allowed on the half million dollars as well as on the original capital of $1,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. But as the gentleman suggested to me. does he not believe that a fair valuation of that property should be had and that it should be permitted to earn a profit upon the valuation as of the date of the enactment of the law or certainly on March 1, 1913, the time when the income-tax amendment to the Constitution became effective?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, that has somewhat disturbed me, to be perfectly candid, as I told the gentleman, in thinking the matter over in my own mind. I must confess that I have not yet arrived at a definite conclusion, but rather think the proper way is as the bill has it. We say in the bill cash paid in, and assets turned over or "paid in," the value of the assets taken at the time when turned over or paid in. It has occurred to me, and I want to say it to the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I have been somewhat worried over it, that it may be the proper thing to fix the date of the valuation of the assets turned over instead of cash as of March 1, 1913, the date of the income-tax amendment proclamation. However, I am inclined to the opinion that under all the circumstances, considering the administration difficulties involved, it is best to leave it as we present it in the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Such a provision was inserted in the act of September 8, 1916.

Mr. KITCHIN. Similar in some respects, but not in all. said to the gentleman this morning that I was going to think that over further and discuss the matter with my colleagues upon the committee and see what conclusion we can reach in respect to it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain why the initial exemption is a fixed amount of $5,000 instead of a certain percentage upon the capital and surplus and undivided profits? That would be a very small exemption in the case of a large corporation, but it might be a very large exemption in the case of a small concern.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would refer the gentleman to the Republicans who were the authors of the Payne Act, for in the minority views upon this bill they refer us back to that in order to get revenue, and I could have the gentleman ask them why they made a flat $5,000 exemption to corporations, big and little, in the corporation-tax provisions just as we do in this In all income-tax laws in all countries there is a flat exemption. When we levied an income tax during the Civil War we had a flat exemption. Then the next income-tax law was passed under the Cleveland administration. That had a flat exemption of $5,000. The next income tax, called an excise tax, was in the Payne Act of 1909. This was a tax of 1 per cent on incomes of corporations. It had a flat exemption of $5,000. The next income tax is the present act now on the statute books, in which a flat exemption to individuals of $3,000 in the case of a single person and $4,000 in the case of a married person is allowed. So, following the precedents in our own country, based on sound and wise policy, we provided in this bill a flat exemption, and in addition a percentage exemption.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. I will.
Mr. AUSTIN. I received in my mail yesterday morning a letter from a manufacturer of pig iron in my district complaining of this proposed tax. Under existing law his company pays a State tax, a county tax, and pays a city tax and a national-income corporation tax. Now comes this additional tax. He wants to know whether your committee could not raise some of this money from the maker of foreign pig iron who ships his product here and sells in competition without paying any tax. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. That is in substance the question every stand-pat Republican puts, and it is the question every man who makes tremendous profits and opposes this bill puts to us. Why not levy a protective tariff, they ask, so that they who are making the most exorbitant profits the world has ever known can enlarge their profits and shift the whole burden of this $207,-000,000 not to the foreigner, but to the people who buy coffee and tea and sugar and clothes and lumber and other necessities Why not make the wage earner and the people who make no profits pay the tax? That is the question of difference between us. The gentleman is asking——

Mr. AUSTIN. His firm has made an average of 4 per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, then, his firm under this bill will not pay a cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, the gentleman ought to write back and tell them that he has so manipulated things here that they will not have to pay one single dollar under this excess-profit tax. [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

Mr. AUSTIN. This firm has averaged since 1872 4 per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. Four per cent only?

Mr. AUSTIN. It has averaged more than that of late, and comes within the provisions of this law on account of the increase in the production of pig iron on account of the European

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman says they are making an increased output and profit on account of the European war. How in the name of common sense can they have a foreign competitor in the home market when they are selling abroad and his European competitor can not sell here at all? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. AUSTIN. He will have plenty of competition at the close of the war-

Mr. KITCHIN. But we do not know when it will close. may be six months, it may be six years. What we are after is to get the required revenue now for next year and for the next year. The gentleman's position is that he is for big appropriations for preparedness, but against any kind of a revenue bill that will raise the money to pay for it.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. At the bottom of page 3 it says:

Every foreign corporation and partnership, including corporations and partnerships of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, shall pay for each taxable year a like tax upon the amount by which its net income received from all sources within the United States exceeds the sum of 8 per cent—

And so forth.

Then it proceeds to apply the tax as if it were a domestic corporation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, the gentleman, who poses as a good standpat Republican, says that in all the years since 1872, most of which were under Republican administrations, under Hayes, under Harrison, under McKinley, under Roosevelt, and under Taft, this company has not been able to earn but 4 per cent, but now, under the Wilson administration and the Democratic Party, it is earning much more than 8 per cent. [Applause on

The gentleman, I suppose, thinks it would have been all right when they were earning 4 per cent in lean years to tax part of that profit, but now, under a Democratic administration, they are enabled to make much more than 8 per cent, we ought not to tax them at all. [Laughter.] This concern is a pretty good illustration, gentlemen, whether in my State or your State. of the cruel demands of avarice. Think of such a demand now when everyone knows that the cost of living is higher than ever before, that a man who receives a salary, the employee and the wage earner who receives a daily wage for his daily toil, are paying more to-day for something to live on and to keep body and soul together than ever before.

Every man knows that the advance of wages in this country has not kept step with the advance in the cost of living. Every man knows further that the profit makers, the manufacturers, the business enterprises, and industries in this country are making the most tremendous profits in all the history of industry. What is their proposition? "Do not tax us. We are reveling in orgies of profits. Restore for us a high protective tariff. Although the cost of living is higher than ever before, put this tax upon consumption, put it upon the employees, upon the laboring man, put it upon the lawyer, the doctor, the merchant, the farmer; put it somewhere that will cause the cost of living to go higher; put it somewhere, so that we, who are making the most exorbitant profits in all history, will, by a law which you write, be able to make out of the people larger profits and at the same time escape all taxation." [Applause.] That is the proposition of the gentleman and his party here.

Never, my countrymen, was the demand of avarice so bold, so cruel, so wicked, so inhumane, as this demand of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], and the demand of the Republican Party here. Restore the protective tariff. Put a tax on ten, on coffee, on lumber; put a higher tax on sugar; increase the tariff tax on underwear, on clothes, and on all necessities of life. This is the alternative which the Republicans offer. In these days of unprecedented advance in the cost of living our committee thought it would be an outrage upon the American people to propose any such bill as the op-ponents of this bill recommend. [Applause on the Democratic side. l

Mr. AUSTIN. You are perfectly willing to add to the taxes of an American maker of pig iron, but you want to continue to put the product of the iron furnaces of Europe on the free list and not exact a farthing to help run this Government.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why do you put that ridiculous question to me when you admitted a few minutes ago that your company was shipping pig iron abroad in competition with the world and making more profits by over 100 per cent than at any time Will you not ever learn any better?

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask three questions. First, what was the theory of the exemption of agricultural associations?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means, of course, the income of partnership derived from agriculture. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that that question has been asked a considerable number of times. There is one very serious objection to including it, namely, the difficulty in its administration. Who knows what is invested in land and farming? If you use fertilizer this year, how much of that fertilizer is consumed by the profit-making growing crop and how much goes over to next year in improvement of the soil, and next year, and so on. If you ditch it, if you put 10,000 yards of ditching on a farm, how much of that ditching can you charge up to the current year's crop or operating expenses, and how much as permanent improvement?

There are a thousand and one things that enter into farming operations that would be most difficult to say whether it is operating current expenses or is new capital put in, or should go to surplus. For more than a thousand years it has been the policy of every government—your party always claimed that it was its policy—to foster agriculture. There are many exceptions in the laws of this and all nations as to agriculture. understand that every country in the world, as I said yesterday in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that levies an excess profit tax exempts incomes from agriculture. Now, we thought if Canada could except her farmers, if Great Britain could except her farmers, if Germany could except her farmers, if Russia could except her farmers, that we, in framing this revenue bill, could afford to exempt ours. I ask the gentleman if he objects to it?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I do. Mr. KITCHIN. Does he object to excepting the farmers of Ohio from this bill?

Mr. FESS. I object to discriminating in favor of any farmers' association in Ohio or elsewhere who would fall within the provisions of this bill if you put it on other people. It seems to me it is inequitable.

Another question. I wanted to ask three questions before I sat down.

Reverting to the interruption of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull], in reading at the bottom of page 3, he says there is a provision for taxing foreign corporations. Does that mean that you will tax the profits of a foreign corporation domiciled in Europe that is selling in this country?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the excess in proportion to the capital, as is fully explained and set out on page 4 of the bill which you have before you.

Mr. FESS. Is not this a foreign corporation that is doing business in this country?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and it is taxed under this bill.

Mr. FESS. Now, this question: Referring to the declination to allow the revenue tariff suggested by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], you said you did not want to add to the increased cost of living by a protective tariff. Do we not have a higher cost of living under your free-trade system?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; under the Underwood tariff act, but not because of the act. And if you Republicans would write a tariff increasing its rates, the cost of living would be that much higher. Shoes are higher now than they have ever been. Both shoes and hides are now on the free list. Your party put hides on the free list in the Payne Act and our party put shoes on the free list in the Underwood Act. Do not you believe that the price of shoes would be still higher if we were to put a 15 per cent tariff tax on them, and that it would cost the American manufacturer a little more to make them if we had a 15 per cent tariff tax on hides, which he would have to pay?

Mr. FESS. Certainly not; because you said when Republicans took the tariff off the price went up.

Mr. KITCHIN. Neither I nor any Democrat nor any Republican ever said that hides went up because the tariff was taken off. All claim that the price would necessarily be still higher if we were to put a tax of 15 per cent on them, as the Dingley The professed object of all Republicans in having a Act had. protective tariff is and always has been to enable the American manufacturer to get higher prices for his products in order to enable him to compete with the foreigner. If you do not believe that a high tariff enables the manufacturer to get a better price than he otherwise would get, what in the name of common sense do you want it, in the interest of protection to American industry, for. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Let me answer that question. My friend said that placing leather on the free list, as the Republicans did, resulted in the price going up. I admit that. That is because you put it on the free list. Now, if you put it on the protected list the price will go down, would it not? [Applause and

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, gentlemen, that is the gentleman's argument. Of course, he as well as every other man here knows that I never said that putting leather on the free list caused it to go up. Everyone knows the only fellows that would make that idiotic argument are stand-pat Republicans like my friend from Ohio. If they believe that because hides went on the free list the price of hides went up, every Republican protectionist in the House would favor putting all the products of the manufacturers on the free list, because then they would better serve the interests of the manufacturers, by forcing up higher the prices of their products. [Laughter.]
Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a further interruption?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If you discourage home production by bringing American production into competition with that of Europe, and this increases foreign production, then the price will go That is what free trade does.

Mr. KITCHIN. Who is competing with us now? You say that this great prosperity is not because of the Wilson administration and is not because of Democratic legislation, but because nobody is competing with us here; that we are shipping goods abroad and getting high prices, competing with everybody on earth. But Republicans still insist that in order to protect American industry, and incidentally to get $200,000,000 and more of needed revenue, we should put the Payne tariff back on the statute books. It has been shown time and again that it is impossible to produce the revenue by restoring the protective-tariff Payne Act.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that we imported $577,000,000 more goods than ever before and collected $111,000,000 less?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Payne Act in its last and best year, and without war, produced $353,000,000. The Underwood Act last year produced $334,000,000. More than $577,000,000 came in on the free list, and a billion dollars of imports on the free list came in last year, and those identical articles were on the free list under the Republican Payne Act. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We imported last year of articles on the free list $159,000,000 of rubber, $119,000,000 of raw silk, $158,000,000 of hides and skins, $59,000,000 of fibers, $40,000,000 of cotton, $35,000,000 of cocoa, $20,000,000 of tea, $115,000,000 of coffee, all of which, and millions more, were on the free list under your Payne Act. Why, then, do you complain and accuse us of bringing in these things free of duty? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman ought to know that there are at least 500 articles on the free list in the present tariff law that were also on the free list under the Payne law.

Mr. KITCHIN. And by far the greater part of free importations now are of articles which were on the free list in the Payne Act.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that there will be an exemption from the provisions of this bill of corporations such as we have in California for the raising of sugar beets? Does the gentleman classify such corporations as agricultural corporations?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no. Do not think that the big sugar corporations out in California could put one like that over the Ways and Means Committee. [Laughter.] The agricultural exemption is applied to partnerships and not corporations. We have got them all in, every one. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ELSTON. For instance, take the case of some of our land barons. I have in mind the case of a $40,000,000 estate, owned individually, or owned by a family group in partnership. Does the gentleman say that it is fair and equitable that a tremendous estate like that should be exempted?

Mr. KITCHIN. For individuals of large estates, such as the gentleman indicates, yes; because they would have to pay a large surtax under the income-tax law; but if they are not individuals but copartnerships, then the income from agriculture would be excepted in this bill. But they are not copartner-ships, as the gentleman thinks, They are corporations. The big sugar corporations in California and elsewhere in this counwill pay the tax under this bill, and you do not blame us either, do you?

Mr. ELSTON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not against the principle of this excess-profits tax [applause on the Democratic side]; I believe that taxes should be put upon those best able to bear them. As to the equality, the fairness, and the uniformity of this tax, I think there can be valid objections. Taxes should be equal and uniform, and should not bear disproportionately on one class, or on industry almost exclusively

Mr. KITCHIN. It is uniform. The gentleman's first objection was that he thought we were going to exempt these big sugar corporations out there that would come in competition with the individual farmer. That was the gentleman's complaint. I showed the gentleman that they would be required to pay just as they should pay.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman state which other countries have this excess-profit tax, and what the rates are in those countries as compared with this country?

Mr. KITCHIN. Great Britain has an excess-profit tax, and I understand it is 60 per cent. Her law bases the deduction upon the average per cent of profits the business was making for the three years before the war. For instance, if the per cent of profits for the three years prior to the war was 8 per cent, it deducts 8 per cent and taxes the excess profits 60 per cent. But I understand that the profits prior to the war were less than 8 per cent, and therefore the deduction is less. Germany has a little over 30 per cent, France has 40 per cent, and Russia has 40 per cent. Canada has 25 per cent, with a deduction of only 7 per cent for corporations and 10 per cent for others. Our deductions and exemptions are more than the deductions and exemptions of any other country, and we tax the excess of profits

Mr. FORDNEY. But is not that a war tax in Europe? Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is a war tax in Europe. Ma Many of you have been shouting preparedness in this country in order to get big appropriations out of the Treasury, until you have made the people think that our country is in as much danger as any of the warring nations in Europe, that the Japs are coming over from the west, and England, Germany, and France, and Russia are all coming from the east. We have been told that we are in deadly peril. We have been told by the jingoes that the belligerent nations, bankrupted and exhausted, just as soon as the war is over, looking over at America, with her big, rich, untouched resources, are going to join together and come over and conquer us, or make us indemnify them for all the losses in the war. That is the kind of stuff that your Navy League and your Security League and you Republicans and some of us good Democrats have been putting out to the country. [Applause.]
Mr. BUTLER. And the President of the United States. He asked us to give him the biggest Navy in the world.

Mr. KITCHIN. As much as I think of the President of the United States—and I think he is one of the greatest we have ever had, and I have got as much confidence in him as I have in anyone-I have never said that the President of the United States was not sometimes as wrong as Republicans are all the [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER again rose.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me get through explaining this bill. Mr. BUTLER. Would the gentleman prefer that we should not interrupt him?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is all right. I do not care. Go ahead. About the only thing Republicans are going to get out of this thing is courtesy, so go ahead. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is always civil, and therefore it is a temptation to us to have a little bit of a dispute with him. We can not, however, forget the fact-although gentlemen may say we are always in the wrong-that the President of the United States speaks for the American people, and I am one of those who followed him in what he has advocated. Therefore, when the gentleman talks about these excessive appropriations, I want him to include the leader of the American people.

Mr. ADAIR. Is not our leader advocating this bill? Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Whenever a Republican follows a Democratic President, he always follows him when the President is wrong, and never follows him when the President is right. [Applause and laughter.] My criticism of you is that the President has been right in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, and you did not follow him in the ninety-nine cases wherein he was right, In this case the President, in my opinion, made a mistake, and

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman seems to be informed as to the taxes that are levied in England.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman mean excess-profit taxes? Mr. SWITZER. I mean the taxes that we are borrowing from

Mr. KITCHIN. Prior to the war?

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman specify if there are any other taxes levied in England that we have not adopted, or are not now trying to adopt?

Mr. KITCHIN. England has enough concern for the men and the women and children who must have food to eat and clothes to wear and blankets under which to sleep that she does not in times of peace, as the gentleman's party does, put a tax on these necessities of life in the interest of tariff barons.

Mr. MADDEN. How about the income tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it. Before the war Great Britain taxed incomes twice as much as our income-tax bill of 1914, and 50 per cent more than our income tax of last year. In other words, Great Britain before the war collected about $240,000,000 in income taxes on total incomes 50 per cent less than ours.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman state the exemption in England?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the exemption was $750. And yet the man whose income over $750 is taxed did not pay as much taxes there as a man pays here who earns much less than that. You must remember that when he pays there a tax on incomes in excess of $750, the rates of which is low on small incomes and is higher as the income increases, he does not pay anything like as much as one would here in poll taxes, in city, county, and State taxes. He pays no tax on hats, on shoes, on clothes; but the man who only gets $3 a day here pays every one of these taxes. The man who gets $3 a day, the wage earner, under a Federal indirect-tax system such as the gentleman's party favors, with the State and county taxes, pays more taxes than the man in England paid who had an income of $2,000.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman state what reason governed the committee in determining the 8 per cent for excess

Mr. KITCHIN. To get the required amount of revenue. We put the exemption or deduction at 8 per cent, because we thought 8 per cent was a good, fair investment profit, and we did not want to make the tax burdensome to anybody. Does the gentleman think it should be higher or lower, or what would he put it at now?

Mr. DENISON. I was not speaking of the justness of the tax. I was asking the gentleman an intelligent question.

Mr. KITCHIN. And I am asking the gentleman an intelligent question.

Mr. DENISON. I wanted to know what consideration determined the committee in fixing it at 8 per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have given the gentleman the information. Now, would the gentleman put it higher or lower?

Mr. DENISON. I would devise an entirely different system of taxation.

Mr. KITCHIN. What kind of a system would the gentleman devise?

Mr. DENISON. I would put a tariff on imports, myself. Mr. KITCHIN. Would the gentleman put a tariff on tea?

Mr. DENISON. No. sir Mr. KITCHIN. Would be put a tariff on coffee?

Mr. DENISON. No. sir.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would he put a tariff on wool?

Mr. DENISON.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would he put a tariff on lumber?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan should coach the gentleman from Illinois. He is fully able to take care of himself. The gentleman said that he would tax wool. Of course, if you are going to put a tax on wool and thereby make the manufacturer pay more for it, then you, like the Republicans have done in every tariff they have written since 1867, must increase the tariff tax on the manufactured product—on clothing—as a compensatory duty for the increased duty on the raw material. The consumer would pay thereby a higher price for woolen clothes. Would not you do that?

Mr. DENISON. I rose to ask the gentleman a question, for information which he does not give, but puts to me 15 or 20 questions

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes; the gentleman rose to tag me, but he won't allow me to tag him. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Does my friend consider that I am tagging him?

Mr. KITCHIN. Would the gentleman put a higher tariff on woolen goods that the people must have?

Would he put a higher tax on sugar than there is to-day? Will the gentleman answer yes or no?

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman want me to take the floor?

Mr. KITCHIN. Would you put a higher tax on sugar? Mr. DENISON. Yes, I would; just as the Democrats

Yes, I would; just as the Democrats did. Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; when sugar is higher than ever before, and the sugar companies are making millions of dollars profit out of the people, he would levy an additional tax on sugar and make the people pay it and at the same time enable the great sugar companies to make more profit still. That is their proposition. They want to levy by an increase of the tariff a tax whereby the cost of living to the consumer, to the wage earner, will be sent higher, and by which at the same time the manufacturers of sugar and woolen goods and of lumber can exact a higher price from the people and thereby swell their already swollen profits. But they refuse to take $1 of that profit to help support the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania? Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In order to relieve this situation for a moment-

Mr. KITCHIN. When did the gentleman ever relieve a situation here? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have helped the gentleman get a laugh from his own side.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, it is the only side that feels good, that can laugh. You gentlemen have nothing to laugh over.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, we are just as much amused as the gentleman's side is. But while we are discussing tleman kindly indicate whether the high cost of living is attributable in any way to the increased profits of the cotton producer?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania just can not keep from being a little bit sectional. Why mention cotton of the South and not wheat and corn of the West.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentlemen on the other side to laugh a little bit now. Has the gentleman so shaped this bill that the cotton producer or the exporter pays a single cent of this tax? Will the gentleman answer?

Mr. KITCHIN. The cotton producer pays no tax under this bill unless the producer is a corporation. Neither does the wheat, the corn, the grain, the truck, the live-stock producer, nor the producer of any other agricultural product, unless a corporation, pay any tax under this bill. Since the gentleman has mentioned cotton, let me tell him that, unlike the products of his State, there has not been in 50 years any tariff or any kind of protection on cotton. Our cotton goes out to the markets of the world in competition with millions of bales from India and Egypt, and we have never asked and do not ask for one single penny of tariff protection though $40,000,000 worth of long staple cotton was imported here last year free in competition with our long staple cotton. We did not ask it when cotton went down to 6 cents a pound. Cotton is now 15 cents, it has been this season as high as 20 cents a pound, the highest it has reached in over 40 years. This good price was the result of the good sense and the economy of the farmers of the South, who said that instead of making a 16,000,000 bale crop and having a surthat instead of making a 16,000,000 bale crop and having a surplus of five or six million bales which, on account of war they could not export, they would cut down the acreage and make 11,000,000 bales. This high price does not compensate the loss in bales that the cotton farmer voluntarily incurred, and the loss in price he incurred in 1914 when the European war broke out. We lost on our cotton crop $400,000,000 in the South, in 1914, and this 15 to 20 cent per pound cotton does not pay it back. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman admits that cotton pays nothing in this bill. Will the gentleman deny that this bill is intended to levy a tax upon those who manufacture the raw cotton?

the raw cotton?

Mr. KITCHIN. Cotton pays or does not pay just exactly like wheat in the West, like truck, and grain, and dairying, and stock raising in the gentleman's own State and other States. If produced by a corporation and there is an excess profit it pays a tax. If not, it, like other agricultural products, does not be.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman wanders from the question, as usual. The tax is imposed upon the manufacturer of cotton and is not imposed upon the producer.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is enough to make anybody get away from the question. The tax will be paid by the manufacturers of cotton and by the manufacturers of other agricultural products provided the manufacturer is a corporation or copartnership and there is an excess profit.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman stated as one of the reasons for exempting the profits of agriculture from the provisions of this bill the administrative difficulties in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to ask whether he considers it more difficult to keep track of profits on the farm than of profits in a large manufacturing industry?

Mr. KITCHIN. It may be the gentleman is right. It may be that it is easier to keep track of profits of any industry than one of these protective-tariff manufacturing industries. The tariff board here under Taft's administration could not get track of them in everything.

Let me return to the excess-profits tax. An official of a big corporation came into my office yesterday to protest against this method of taxation, declaring that it was disastrous and confiscatory. I asked how much his corporation would have to pay under the bill and he said about $500,000. "That sounds mighty big; that is a big tax," I said. "But, my friend, you have not given the other side. When you tell me that under this excess-profits tax your corporation will pay $500,000, I tell you that that is evidence that it is making a most tremendous profit. Before the Government gets a cent of that $500,000 your corporation shall have already had $5,000 deducted and 8 per cent clear net profit on your capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, which alone is a good investment profit, and in addition to that profit you have eleven times $500,000, or $5,500,000 of clear profit. In other words, after setting aside for your 8 per cent net profit on your investment and then the $5,000 your corporation gets $5,500,000 additional clear profits and the Government only gets $500,000. That is about one-twelfth of your profit in excess of $5,000 and a net profit of 8 per cent." Now, can any man say that is an exorbitant or disastrous or burdensome tax for that concern to pay to help support and defend the Government under which it had made such immense profits?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman if I should ask him a question or two?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit.

Mr. BUTLER. I voted for some of these large appropriations and we have got to pay the price. I want to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. KITCHIN. Surely.
Mr. BUTLER. I do not care about involving the country in debt if I do not help to pull it out. How much money have we to raise this year, or rather how much money are we short? Will the gentleman answer one or two questions so I can get it straight in my mind? I am not going to listen to all the speeches on this subject.

Mr. KITCHIN. According to the estimates of the department

Mr. BUTLER. For this year?

Mr. KITCHIN. For 1918.

Mr. BUTLER. For the present year up until July 1, 1917. How much short will we be?

Mr. KITCHIN. This year, ending June 30, we will have the general balance fund reduced to about $64,000,000. The excess of disbursements over receipts for this fiscal year, ending June 30, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department, will be between $160,000,000 and $170,000,000. But the gentleman and the House should understand that included in the estimated disbursements are the estimated expenditures on account of the Mexican trouble, amounting to $162,418,000. This accounts for the apparently large excess of disbursements. These expenditures, as the House understands, were not provided for in the revenue act of last session. We intended then, and I so stated to the House, to meet such expenditures by bonds, and in this bill we are so providing. Out of the proceeds of the bonds the Treasury will be reimbursed to the amount so expended.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, how are we going to raise that? What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. KITCHIN. That excess of disbursements will be reimbursed to the extent of $162,418,000 as just explained. The revenue bill of last session, most of which will be paid in May and June, together with part of the large general balance fund in the Treasury at the end of the last fiscal year, provides for the increase of preparedness appropriation of last session.

Mr. BUTLER. Will that raise a sufficient amount?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that with part of the general balance fund, as stated, but it will reduce the balance in the general fund at the end of the present fiscal year to about $64,000,000too low for the balance to be. Mr. BUTLER. Therefore it is not contemplated by this bill we are to raise any revenue except to provide for the expenditures of next year?

Mr. KITCHIN. For the next and following years. Mr. BUTLER. One or two questions more.

Mr. KITCHIN. Go ahead.

Mr. BUTLER. I would not disturb the gentleman, but he is well informed. I am not here for the purpose of provoking merriment but endeavoring to learn, for this is not a trifling business of putting $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 tax on the Amer-

Mr. KITCHIN. It is most serious; go ahead. Mr. BUTLER. How much do we propose to bond the Government for?

Mr. KITCHIN. We propose bond issues for the following purposes: One hundred and sixty-two million four hundred and eighteen thousand dollars for the Mexican situation.

Mr. BUTLER. Does that cover Vera Cruz?
Mr. KITCHIN. No; Vera Cruz is paid for. This is for the Mexican border trouble. For the construction of the Alaskan Railroad, $35,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I voted for that.

Mr. KITCHIN. For an armor-plate plant, $11,000,000. Mr. BUTLER. I did not vote for that.

I want to know whether or not I can vote for this bond issue and vote for it separately?

Mr. KITCHIN. Twenty-five million dollars for the purchase of the Danish West Indies.

Mr. BUTLER. I approve of that.
Mr. KITCHIN. Bonds already authorized but not issued under the shipping act, $50,000,000. Nitrate plant, $20,000,000. These several items make $303,418,000.

Mr. BUTLER. For which we are going to bond the country?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We have available for issue $222,-00,000 of Panama bonds. We require $303,418,000 for the 000,000 of Panama bonds. We require $303,418,000 for the specific objects mentioned. We propose now to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, in addition to the amount of Panama bonds available, as required to meet the expenditures on account of such objects, bonds not exceeding $100,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Making how much?
Mr. KITCHIN. The whole bond issue, already authorized and to be authorized by this bill, $322,000,000.

Now, that is not so bad-

Mr. BUTLER. No; it does not seem so large to me. [Laughter.] Although it is quite a little bit.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman wish any more information

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. And what sort of deficiency do we propose to make up for the balance of the tax you are about to levy? Will we have an opportunity to vote for the bond issue separate and apart?

Mr. KITCHIN. The tax we propose to levy is made necessary by increased appropriations for preparedness. Committee of the Whole you can offer an amendment to strike out all except the bond provisions.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but does the gentleman propose to give us an opportunity? It will be a very lame attempt that I would make.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to explain how you can do it. You want to vote on the bond issue?

Mr. BUTLER. I am perfectly frank to say that I am willing to vote for the bond issue to pay for what is known as military preparedness which the Government has been making, because I helped to do that.

Mr. KITCHIN. You want to vote separately on the bond question in this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I would like to vote for the bond issue that would cover this military, preparation.

Mr. KITCHIN. The bond issue is not for preparedness. The tax in the bill is for that. I will tell you how you can vote separately in the bond issue in the bill. If you do not care to offer amendment in Committee of the Whole, being opposed to the bill, get recognition from the Speaker, and then make a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out all portions of the bill except the bond provisions.

Mr. BUTLER. I am a little familiar with the rules of the House, but I know it would be rather a useless attempt for me to make, and therefore I do not see how I can vote for any part of this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. If you will make the motion to recommit and you are cut out from that motion to recommit, it will be because you are prevented by your colleagues and not by us.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to thank the gentleman for answering my questions.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you thoroughly understand it now?
Mr. BUTLER. I do not. [Laughter.] Some day there will appear a man who can understand it.
Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. GORDON. Are the taxes provided for in this bill intended to pay for the increase of expenditures in the Army and Navy and in the fortifications bills for this year, with an excess over last year?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir; it covers that for which the gentlemen here, three-fourths of them on both sides, are going to vote.

Mr. KEARNS. How much?

Mr. KITCHIN. The estimates are $164,000,000 increase over similar appropriation made last session, and $520,000,000 over similar appropriation for fiscal year 1915-16. But understand the appropriation for preparedness for the last year took out of the general balance fund about $75,000,000. And we should put that back or certainly enough to make $100,000,000 in the general balance fund.

Mr. FERRIS. As I understand the chairman of the committee, there are about $233,000,000 of contracts for which the Government stands committed, passed during the last session of Congress, in the Army bill. That will be one item.

Mr. KITCHIN. This tax continues. It is hoped that it, to-gether with existing revenue laws, will take care of the Government expenditures in the years hereafter.

Mr. FERRIS. These authorizations were made last year and the Government stands committed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is, for such authorizations as were made in the acts of last year, as long as they remain unre-

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, Mr. STAFFORD. What was the purpose of the last revenue bill, except to provide for these increased appropriations?

Mr. KITCHIN. You have increased them for the next year, according to the estimates, by $164,000,000 over last year, and last year's appropriation will, in addition to the new tax levy of last session, take about $75,000,000 from the general balance fund of last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. After we pass the Navy, military, and Intifications bills.

Mr. FERRIS. These continuing contracts will not be completed in this fiscal year, but over a period of years,

Mr. KITCHIN. Such contracts as have been or will be made under a three-year program. I would like to call the attention of the House, and I wish I could that of the country, to the tremendous increases in the appropriations for preparedness we have been making. If we continue to yield to the jingo clamor, and go on increasing yearly such appropriations, I do not care which party is in, it is going to puzzle the brains and worry the wits of Congress to find means of procuring from taxation the amount necessary to finance such appropriations,

Now, just stop a moment and think! The largest appropriation for Army, Navy, and fortifications by over $10,000,000 that Congress had ever passed before "preparedness" struck the country was in 1915 for the fiscal year 1915–1916. It amounted to $258,000,000. Men in this House—Republicans and Democrats—held up their hands and said, "We will never go any further. We must call a halt." When this $258,000,000 of appropriations was passed the European war had already been raging over six months. We knew every fact about the war that we know now. We knew about the big ships, the big guns, every military device, everything that we now know.

thought that was big then.

But then came along the Navy League and the Security League and these other so-called patriotic leagues, largely controlled by munition manufacturers and war traffickers and jingoes. They filled the very air with goblins of foreign injingoes. They filled the very air with goblins of foreign invasion. They, with the jingo press, sent to every nook and corner of the country tons of literature of deception. They alarmed the people into the belief or fear that our country was absolutely defenseless and helpless; that we existed only by the mercy of this or that foreign nation; that we had no ships, no guns, no army, no navy, no fortifications; that every minute we were in imminent danger of foreign invasion and conquest. Executive and Congress, taking fright, responded to the demands of a deceived and frightened people.

So instead of $258,000,000 appropriated in a calmer and less nervous moment a year before, the administration and Congress, Democrats and Republicans, piled up preparedness appropriaexclusive of the Mexican situation, to the amount of $613,000,000; and the estimates for this year are $777,000,000! In other words, there is an increase in two years over the normal $258,000,000, which was the largest up to that time in the history of the Government, of over $873,000,000, an average increase yearly of $436,500,000. For last year and this year we for Army, Navy, and fortifications alone make appropriations, and must provide taxes to pay it, of $873,000,000 more than if we had just gone along with the regular, normal program and gradual annual increase. And this big annual increase will keep up, and the big annual taxes will keep up also.

Our opponents tell us we could raise the needed revenue by a tariff. Gentlemen, it would be impossible for you to do it. There is not a man who has given study to this question, be he Republican or Democrat, that does not know it would be impossible to raise it with any kind of a tariff that you could devise-impossible to raise more than about $400,000,000 by any kind of a tariff in normal times and not near that much now under present conditions-and you would then lack over $350,000,000 annually, having enough to pay for preparedness appropriations alone, to say nothing of the hundreds of millions of dollars needed for other departments and functions of the Government. A member of your party, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] last session showed the impossibility of financing the increased appropriations for preparedness by a tariff or other methods of taxation formerly adopted by the Republican Party. I wish again to impress upon the House and the country, and especially upon my Republican colleagues, the fact:

If during the four years of the Taft administration, with the Payne tariff act in force and all the other revenue measures then existing, there had been appropriated for the Army and the Navy and fortifications the same amount of appropriations that we made last session, for which you Republicans as well as most of the Democrats voted, and which we will make this session, for which you will vote, there would have been a deficit in the Treasury at the end of his administration of $2,100,000,000. If the Payne Act and every revenue act that was on the books under the Taft administration had remained unchanged and were on the statute books now, to finance the appropriations for Army, Navy, and fortifications of last session and of this session, we would require additional taxation of $900,000,000, and to finance them for four years would require over $2,000,000,000 additional taxation.

Gentlemen, you know you can not raise it by a tariff. Yes; ou know it, In spite of the groundless statements in the minority report, the fact is that last year the Underwood Act, with its income-tax provision, produced and is now producing as much revenue as the Payne Act, with its corporation-tax provision, could have produced. While we produced less in customs receipts last year than the Payne Act would have produced, the difference was made good in the large excess of the income-tax receipts of the Underwood Act over the corporation-tax receipts of the Payne Act. The Payne Act corporation-tax provision would have yielded last year $40,000,000, while the Underwood Act income-tax provision produced $125,000,000. So, gentlemen, you would get nowhere with your Payne Act, which you ask to be restored to produce the necessary revenue, and you know it as well as I do. Every intelligent man knows that with higher duties the imports would have been obstructed and therefore reduced and the duties collected less. While our free-list articles during the war have greatly increased in importations, our dutiable articles, even under the lower rates of the Underwood Act, have decreased.

Now, just look at the facts as they are, as honest men and patriotic men, whether Republicans or Democrats, ought to do. As I have shown, it is impossible to raise by any kind of tariff the revenue required for increased preparedness. The Payne Act while in force in normal times when dutiable imports were unhindered by war raised in customs receipts only $326,000,000 in 1910, only $309,000,000 in 1911, $304,000,000 in 1912, and $312,-000,000 in 1913. Even if the Payne Act would produce as much now during the war as it then did, we would lack over $450,-000,000 of having enough revenue from that source to defray the preparedness appropriations alone.

The responsibility this session, as it was last session, of presenting to Congress a bill to raise revenue sufficient to finance the huge appropriations for preparedness, for which Republicans and Democrats voted, was upon the Ways and Means Committee of the House. We knew we could not get it under any kind of a tariff. Last year we presented a bill so wise, so just, so equitable, and it so appealed to the conscience and judgment of patriotic men that for the first time in the history of revenue legislation the minority party failed in the Ways and Means Committee to get a majority of their own members to vote against the bill. Half of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee voted for that bill.

Forty Republicans upon the floor of the House voted for the bill, because they knew the money could not be raised by any method of taxation theretofore pursued by their party and that the bill provided for a fair and just way to get it. We are now under the absolute necessity of raising additional revenue, amounting to $207,000,000 or more, for increased preparedness. We could have raised it out of consumption; we could have We could posraised it out of the necessities of the people. sibly have raised it by a tax upon tea and coffee and beer and whisky and tobacco and pig iron and petroleum and wool and shoes and clothes and food products and hundreds of other different articles of daily consumption of the people, and it would have required a tax on all of these articles to get suffi-We could have done that, but we felt it would cient revenue. not be right to do it now, when the cost of living to the people, to the wage earner, to the widow and orphan, has increased so much. In these days of the high cost of living the dollar of the wage earner, of the widow and the orphan goes a shorter way than ever before. It purchases less than ever before. We felt that it would be wrong-not only wrong but inhumane-for us to levy this $207,000,000 extra taxes upon the consumption and the necessities of the people. We could have procured it by largely increasing the income tax. But in order to raise the required amount we would have had to make the normal tax tax from 2 per cent to 4 per cent, then, whether a man or a corporation made 2 per cent or 4 per cent upon his investment, or more or less, he would have to pay an income tax twice as large as he now pays. This would be a hardship on many who are making little or no net profit on investments. It would be too high. Take a $100,000 partnership or corporation, of which I spoke awhile ago. Suppose we should try to raise the additional needed revenue by increasing the normal income tax to 4 per cent? If it made only 6 per cent, it would have to pay $120 extra. Say it made only 4 per cent. On such increased normal tax it would have to pay $80. But under the excess-profit tax plan it would pay nothing. Now, we felt that copartnerships and corporations, after allowing them the deduction of $5,000 and then a deduction of a clear 8 per cent profit, could better afford to pay one-twelfth of the excess profit—that is, 8 per cent on such excess—not a big tax, to help make up this $207,000,000, than levying an extra 2 per cent on all incomes, whether the profits were large or small.

While the cost of living is higher, while the purchasing power of the wage earner's, of the orphan's and widow's dollar is less than ever before, the profits of the profit makers are larger than ever before, and we felt that after giving them a reasonable deduction and exemption, which of themselves are a nice investment profit, it would be fairer and more just and least burdensome to make the excess profits bear the burden of this tax rather than put the burden upon the necessities of life and the consumption of the people and thus increase still higher the cost of

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.
Mr. KELLEY. I think I appreciate the desire of the gentleman to make the well-to-do bear this tax; but does the gentleman think that by putting the tax on the well-to-do it will surely stay there?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not think that tax will stay there on the well-to-do if the Republicans get control of Congress next time. I think they will take it off and put it on consumption and the necessities of the people. I want to say to some of the Democrats who want to vote against this bill, not because they think the bill is a bad one, but because they do not want to vote for any more taxes for increased appropriations for preparednessalthough I voted against the big fortification bill yesterday, as a number of us did, I found out then that an overwhelming majority are going to vote also for the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy demanded by the departments, and we have got to levy a tax in some way or other in order to meet them. The question is whether we Democrats shall levy a tax upon excess profits or whether we shall defeat this bill and wait until some time in the future—possibly next session, and an extra session at that—when it is possible for the Republicans, with a handful of wild preparedness Democrats, to force the burden of this tax upon the necessities of the men, women, and children of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. Under the provisions of this act undoubtedly the packers will be obliged to pay a certain tax. Does the gentleman think that will come out of the profits of the packers or will it come across the counter when the laboring man buys his meat?

Mr. KITCHIN. I know that the gentleman asks the question sincerely. I have thought about that same thing. Of course, when we put as we do an excise or specific tax on an article, such as the $1.10 tax on a gallon of whisky, the distiller who such as the $1.10 tax on a gallon of whisky, the distiller who sells it to the retailer adds that specific tax to the price, and in turn the retailer, with some profit on the investment, will add it to the price to the consumer. If we levy a specific tax on an article, whether on whisky, tobacco, or wheat, or meat or other articles, it is added to the price of the article all the way from producer to consumer. The seller knows exactly where and how much to add. But it is more difficult to transfer an income tax and I do not think it is done unless the power has a practitax, and I do not think it is done, unless the payer has a practical monopoly of the production or sale of an article. In such case he can transfer even his income tax to the consumer.

Mr. KELLEY. Take the case of the sugar refiner. Mr. KITCHIN. But of all the different schemes of taxation the excess-profit tax, under any circumstance, would be the most difficult, almost impossible, to pass on to the consumer.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. These bonds are to run for 50 years? Mr. KITCHIN. They run not to exceed 50 years. Mr. FESS. With the idea that there will be a better market

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the Panama Canal bond act they must run for 50 years. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury can make them as well as the additional $100,000,000 authorized by the bill have a maturity less than 50 years. They bear 3 per cent, payable quarterly.

Mr. FESS. What about the denomination?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is left to the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. FESS. What about the market value? Mr. KITCHIN. They must be sold at not less than par or face value.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has no idea what the bonds would sell for? The bonds of 1894 are quoted at 117.

Mr. KITCHIN. Such bonds as you mention could be used to secure national bank circulation or as security for Government deposits, and this added to the value of them.

Mr. FESS. These bonds are not security for national banks?

Mr. KITCHIN. These bonds would not be security for the circulation of national banks,

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Section 201 provides:

That in addition to the taxes under existing laws there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation and partnership organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, no matter how created or organized, excepting income derived from the business of life, heaith, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan, a tax of 8 per cent, etc.

Has the gentleman thought about the application of that to the building-loan associations?

Mr. KITCHIN. The same kind of insurance companies and building and loan associations that are exempt under the present income-tax law are exempted in the pending bill, and the exemption includes the associations to which the gentleman

Mr AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Is it not a fact that when we discussed the last revenue bill in this House, the Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], stated that he could take the tariff schedule and write a tariff bill that would produce twice the amount we are now receiving at the customhouse?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what he said but was referring to normal times, when dutiable imports are unobstructed by war.

That is what I said to-day, in normal times.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the Speaker refer to normal times?

Mr. KITCHIN. We understood that on account of the war the tariff then was not, and is not now, producing the normal amount. We are now receiving only about $200,000,000 annually. What I understood him to mean was that by a tariff in normal times we could raise about $400,000,000 and that was the limit. I have to-day taken the same position. As I said a while ago you could do it in normal times but you would have to abandon the Republican policy of the free list, you would have to abandon the Democratic policy of the free list, you would have to tax tea and coffee and hundreds of articles carried on the free list under both Republican and Democratic tariffs alike and would have to increase the duties on manufactured products immensely, in some cases over the Payne or Dingley or Underwood Acts in order to produce the $400,000,000.

I was in hopes that the gentlemen on the Republican side could join in with the Democrats here and put this bill upon the statute books by a nonpartisan vote, as the fair and equitable thing to do. But from the questions that have been put to me I am certain that they do not want to help us raise any additional revenue, though they vote for and admit its necessity. I hope every Democrat will understand exactly what they are They are after forcing this country tack into a high protective tariff policy. I hope that no Democrat by his vote on this bill will give them encouragement in that effort. [Ap-

Gentlemen, this is not a political question. You can make all the politics out of it you want, but when you stand in the face of the facts-in face of the necessity of financing these tremendous appropriations for which you on both sides of the aisle voted, and for which the administration stands sponsor also, and when you consider the impossibility of raising anything like the required amount by a tariff, it is up to youup to you Democrats, up to you Republicans, to say whether we ought to get it out of the exorbitant excess profits of the profit makers, or whether we should levy it upon the necessities of life and the consumption of the people. Gentlemen, that is the question with which you are face to face. How are you going to vote? [Loud applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for 2 hours and 10 minutes we have listened to some very interesting polite vaudeville. Note what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has said, and then read what the Congres-SIONAL RECORD will print as his speech, for if we can judge correctly from past experience there will be but little resemblance between the two.

I am going to confine myself for a few moments to some notes I have made, and then I shall cut loose from and en-deavor to explain some of the things from a Republican standpoint that have been presented by the gentleman from North Carolina

Since the enactment of the inefficient tariff act of October 3. 1913, this is the fourth so-called emergency revenue measure to be forced through Congress. It is interesting and instructive, in the consideration of this bill, to go back and refresh our memories in regard to the other three revenue bills and to re-view the reasons given by Members on the Democratic side of the House for their enactment.

The first was the so-called war tax or stamp tax of October 22, 1914, and the reason then given for the deficiency in revenue receipts was that the war in Europe was causing a loss of imports and customs receipts. The President came into this Chamber on September 4, 1914, and pointed with alarm to the fact that customs receipts for the month of August, 1914, were $10,000,000 less than in August, 1913. He said the loss was due almost entirely to the war in Europe and not to a change in our tariff laws. Customs receipts for August, 1914, were approximately $19,000,000, while during August, 1913, which, he neglected to tell us, was under a Republican tariff law, customs receipts exceeded $30,000,000. But August, 1914, was not the first month that a loss in customs receipts was in evidence. In February, five months prior to the war and when no one believed such a war possible, customs receipts were but $17,000,000. Why did not this alarm the President? It was $2,000,000 less than the month of August that caused him such anxiety. For eight months prior to the war customs receipts averaged but $22,200,000 per month, while the month of August, 1913, which the President evidently assumed to be a normal month, showed receipts amounting to $30,934,000 from import There is every evidence that the cause for the decline duties. in customs receipts existed months before the var was thought of. It was the Underwood tariff law. That inefficient law, my friends, was the cause of the loss of customs receipts, and the war in Europe was but an excuse for the imposition of that objectionable so-called war tax in the time of peace.

The second revenue bill provided for the reenactment of the stamp tax. It followed the first by some 16 months, and the reason given by the Democrats for its necessity was the continuation of the war in Europe.

The third member of the ever-increasing family of direct taxes was the revenue measure of September 8, 1916. It could hardly be blamed on a loss of imports, for imports during the calendar year of 1916 were over half a billion dollars greater than any previous year in our history. The reason given for that tax was the increased expenditures for the Army and Navy. The report on the bill reads in part as follows:

It is therefore deemed proper that in meeting the extraordinary expenditures for the Army and Navy our revenue system should be more evenly and equitably balanced and a larger portion of our necessary revenues collected from the incomes and inheritances of those deriving the most benefit and protection from the Government.

Now comes the fourth emergency revenue measure, so closely related to the other three. In asking for its passage the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee in their report show the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy, fortifications, and so forth, for the years 1917 and 1918 over the year 1916. This new revenue measure is to provide money for all the increased expenditures. However, have they forgotten that the act of September 8, 1916, was to provide for the very same thing? It leads us to wonder if the proceeds of the act of September 8, 1916, were not used for something besides the Army and Navy. And will the proceeds of this act be used for something other than Army and Navy expenditures?

It is indeed hard to believe that the majority Members of this House do not know that the Underwood tariff law is not producing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government. Fifty million dollars additional customs receipts could be raised on sugar and wool. During the calendar year ending December 31, 1916, $1,611,952,000 worth of imports were admitted free of duty, while but $779,763,697 were on the dutiable list.

The fulfillment of campaign pledges is an old-time, threadbare boast of the Democratic Party. The following is a pledge in the Democratic platform of 1916:

We reaffirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government economically administered and unreservedly indorse the Underwood tariff law as truly exemplifying that doctrine.

If the Democratic Party is sincere in this pledge, why resort to these objectionable and ever-increasing direct-tax measures? This is the fourth emergency revenue measure in less than two and one-half years. If Democrats are going to enact these laws more frequently than one a year, why worry about expenditures for more than a year at a time. In the report on this bill reference is made to the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy for this year and next year. to me that if the increased appropriations for but one year had been taken, it would not warrant the enormous additional amount of revenue which this bill proposes to collect.

The framers of the so-called excess-profit tax seek to justify the tax on the ground that any firm making more than 8 per cent on the capital invested can well bear additional taxation. I have in mind some firms that have had some pretty lean years. They are in debt and are not very hopeful for the period to follow the ending of the war in Europe. These firms will pay no dividends this year, but will pay this excess-profit tax. I believe there are many firms not on a sound financial basis that will be hit by this proposed law.

However, the greatest objection to this tax is not that it is oppressive, but that it is an additional attempt on the part of the administration to repudiate the policy of a tariff for protection. It is a refusal to recognize the revenue-raising possibilities of an adequate tariff law. It is a refusal to aid American industries in meeting changed conditions throughout the world that will follow the war in Europe. It is a declaration by Congress that American labor and American manufacturers must face ruinous competition from abroad without adequate tariff pro-tection. It means a return of conditions that prevailed in this country prior to the war in Europe. It means business depression, financial failures, and men out of employment.

In the preparation of the bill advice and suggestions from Republicans was neither sought nor considered. Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee were given no opportunity to formally confer with the majority members, and Republicans should decline to accept the responsibility for

On account of the wonderful industrial activity throughout the world, occasioned by the war in Europe, manufacturing establishments in America have prospered and progressed in spite of adverse legislation. The progress will continue until the ending of hostilities in Europe. When peace does come, I believe America will awaken to very changed conditions throughout the world. Europe will have but little to buy from us and much to sell. Keen competition will exist and the struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy may find America woefully unprepared. Men who now seek to heap all the taxes upon industry will then realize the mistakes now being made. It will be argued that this is a tax on the rich; that it is a tax on excess profits. But, whatever it may be called, it is a direct tax, and will be reflected to some extent upon the cost of living. America needs a protective tariff to meet conditions after the war, and it is hard for me to conceive that our Democratic friends do not realize this fact. coming into office it has been their chief aim to repudiate the policy of protection. Additional revenue can be raised with ease by means of an adequate tariff law. The real big objection to this revenue bill is that it is a further attempt on the part of the party in power to repudiate the policy of protection. They ignore the revenue-raising possibilities of a tariff law. It is a refusal to consider the question of industrial preparedness to meet after-war conditions. Their refusal to consider the question of increasing tariff rates, whether they choose to call it for revenue or for protection, or both, is very menacing to American prosperity. The platforms of the Republican and Progressive Parties contained pledges for the establishment of an adequate tariff law. I am so convinced as to the correctness of our tariff policy that I believe it our duty to fight for it whenever opportunity is offered.

Mr. Chairman, a statement was made in error this morning about the amount of bends to be issued by this administration. The gentleman from North Carolina stated that there are $220,000,000 of Panama bonds yet unissued. The fact is, the Treasury statement which I received this morning, giving the condition of the Treasury at the close of business on Saturday night last, shows that $240,569,000 of Panama Government bonds remain yet unsold.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Of course, the statement was made to the gentleman yesterday as to that proposition that a certain amount of these had been set aside to meet expenses of the Postal Savings act, which reduced the amount to two hundred and twenty-one million and odd dollars.

Mr. FORDNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but those bonds have not been sold. If so, your Treasury statement is false, because it says those bonds were yet unsold on Saturday

Mr. HELVERING. Not sold.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then why do you say that those $22,000,000 have been disposed of?

Mr. HELVERING. I said they had been set aside to be disposed of for that purpose.

Mr. FORDNEY. But they have not been set aside, and they ought not to be set aside for that purpose. Those bonds were issued to be sold for the purpose of raising revenue to construct the Panama Canal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. In just a minute. Under a Republican administration, prior to the 4th of March, 1913, $165,820,000 was paid out of the general funds of the Treasury on account of the Panama Canal; $134,000,000 of Panama bonds were sold, on which $138,600,000 was received. Since March 4, 1913, the Democratic administration has expended $106,300,000 for this account, which makes a total to date of $410,720,000 spent on the Panama Canal. Further, when the Republican Party went out of power upon the 3d day of March, 1913, and turned over the Treasury to the Democrats there was $126,664,000 in the Treasury over and above all liabilities of the Government, including in the liabilities all money on hand to redeem national-bank notes. You have not spent as much money on the Panama Canal as we left you in the Treasury; and, moreover, the Treasury statement of Saturday night shows $112,000,000 of liabilities in the Treasury, not including warrants outstanding in the hands of disbursing officers amounting to $74,375,000 and $51,301,000 on deposit to redeem national-bank notes and the outstanding Treasurer's checks, which vary from three to eight million dollars. These items are not real assets, but are liabilities. Using the same method of bookkeeping employed to show the balance of $126,664,000 on the 3d day of March, 1913, would show the total liabilities of the Treasury on Saturday last to be $242,989,000, with total assets on hand of but $205,-000,000 to meet those liabilities. Therefore, on Saturday night you had a deficit of $37,109,000, and in addition to that you have expended the money we left you. You are getting along fine with your finances, are you not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman object to having the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Helvering] state for what purpose the $22,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds were set

Mr. FORDNEY. I would be very glad to have the gentleman state what they were set aside for.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman contends there are $240,- 000,000 of Panama Canal bonds which the statement shows have not been sold. I simply rose to say that that amount was not available, and the amount carried in the report is $220,000,000, because some of this money is intended to be used for the purpose of carrying forward the postal savings act which we enacted in the last Congress. That is the statement made to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There were only $9,000,000 set aside for that purpose.

Mr. FORDNEY. No matter whether it is $9,000,000 or $22,000,000, it is money that the Democrats owe, and they will not be able to pay it until bonds are sold. It is a Democratic ailment, however. They never have been in power for the last 55 years that they did not issue Government bonds, and not to pay for some permanent improvement but to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FARR. The Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KITCHIN] made the statement that if the Republican Party had been in power, under its policies of protection, there would be at this time a deficit in the Treasury of about two billions of dollars. Will the gentleman state how under Republican policies we would have gotten the revenues even to meet the additional expenses for preparedness?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will. The average ad valorem rate of duty collected during the last calendar year under the Underwood tariff law was 910 per cent on all imports, dutiable and The average ad valorem rate during the entire life of the Payne tariff law was 191 per cent, or about two and onehalf points below the ad valorem rates in the Wilson Demo-cratic tariff law, about which we complain so much.

And yet it has been said by our Democratic friends that the rates in the Payne tariff law were excessively high. During this last calendar year, in answer to the gentleman's question, our imports were $2,391,716,000. If the Payne rate had been in effect during the calendar year 1916-an average ad valorem of 194 per cent-there would have been placed in the Treasury of the United States as customs dues on those goods $467,940,000, which is $250,351,000 more than the amount collected under the Underwood tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HELVERING. I want to ask for information. Is that figured upon the rates that applied under the Payne-Aldrich law upon the articles imported and the rates they bore?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is the average ad valorem rate during the entire life of the Payne tariff law, four years or thereabouts.

Mr. HELVERING. But as a matter of fact the articles bearing a higher rate of duty have not been imported during the last year. Is not that true?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; they were imported; I beg the gentleman's pardon, and in addition let me say that in the calendar year 1916 our imports were $571,000,000 greater than any previous year in the history of the Republic, notwithstanding the fact that the war is on in Europe and none of those products came from the central powers of Europe.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.
Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. What proportion of the $571,000,000 was dutiable under the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. About 51 per cent under the Payne law and 69 and a fraction under the Underwood tariff law. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] a few moments ago said in his speech that everything in the Underwood tariff law that is on the free list was on the free list in the Payne tariff law. He is in error. There were at least 500 items in the Payne tariff law on the protected list that were put upon the free list in the Underwood tariff law, and but very few items on the protected list in the Underwood law were on the free list during the life of the Payne tariff law.

Now, the gentleman said a few moments ago, in answer to a question presented by my beloved friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess], that increased duties on imports would add to the cost of the article to the consumer. Time has proven that the gentleman is in error. Every time that by a protective tariff law we have established and fostered an industry in this country producing an article that comes in competition with foreign imports, it has proven that keen competition at home lowers the price of that article in our own markets. [Applause on the Republican side.] As an illustration, when the McKinley law put a duty upon tin our Democratic friends in a vague propo sition fitted out hucksters in the States of Ohio, Indiana, and southern Michigan and sent them over the country to buy the farmers' products, butter and eggs, and exchange for them tin products, and when the price of the article made of tin was presented to the housewife, in holy horror she said, "Why, you are asking twice what I paid for the article heretofore. What is the reason?" The reply was, "Why, the McKinley tariff law did it." Democrats did this to deceive the people and succeeded.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

That is the way President McKinley was Mr. EMERSON. defeated, I understand?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is the way President McKinley was defeated for Congress just after the enactment of the McKinley tariff law. Now, the fact is, and I know it and you know it, and every honest man will admit it, from the very day that we placed upon our statute books the McKinley tariff law, fostering that industry in the United States, the price of tin has gone down [applause on the Republican side], and under normal conditions, before the war in Europe, the price of tin in this country was not more than half what it was before the enactment of the McKinley tariff law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. FESS. Is it not also a fact that instead of buying tin from Europe we have become exporters of tin?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; and we have now become a great manufacturing country in tin and we have exported tin ever since. There is one proof that the gentleman's statement is in error. Another statement: Before we began the production of steel rails in the United States the railroads of the State of Michigan paid $110 per ton for steel rails imported from Europe. To-day there is a uniform price—and it has been kept uniform for years-of from $26 to $28 a ton, which yields a handsome profit to the steel mills producing it. It does not make any difference what article—the gentleman said the clothing of England was not taxed. The article in common use by the people he intimated was not taxed. We now have abnormal conditions owing to the war. Prior to the war in Europe England had I four-tenths of 1 cent per pound duty on sugar. To-day the English Government imposes 3 cents a pound on imported sugar going into England. What is this? A war tax, of course it is; but prior to the war in Europe, gentlemen, although the Republican Party, as one of its cardinal principles, was never to put a tax upon any noncompetitive product, Great Britain, Canada, and France have had import duties on coffee of from 8 to 10 cents a pound, green, and 14 cents a pound when roasted, and 10 cents a pound on tea. The Republican Party never imposed a duty on tea or coffee except as a war measure during the Civil War and shortly after. The Tariff Board's report, in answer to the gentleman about clothing, showed that on the grades of woolen goods which they ran down and purchased in England, 16 samples of woolen goods, of medium grade, out of which clothing is made for the common people of this country, they found a duty under the Dingley and Payne tariff laws of 184 per cent ad valorem. The board purchased those samples, 16 in number, and brought them into this country, and found upon paying the duty those goods cost them $1.18 a pound in the cloth.

But they found that the protective tariff on that article had so fostered the industry in this country that we were not only producing all those goods that we consumed in this country, but actually exporting some, and this grade of cloth was sold for 69 cents a pound instead of $1.18 a pound, which would have been the price had they been imported and sold at their imported cost duty paid.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman very much. I remember the answer which the gentleman made to the question propounded to him by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR]. May I ask the gentleman to pursue that very interesting answer a little further? How could we, if the Republican Party had been in power, have provided the revenue that was necessary to take care of these large expenditures which this Congress has made?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will answer that in this way: Taking the imports as they have come under the Underwood tariff law during the war in Europe-and the war in Europe has given us a greater protective tariff wall than was ever enacted by the Republican Party-in most articles of competition to-day we need no tariff at all. The prices are so abnormally high that our institutions need no protection while the war in Europe lasts. What you and I must guard against are conditions that will prevail after this war is over. And had we the Payne rates of duties in force and effect since the war in Europe, we would have had in round numbers $500,000,000 more in customs dues. [Applause.] If we had collected that much money from customs receipts we would have no necessity for this painful, unjust, and discriminating tax upon a few of the people.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. May I ask the gentleman a question just there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir. Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. How do you arrive at that

Mr. FORDNEY. The difference between the ad valorem rates under the Underwood law and the average ad valorem rates collected under the Payne tariff law. If you take the imports and multiply by the average ad valorem duty collected under the Payne law it will give you those amounts, or thereabouts.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I understood the gentleman to say that of this $571,000,000 excess under the Payne-Aldrich bill 51 per cent were on the free list. That would leave about $285,000,000 of dutiable goods, and at an average rate of something like 38 cents that would be about $100,000,000 annually. The war has been running two years, and how would you

Mr. FORDNEY. On the imports of last year with the Payne rate of duty we would have collected, as I stated a few moments ago, $248,794,000 in addition to the amount that was collected, namely, $217,000,000.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I understood your statement, but I could not understand on what you base it

Mr. FORDNEY. Here are $248,000,000 in 12 months. Your tariff law has been in operation over three years. Three years like the last one would mean a considerable amount of additional revenue.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Just one more question. But you assume, do you not, that the same goods would have come in in the same proportion and the higher rates would have been paid on these goods?

Mr. FORDNEY. During the war, my good friend, I do not believe there would be any difference in our imports. Under normal times certainly I would expect that not so many imports would come in had we had the Payne tariff rates upon our statute books, but the war has brought about abnormal conditions all over the world. For instance, wool, that paid 11 cents a pound under the Payne tariff law, is now on the free list.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman that these abnormal conditions have shut out that class of goods that paid the highest tariff, and how can the gentleman reason that we would have gained an excess of $300,000,000 a year, or a total of $500,000,000 since the war commenced?

Mr. FORDNEY. You have a war, my friend. I am talking about how much money you would have collected during the life of this Underwood bill because of the war in Europe, and not what will happen after the war is over. Now is the time we are talking about and not the future. I do say, and I believe, and I am firmly of that belief, that in normal times the protective tariff does exclude from our market many cheaply made goods from Europe.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not the Democrats in passing the Underwood law declare long before the war that they intended to cut the customs revenues more than $100,000,000

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not true that the imports have been increasing constantly since the war?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. The $100,000,000 referred to was based on the importations under the Payne tariff law, not the imports under this Democratic tariff law. I say that if under this Underwood tariff law during this time we had collected the Payne tariff rates, we would have collected in round numbers $500,000,000 more than we have collected, and the figures prove it

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not down here for merriment or buffoonery at all; I am here to vote for some sort of a measure that will enable us to make good that which is wrong in the Treasury. Has the gentleman in his mind the figure that this extra preparedness has oc-

Mr. FORDNEY. I have, yes; in a way.

Mr. BUTLER. And if we had been economical and had avoided these other extreme exactions upon the Treasury, could we not have paid under our ordinary revenue and customs for this extra preparation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the extraordinary expenditures which are unnecessary, in my opinion.

Mr. BUTLER Very well. I wish you would.

Mr. FORDNEY. Our Democratic friends have passed through this House a bill for an armor-plate plant and authorized an appropriation of $11,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. And I am creditably informed by men who ought to know that that proposal would cost nearly $20,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, there is no doubt of it. Now, my friend, that item is not necessary at this time, for this reason: It was shown on the floor of this House last year, and was clearly presented by my colleague from Michigan [Mr. Kelley], that there are three armor-plate plants in the United States, the capacity of which is 32,000 tons of armor plate per We have consumed for many years past an average of about 10,000 tons of armor plate, so that the armor-plate plants in the hands of private corporations in this country are ample in capacity to supply us three times the amount of armor plate that we have been using.

It has been further shown that the Government of the United States has purchased its armor plate cheaper than any country in the world. Further than that, the owners of those plants say to the Government, "Do not build your Government plant, but come here and make a thorough examination of our costs, and we will accept the price that any commission fixes that you may send here, and furnish the armor plate at that rate per Therefore, I say there is absolutely no necessity for this $11,000,000 appropriation.

Again, a nitrate plant at $20,000,000, to make fertilizer for the southern farmer, and nothing else under God's heaven—it is absolute folly to talk about anything else; that is what it will do, and nothing else. That is $20,000,000 more that is will do, and nothing else. absolutely unnecessary.

Further, our Democratic friends have passed a ship-purchase bill under which they propose to spend $50,000,000 to establish a merchant marine on the high seas.

Briefly let me tell you how absolutely foolish, silly, and nonsensical such a proposition is at this time. I can prove it to you, in my opinion-to my own satisfaction, at least. I know of two steamships, both English built. One was brought in under the American flag bearing my name, the Joseph W. Fordney. It cost $238,000 about 12 years ago. Some 60 days ago that ship was sold for $1,000,000 cash. I am sorry I had no interest in it. [Laughter.] The other, the Robert Dollar, another English-built ship, cost a like sum of approximately $238,000, and it was sold in March, 1916—10 years old, mind you—for $1,300,000 cash to an English firm.

Mr. Cramp, of the great shipbuilding concern of Philadelphia, several years ago before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, when I was a member of that committee, made this statement, that in the construction of a ship in this country nine-tenths of her total cost was labor and 10 per cent raw material. In fact, gentleman, at least 90 per cent of the total cost of any manufactured article in America is labor.

Now, how about our labor in this country and abroad? Last fall I obtained from American consuls statements of the wages of skilled labor in England, France, and Japan, and as to the United States I got the information directly from the shipyards here, and this is what I found: Day wages of skilled labor in England last year, mind you, was $9 a week, and when working by piecework, $11.13. In the shipyards of Japan, owing to the activities of the shipyards there, wages had recently been advanced 10 per cent, and in December, 1916, Japanese skilled labor in their shipyards received 70 sen per day, or 34.9 cents in gold. In the United States our skilled labor received $18 a week, or $22.50 per week when working at piecework-double the wages in England, and ten times as great as in Japan.

Now, when 90 per cent of the cost of the construction of a ship is labor, and our labor cost is double that of any labor in any country in the world, how can we build ships and compete with the people across the sea?

In addition to that, gentlemen, under our marine laws the officers of our ships under the American flag, both in the coastwise and the foreign trade, must be citizens of the United We can go into any other country in the world and employ the balance of our labor, as every other country in the world permits the owners of their ships to do, except that when England pays an admiralty subsidy their officers must then be citizens of England. But our American citizens as officers on board those ships will not work with the foreigners unless the foreigners get the American scale of wages. I have in mind three ships, gentlemen, the Robert Dollar, the Masama Maru, and another whose name I have forgotten, all owned by the Dollar Steamship Co. The horsepower of the ship measures the expense to a greater extent than the actual gross tonnage, and in these three ships the horsepower was almost identically the same, all about 410 horsepower, and the annual labor cost of the ship under the English flag as compared with the ship under the American flag was $23,800 a year for the English ship less than the ship under the American flag, and the annual labor cost of the Japanese ship under the Japanese flag $29,700 less than the ship under the American flag.

Now, taking into consideration the difference between our cost of construction and our labor cost and operating cost, and the fact that nearly every country in this world pays a subsidy to its ships except the United States, it is absolute folly to think that an American citizen can engage in foreign shipping and compete with any country in the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] Therefore, gentlemen, the $50,000,000 that you propose to spend in this ship-purchase bill is absolutely thrown away.

In addition to that there is another unnecessary expenditure

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

What is the practical effect? Where can we buy Mr. FESS. any ships and where can we build any ships just now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have demonstrated to you that if you go into the markets of the world and buy ships you will pay four or five times the price that they would sell for in normal times. I have shown that by demonstrating to you that one ship was sold for a million dollars which cost $238,000, and another ship, which cost about the same amount, $238,000, was sold for $1,300,000, and she was 10 years old.

Now, under those circumstances do you believe it is practicable—do you believe that sane, sensible men will go into the markets of the world and attempt to buy ships now to establish a merchant marine to compete with the Japanese and other foreigners?

Mr. FESS. That is out of the question. Where can we build them?

Mr. FORDNEY. We can build them at home at an additional cost over normal times and at an additional cost even in normal times.

Mr. FESS. Are not all the American shippards crowded now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe they are. Now, further than that, gentlemen, here is $162,000,000 spent on the Mexican border to catch Villa; and did they catch him? No. I believe there were plenty of regular troops to patrol the border, without sending our State Militia down there and spending this $162,000,000. [Applause.] But with your slogan that you kept us out of war, with this $162,000,000, and the money raised by the Democratic Party, you elected a President.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Mr. DENISON. This question is suggested by the one propounded by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Wm. Elza Wil-LIAMS]. The gentleman from Michigan has stated the additional revenues that would have been collected under the Payne-Aldrich rates.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman, in arriving at those figures that he gave a while ago, did he consider the actual imports that have come into the country during the last two years and the actual rates under the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. I took the actual imports under the Underwood tariff law and the amount collected under the Underwood tariff law, and then, applying the average rates under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, 19½ per cent, showed the difference that would be collected between the two laws. There is no question about the correctness of that.

Now, let me tell you another thing. The gentleman said, How would we raise this money to meet this extraordinary situation?" I will tell you how we would raise it if you left it to us. We would adopt a reasonable, correct, equitable, protective tariff, the best that men's judgment could frame, and then, for this extraordinary expenditure in our Navy, we would undoubtedly issue bonds for that. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is what we would have done; and when we built the Panama Canal it was intended it should be built out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds, because our children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren will enjoy the Panama Canal, and it is only reasonable that bonds should be issued for the construction of that canal. If those things I have mentioned were paid out of the proceeds of bonds, a protective-tariff law would yield you more money than is necessary for all those other extravagances that you have put upon the people. Now, let me tell you something, gentlemen. I am not revealing any secrets. If it is within the power of the Republican Party, and I believe it is, within the next three or four weeks, by the best judgment of men on our side of the House, we will present to this House a protective-tariff measure for your consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.] We can not prepare it as scientifically as we could if we had extended hearings and got the exact existing conditions on many articles on which the rate of duty ought to be changed, but we can get somewhere near the correct rate of duty on imports, and if it is in our power to prepare it and present it in time we can show you that it would raise a sum in addition to what you are raising sufficient to meet all these normal expenses of the Government. I am ready to work overtime to help prepare that bill, and I know there are many gentlemen on that side of the House who would rather vote for a bill of that kind to-day or to-morrow than for the bill now before the House.

Let me say another thing. Just before the election in November last, on the second Thursday before election, the President of the United States was quoted as saying in a speech at Cincinnati that the great increase in our foreign commerce was due to the war to the extent of not to exceed 1 per cent. That is what he is quoted as saying.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, it was 4 per cent.

Mr. FORDNEY. In the paper from which I took the report he said 1 per cent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, that is only a little worse.

Mr. FORDNEY. Here are the exports, a few of them, which went to the battle fields of Europe in large quantities. This list includes food, clothing, equipment, ammunition, and so forth. The increases in exportation of the same was due to the war.

Aluminum, we sold the last year of peace, 1913, $966,000 worth. During the calendar year 1916 we exported $14,100,000 worth, I

Was that not for the battle fields? Where are they using aluminum in Europe if it is not in the manufacture of articles for war? Aeroplanes, we exported in the last year of peace, $86,000, and last year $4,000,000.

Automobiles, $27,000,000 the last year of peace, and last year $121,600,000.

Brass and manufactures thereof, going into ammunition, $7,900,000 the last year of peace and $315,000,000 this last year. That went to the battle fields, did it not?

Breadstuffs, the average exports from this country for a number of years prior to the war were $203,000,000 per annum, but last year they were $463,000,000. The war had something to do with those exports, had it not?

Cars for railways, chiefly to Russia, $5,400,000 in the last year peace, and in 1916, $23,000,000.

Chemicals, largely used in making explosives, $26,700,000 in the last year of peace and $165,000,000 now.

Copper, $143,000,000 before the war and $226,000,000 now.

Explosives-which are not articles of household use in Eu--$5,500,000 during the last year before the war, and in 1916, $721,000,000, or nearly 14 per cent of all our exports, when our good President said that all of the things that went to the battle fields of Europe amounted to but 1 per cent. Nearly 14 per cent of all our exports were explosives last year. better or he did not know. He got his figures from the Secretary of Commerce, a Democrat, I suppose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely wanted to ask him to explain what proportion of our total exports were made up of that list of articles?

Mr. FORDNEY. When I conclude the items I am going to state that.

Horses and mules, $5,000,000 in the last year of peace and $89,000,000 last year.

Sugar, $1,800,000 before the war and $96,000,000 now. Before the war England purchased her sugar from Germany; she buys it here now.

Meat and dairy products, $160,000,000 before the war and $307,000,000 now. Do you not think the war had something to do

Leather, $59,000,000 before the war and $157,000,000 now. Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. The gentleman has stated in substance what President Wilson is reported to have said. Can the gentleman state his exact words and quote the words that the President used in the speech referred to?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not without the paper; but that is the substance of it—that but 1 per cent of our great foreign commerce was due to the war in Europe.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I question the accuracy of the gentleman's information. I do not remember it that way, by any means.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman said he read the speech in a paper which quoted the President as saying per cent Mr. FORDNEY. One per cent—that was in the Detroit Free

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And the gentleman from Ohlo [Mr. Longworth] said he saw where it was stated at 4 per cent. Yes

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Now, the gentleman says that the correct figures are 14 per cent.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon I said the explosives alone were 14 per cent. The gentleman can not throw me off the track that way.

Now, of cotton manufactures before the war the exports were $55,000,000; now they are $127,000,000.

Woolen manufactures, the normal year and the average for many years before the war were $4,500,000; now, $39,100,000. By the way, in the calendar year 1915 our exports of woolen goods were $54,000,000, or $15,000,000 more than last year.

Zinc and its manufactures before the war, $1,100,000; now, $59,500,000.

Now, listen: Iron and steel, much of which went abroad as shrapnel, cannon, and guns, and all other kinds of munitions, steel explosives, amounted to $893,849,000 last year, and the last year of peace, $221,000,000. And yet the President talks about 1 per cent of the total!

Of these articles, 17 in number that I have mentioned, the last year before the war we exported $1,002,000,000 worth; for the calendar year of 1916 we exported $3,779,000,000 worth, an excess over the last year of peace of $2,776,958.000, or over 66 per cent of all of our imports. [Applause on the Republican nide. | And yet in all other exports there has been a falling off. How near was the President right?

Now, gentlemen, I have taken up altogether too much time.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes

Mr. FESS. I have just sent for the Cincinnati Enquirer reporting the President's speech in the latter part of October. I am sure he said 1 per cent, for I took issue with him the next day. I want to state that the word, as I recall it, was "munitious." and as it excluded all other war exports except the munitions he probably was correct, for munitions would be firearms, guns, powder, explosives, not including dynamite.

Mr. FORDNEY. Why, the explosives alone exported were $720,000,000 out of a total of $3,700,000,000-more than 13 per cent in explosives alone. That does not include all articles of

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to say that I read the statement in the Cincinnati Enquirer, and it said 1 per cent. That seemed so impossible that I asked a number of gentlemen who heard the speech, and they told me that the President said 4 per cent of all the exports, munitions, and so forth.

Mr. FESS. What I wanted to make plain was that the statement was entirely misleading to the American public, because we have not been talking about munitions, but war orders; and he excludes nine of the classes when he confines it to munitions. I think, with all due respect, that it was misleading to

Mr. FORDNEY. At all events, the people at the polls 10 or 12 days later took him at his word as being correct and elected him President of the United States. He is our President now; he is my President. I may agree with him sometimes, but I certainly disagree with him on the manner of raising the revenue for the running expenses of this Government that is wholly impracticable from a democratic standpoint.

Your Underwood tariff law has been an absolute failure as a revenue producer, and you have twice had to resort to direct, oppressive, and discriminating taxes. You can raise any amount of revenue. The wealth of this country is very great. We could pay heavy taxes and still have plenty to buy bread and butter. Since 1860 under a protective tariff law the wealth of the United States has gone up from $16,000,000,000, as shown by the census of 1860, to $190,000,000,000, or $174,000,000,000 increase under the influence of protective-tariff laws [applause on the Republican side], and we had a most disastrous civil Great Britain and Germany comwar during that time. bined have only $162,000,000,000 of wealth, or had prior to the war, and they had several centuries the start of us. Therefore I say this great accumulation of wealth in the United States is very largely due to the policy of the Republican Party in the last half century. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I believe that the same statistics show the wealth of this country increased during the first three years of the Wilson administration $43,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman does not mean to convey the idea to the American people that the increase in our exports since the war has been declared is due to the legislation on the part of the Democratic Party? If so, say so now.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The increase has been under a Democratic administration.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have shown you that more than two-thirds of all the exports have gone to the battle fields of Europe, and that in all the other exports there has been a falling off. Is the Democratic Party responsible for the war in Europe? If they are, they are entitled to the credit of these extraordinary [Applause on the Republican side.] exports.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the gentleman from Michigan taking the gentleman from Arkansas too seriously, or does he think that the gentleman agreed with the President when he changed front on the tariff and came out for a tariff commission?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. I want to learn a little more. There is one thing to be said about the gentleman from Michigan, and that is he is serious, and it is necessary to have seriousness in this discussion. Did the gentleman from Michigan make any comparison of the income that we would have received in the year 1915 if we had continued the Republican legislation? The gentleman made the statement for 1916; how about 1915?

Mr. FORDNEY. I only compared the increased revenue to the Government from a protective-tariff law.

By the way, our Democratic friends have repealed many of the stamp taxes, direct internal-revenue taxes, that we had upon our statute books when they came into power, and we would have received much more in that direction than the amount I have mentioned from an import duty. There is a deficit now of $37,000,000 in the Treasury, and no man can deny it, though under their bookkeeping it is not shown; but if any national bank in the country adopted similar systems of bookkeeping the bank examiners, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, would have every mother's son in the bank in jail in 24 hours for fraudulent bookkeeping. In addition to the $37,000,000 now shown as a deficit, when we come to add up the assets we find one of $12,535,000, money in the Treasury received from the Government of Greece for the sale of two battleships. That is in the Treasury as a part of miscellaneous receipts, although the act that authorized the sale of those ships provided that that money must be expended in the construction of a great dreadnaught, which has not yet been built, and the money is gone.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, what is the attitude of all the European powers now toward the protective tariff?

Mr. FORDNEY. Prior to 1879 Germany adopted practically the English tariff law. When Bismarck appeared before the men in power he said, "I notice across the sea the people of the United States that have adopted a protective tariff law to protect themselves against the imports of cheap labor are prosperous, and that we are going back," and he recommended an increase of tariff rates on German goods, and immediately it was put into effect, and Germany prospered from that time on down as no other country in the world, except the United States, ever prospered; and the poor people of England have not increased in wealth. They are poor yet.

Mr. FESS. What is the attitude of the 5,000,000 members of the English Federation of Labor, as announced in September

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not remember seeing that.

Mr. FESS. They recommended a protective tariff for Great

Mr. FORDNEY. My friends, let me say briefly that I am a Republican, without any apology, because I believe in Republican principles, and when you produce an article in this country that represents a dollar in labor costs, and your competitor across the sea can produce the same article with a labor cost of 50 cents, it is evident to every fair-thinking man that your competitor will put you out of business unless you are given protection sufficiently high to bring up his cost to your cost. If not, he will come into our markets and capture them, and I want to remind you that of the $30,000,000,000 worth of stuff that we produced in the factory and on the farm last year, notwithstanding our great experts sent abroad, more than 90 per cent was consumed in the United States. The United States is the best market for American-made goods that there is in the world. Why give it to the foreigner and send your labering men to the street corners where, as in 1894, 1895, and 1896, they sit on boxes around the grecery stores and whittle sticks to pass time away. In those years a laboring man would go home and have his wife prepare a Cleveland badge for him. I heard a man once ask a lady what a Celevand badge was, and she said, "Oh, my, how ignorant you are. A Cleveland badge is a patch about 8 by 10 upon the seat of your pants." [Laughter.]
Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman mean that if we had continued in force the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act it would have met the present emergency?

Mr. FORDNEY. It would have met the present emergency except for the extraordinary expenditure in building up the proposed greatest Navy in the world and the increase in the Army. Going along as we were at that time, spending $145,-000,000 a year upon our Navy and about $100,000,000 a year upon our Army, the protective law would have yielded to us a sufficient amount of revenue without the raising of taxes by this direct income tax, as you are raising them.

Mr. WM, ELZA WILLIAMS. If that would have met the ordinary expenses, how would the gentleman have provided for the extraordinary expenses?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have stated that before, though perhaps the gentleman was not present. I believe that the Panama Canal should have been constructed by the proceeds of the sale of Government bonds, to be placed upon our children, much of it, and our grandchildren in coming generations. If it be necessary-and I voted for it-to increase our great Navy, then I would vote to issue Government bonds to build that extraordinary Navy; but the method of raising revenue by the protective tariff would have taken care of the other necessary expenses of the Government, if we left off those foolish propositions which you have enacted into law, wholly unnecessary at this time.

Mr. FARR. That would have included the additional cost for preparedness?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. FARR. We would have raised enough to do that?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes. I have stated that going along as we were, spending $100,000,000 a year upon our Army and about $145,000,000 upon the Navy, we would have had plenty of revenue without resorting to any special taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman classes as amongst the list of foolish items the $162,000,000 for the Mexican border expenses?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think that was an absolutely useless expenditure, because our Regular Army could have preserved peace, and you could have gotten just as near to capturing Villa as you have with the State Militia. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIN. I wanted to ask how you would have prevented that expenditure?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have said, and will repeat, that we had sufficient national troops to do it without all of this expenditure of $162,000,000 in sending the boys from the various States of the Union down there to the border.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. I do.
Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman understands, of course, that Pershing is to withdraw from Mexico, and his troops are to be placed on the border, and that the State troops on the border are to be sent home. Why could not they furnish the protection necessary with the Regular Army?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say further, when Pershing was directed to go into Mexico he went 126 miles down into Mexico and reported that Villa was but 40 miles away, and the War Department said, "You stop right where you are." [Laughter.]

Mr. EMERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-The State troops were ordered to participate about the time of the Democratic national convention, and was it not at that time considered a matter of political expediency?

Mr. FORDNEY. I said at that time it was to elect a Democratic President, and it turned the trick. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Was not that a good investment?

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; one more question.
Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state the amount of new taxes that have been ordered since the first session of the Sixty-second Congress?

Mr. FORDNEY. I could give somewhere near it. Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Well, approximately.

Mr. FORDNEY. Under the 1 per cent income tax for corporations and individuals, about $70,000,000 was collected from those Now, then, it is estimated they will collect this two sources. year $133,000,000 from the corporation tax and, I think, something like $70,000,000 to $80,000,000 from individual income taxes. This law now proposes to raise $22,000,000 from inheritance taxes, and $56,000,000 from copartnership, and $170, 000,000 additional from corporations, insurance companies, joint-stock companies, and the like, or a total of $248,000,000, a sum exactly equal to the amount that the Payne law would have raised on imports last year over and above that raised under the Underwood law. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen of the committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I now yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest and with great pleasure, as I always do, when he speaks, to the grave, calm, and dispassionate explanation of this bill by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin], but with all his eloquence and logic he has failed to satisfy me that it has any merit whatever. I am opposed to this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am opposed to everything in it and everything about it, and I condemn the conditions that have caused its introduction into this House. In thus announcing my opposition I do not think I will be accused of basing it on grounds of partisanship only. Gentlemen will remember that I supported a Democratic revenue bill not long ago, whether wisely or not I will not debate now. I voted for the bill offered by the gentleman from North Carolina last June, and I did it, as I then announced, for two reasons. In the first place, because I believed that the revenue it was designed to raise was necessary to pay for the preparedness program we had adopted; and, secondly, because I believed that its method of raising revenue, even though it did not include the obviously correct way of raising revenue-a duty on competing products of import-it was based in the main upon what I conceive to be Republican principles. I am not, then, making my attack upon this bill solely because it comes from a Democratic source. From whatever source this bill had come, under whatever circumstances it might have been introduced into this House, I would characterize it as the most obnoxious taxation measure I have seen since I was first elected a Member of Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.] In the first place, it starts with a deceptive and misleading title. It is called "A bill to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes." If it were not for the saving use of those words "other purposes" the title would be an unredeemed fraud upon its face. It is an adroitly constructed bill. It is made to appear that a portion of the revenue designed to be raised is to be segregated in what is called a "preparedness" fund; but you will observe that even this relatively insignificant portion of the amount carried is marred by the proviso at the end of the section which allows the Secretary of the Treasury to use this fund for "other purposes." It is not for preparedness that this bill is intended to provide. Even if the Secretary had no leeway with regard to the expenditure of this fund, and it was to be kept intact, it is a sham. It is because of the "other purposes" that the huge amounts of money that this bill carries are demanded. Allow me, my friends of the Democratic Party, to congratulate you upon one thing. If you have made a lamentable failure of raising the money necessary to support this Government you have made a monumental success in spending it. [Applause on the Republican side.] You have done something, it is true, toward preparedness; to that extent I congratulate you; but your main efforts have been successfully concentrated in the direction of "other purposes."

I shall not attempt to enumerate those other purposes. gentleman who preceded me mentioned a number of them. shall I attempt to count their cost. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has stated, and other gentlemen will state, the figures in extenso. I will only suggest that they include ships to be brought under your new policy of Government ownership, nitrate and ammunition plants, obsolete before they are built, both of them, and utterly useless to this Government in time of war; the creation of thousands-and this the gentleman from Michigan forgot to mention-the creation of thousands of additional and useless offices since this administration came into power for the benefit of deserving Democrats; the huge expenses incident to your pitiful Mexican flasco we have just heard discussed; "pork" in vast quantities distributed in certain favored sections of this country; and many other forms of wanton and wasteful extravagance, the cost of which has mounted into hundreds upon hundreds of millions.

As a matter of fact, this bill represents the final confession of the Democratic Party of its pathetic incompetence to successfully manage the business of this Nation. Had it come a few months ago, my friends, it would have been your deathbed confession. [Applause.] But with an adroitness worthy of a better cause you succeeded in deceiving the people before election as to the real condition of this country's finances. adopted the policy of postponement, and, I regret to say, it worked; but it will not work this time. [Applause.] You were wise enough to know that you had to put off paying the piper until after election, and you did it by the simple process, learned no doubt from a close study of the life and methods of the late Mr. Micawber, of failing to pay your debts. You pretend that the monumental settlement you are now forced to make is due to the program of preparedness which the enlightened sentiment of the American people forced upon you. I say that it is not preparedness for the national defense, but extravaganceextravagance, wild and reckless; extravagance run riot since the members of the Democratic Party laid violent hands upon the Treasury of the United States—that has brought about the desperate financial straits in which the Nation now finds itself.

In one policy, at least, you have been consistent from the beginning-to get what you could when the going was good. Any one of you who remembers his Mark Twain, and he could hardly do that without recalling his imperishable

Punch, brothers, punch with care, Punch in the presence of the passenjare, will trace the source and inspiration of a verse I may be permitted to recite as my conception of a suitably inspiring war cry for the Democratic Party, to be used when in serried phalanx it makes its repeated raids upon the Treasury:

Dig, brothers, dig with glee,
Dig to the bottom of the Treasuree.
Shovel out the shekels for the Kissimmee,
Millions for nitrates on the Tennessee;
The South is in the saddle, you bet, by gee!
Dig to the bottom of the Treasuree.

[Applause.]

I think I am tempted to recite another verse:

Dig, brothers, dig with glee.
Why leave a nickel in the Treasuree?
Leave the accounting to William G.;
He can fake up a balance to a T.
The voters are plunged in lethargee;
Dig to the bottom of the Treasuree.

[Applause.]

If success is to be measured by the abundance of treasure you have abstracted, truly you are to be congratulated. not only dug to the bottom of the Treasury; you have dented the floor. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett], the other day, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], a few moments ago, conclusively proved that the alleged Treasury balance you see reported in the newspapers every morning is not a balance at all. It is not an asset; it is a liability; for the Treasury of the United States to-day, so far as having a cash balance available to pay our just debts is concerned, instead of being some $90,000,000 to the good, is $300,000,000 worse off than nothing.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman know that the Democrats are always noted for being able to deal with a

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, yes. Of course, additional revenue is necessary. Millions upon millions must be raised by hook or crook. If you had made a frank statement of the situation, if you had brought in a bill which appeared on its face to be constructed in good faith, if you had proposed a revenue measure which provided higher duties upon competitive articles of import, I would have cheerfully supported it. I will never support such a revenue-raising measure as this. You propose in a time of profound peace to issue more than $600,000,000 worth of bonds, designed for purposes all of which ought to be paid, most of which have always been paid, certainly when the Republican Party was in control, out of the current revenues. Worse than that, you propose as a means of raising a revenue of some $225,000,000 a tax unique in the history of this country, a tax never before heard of either in time of peace or in time of war. You propose a tax upon business, a tax upon the business of the country, big and little, and particularly little; a tax based not upon magnitude of operation but upon economy of operation; a tax to be imposed simply and solely upon efficiency of production. You propose a tax which will be borne, in the main, not by men of large capital but by men of small capital. You propose to tax American citizens who by intelligent, progressive, and economical management of their resources have done a prosperous business and to let those of larger capital, but whose methods have been wasteful, extravagant, and unprogressive, go free

The result of this new policy, conceived apparently in praise of shiftlessness, wastefulness, and extravagance, will be to punish thrift, economy, and progress. And for such a policy I, for one, will never stand. [Applause.] Is it because of the pride you take in your management of the business of the country that you thus exempt from all taxation those who have managed their own business in similar fashion and put a penalty upon those who have managed their business otherwise? Possibly it may be fortunate that this tax is not extended to the salaries of Members of Congress. I certainly would not even hint it, but some evil-minded person might suggest that $7,500 a year, based upon invested capital, which in this case I would assume to be the capital of brains and ability, invested in the service of the country, in the case of some gentlemen who support this bill would represent a return in excess of 8 per cent. [Laughter.]

You propose a tax of 8 per cent upon that portion of the income of substantially all partnerships and corporations, after deducting $5,000, which is in excess of 8 per cent on the capital actually invested; and such capital is defined to be, first, actual cash paid in; second, the actual cash value at the time of payment of assets other than cash paid in; and, third, paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business.

The suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], that this tax is in any way comparable with or in any way similar to the excess profit taxes now imposed in Great Britain and Germany and Canada, is beside the mark. In the first place, those are war taxes, and I decline to vote for a war tax in this country in time of peace. In the second place, they are not calculated in the way that this is; they are not calculated upon capital actually invested. Why, such a proposition as this is utterly unenforceable. We are spending to-day millions of dollars in trying to find out the physical value of railroads, and do you expect that any railroad could make a return under this bill which would show its actual invested capital?

It is a fine time, gentlemen, in the world's history, to adopt a policy of penalizing efficiency, of penalizing here in America that for which every other nation in the world is striving as they never strove before. At a time when the average industrial efficiency of every country in Europe has increased, according to Government reports, anywhere from 50 to 200 per cent, you propose, instead of encouraging American enterprise, that it may be competent after the war is over to meet the tremendous competition that is inevitable, to make it pay a tax upon that which is essential for the industrial independence of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I say to you that such a policy is unrepublican; it is to the last degree un-American. It strikes at the very root of that policy which has made this Nation great and which has prevailed in America throughout most of the last centurypolicy of exalting the interests of American citizens above the interests of citizens of any other country.

In one sense it is perhaps not unfortunate that this bill is here, because it emphasizes as no other measure possibly could the bedrock difference between the Republican and the Democratic Parties. For the very reason that it is entirely un-American, it is in the partisan sense essentially Democratic; for the very reason that it is un-American, it is in the same sense un-Republican.

Gentlemen on that side of the aisle are fond of saying that we on this side are not united. If there be any truth in that, if it does apply to some matters of relative insignificance, it does not apply on fundamental issues like this. [Applause on the Republican side.] Upon an issue of Americanism there is no division in our ranks. [Applause on the Republican side.] vote solidly for the proposition that America shall be first. vote solidly for the proposition that America shall be efficient. We vote solidly for the proposition that it is the first and highest duty of Government to protect, at all hazards and under all circumstances, all American citizens, whether in their property and lives abroad or in their industry here at home. plause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague yield at that point? Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. FESS. We all have appreciated your emphasis on penalizing efficiency and penalizing industrial preparedness. Is it not true that the entire argument of the chairman of the committee who presented the bill was also to penalize those who believe in the protection of the Government in national defense, stating that the clamor had been that we should defend and that therefore we are going to make them pay for it? is the idea of the punishment of the men who believe in defending the Nation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I confess it was somewhat difficult to follow definitely the exact thread of the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina this morning.

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask this question: If that is the idea, the men who would fall under this law who have been opposed to the national defense program ought to be exempted from tax, according to that argument of the gentleman?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I regarded the gentleman's statement on that proposition as something like this: That activity for preparedness for the national defense was a misdemeanor, and it therefore should be punished. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FESS. That is it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may not have recalled the thread of the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, but undoubtedly he recalls the peroration of the gentleman from North Carolina. If he does not, I shall refresh

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall be glad.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from North Carolina, in his peroration, sounded a bugle call to rally round the standard that he had just unfurled to resist a possible Republican attempt to restore the protective-tariff system in this country

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and he also added, I believe, that while in ninety-nine cases the President had been right, in his belated advocacy of preparedness he was wrong. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The Democratic Party is arrayed solidly on the precise converse of the proposition I have laid down. From the day you took hold of the affairs of this country you have neglected no opportunity to show your contempt for the policy that American interests shall be held to be paramount to all others. At the outset you declared that it was no part of the duty of this Government to protect American property in Mexico; and when American citizens lawfully in Mexico besought protection, not only for their property but even for their lives and for the honor of their women, they were told to come home or take the consequences. At this point I will ask to insert a letter that I received from a constituent asking protection for an American, his wife, and nine children in Mexico. I ask unanimous consent to print the whole letter in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter he refers to. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

2703 PARK AVENUE, WALNUT HILLS, Cincinnati, Ohio.

2703 PARK AVENUE, WALNUT HILLS, Cincinnati, Ohio.

My Dear Mr. Longworth: Will you kindly exert your influence in getting the Washington department to allow assistance to be given to an American citizen, with his wife and nine little children in Mexico City. This gentleman is a particular friend of my son, Dr. Richard Taft Taylor, whom you may remember.

My last letter from him was written February 28. Coming first to Washington, it reached me April 24. In it he states that they have only provisions enough to last four days, and then will be destitute again and left to their fate. He said he had repeatedly unavailingly asked further assistance of the Brazilian Legation. Just before Christmas I applied to Secretary Bryan to out of his abundance assist him as he knew what an estimable man Mr. Frisbie is, as he visited him a number of years ago at his former home in Jalapa, and he also knows that the Mexicans have taken from him and his family their valuable sugar mills, also $350,000 worth of sugar, their large plantation, and destroyed $50,000 worth of property, and the Government demanded as a loan about all the money he had in bank, $20,000. This loss is recorded at Washington and amounts to $1,500,000. Mr. Bryan also knows, for I wrote then to him, that they had to sell everything possible of their furniture, clothing, etc., for food, and were at that time in destitute condition, and, as Mr. Frisbie described them, "with hollow cheeks, emaciated forms, tight-drawn skin over their bones, and eyes red from insufficient food and clothing." Mr. Bryan communicated with Consul Silliman and, finding this to be true, ordered provisions enough given them by the Brazilian Legation to last one month. Mr. Frisbie wrote me that with this assistance, and what was sent by my son, Dr. Taylor, and me, they were actually saved from starvation. Consul Silliman also wrote to me they were in great need of assistance. The World's Work of February, 1909, contains a picture of Gen. John Frisbie and says that no American cause there cans in distress.

Trusting you will do what you can for them. If you wish to know more who he is, Admiral Dewey will tell you, as he was a particular friend of his father. Also Hon, Fenton R. McCreery, of Michigan, a friend of his, urges me to ask your aid.

Yours, most respectfully,

Mrs. FMMA TAFT TAXLOR

Mrs. EMMA TAFT TAYLOR.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will now read to you a letter that I received from a distinguished former official in this administration in reply to one I wrote him asking if something could not be done to help to protect the property and lives of this man and his wife and children. The letter well illustrates the policy of this administration in regard to the sanctity of the life and property of American citizens abroad. This letter says:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 22, 1915.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth,

House of Representatives.

Sin: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the letter addressed to you by Mrs. Emma Taft Taylor, of Cincinnati, Ohio, dated May 3, 1915, relative to the maintenance of Mr. L. Platon Frisbie, his wife, and nine children at Mexico City, Mexico. In reply I regret to inform you that the funds at the disposal of the department are not sufficient to enable it to provide for the maintenance of Americans in Mexico City. Those who are without funds should avail themselves of the first opportunity to leave. The department will cooperate with the Mexican authorities to secure means of transportation for all Americans who wish to come to the United States. Free transportation will be furnished those who are absolutely destitute, but those who have property but are temporarily without funds will be required to furnish notes for whatever amounts may be advanced to them to bring them out of the country. Telegraphic instructions in the sense of the above were sent to the Brazilian minister at Mexico City on May 15, 1915.

If any of these Americans there wanted to come home, or if they valued their lives at all, they had to communicate with the Brazilian minister, who apparently was the only person with whom Mr. Bryan was in communication at that time.

Mr. CANNON. Who signed that letter?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I forgot to state. The conclusion of this letter is-

I have the honor to be, sir, Your obedient servant,

He was not obedient in that case. I wanted him to do something to protect the life and the property of my constituent and of his wife and children, but he refused. I cite this as an illustration of the policy the Democratic Party has consistently pursued with reference to the interests of American citizens abroad. And from that day to this the same general policy has prevailed as to American citizens whether absent or present in this country. American interests are not rated first; they are rated last under this administration.

This new taxation scheme is the last and strongest link in the chain that the Democratic Party have been forging to shackle American business at home and abroad. The tax they propose is a direct tax on success; on success not necessarily great or distinguished, but just plain, ordinary, moderate success, the success that distinguishes efficiency from shiftlessness and thrift from wastefulness,

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Does this bill provide that the Secretary of the Treasury may send experts into all the business institutions of America to examine their books and ascertain their profits, and thereby have a system of espionage over all the business of America?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not understand that this bill does that in terms

Mr. MADDEN. I think it does.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But I think it provides that all methods which may be used for the ascertainment of incomes, either under the corporation tax or under the individual tax law, may be used in this case, and it provides that every corporation or partnership shall make a return which shall show all the items with reference to their actual invested capital. I assume that those penalties would apply, as they do under the income-tax

Now, I wonder whether this represents the complete program of this method of taxation, or whether it is only the beginning. Unless you gentlemen of the Democratic Party make some pre tense of cutting down this wasteful expenditure of public money you will need more money this time next year. Do you propose then to stop at 8 per cent, or are you going to hike it up 50 per cent, as you have done within less than a year after passing your inheritance tax? Why stop at 50 per cent? Why stop at 100 per cent? Proceeding under your theory that success is a crime and prosperity a misdemeanor, why not confiscate everything above 8 per cent? The power to tax is the power to destroy. Why not destroy? Why not destroy all profits? Why not pass a law something like this, that all corporations or partnerships that make over 8 per cent shall contribute that excess to pay the losses of all partnerships and corporations that make less than 8 per cent? Why not pass a law—for that is the principle involved here—that no man may use in the development of his business more energy and brains than his least efficient competitor? That is the logical result of the policy adopted by this bill.

This bill is a direct blow at American industry, the industry of the man who works with his hands as well as of the man who works with his brain; for its tendency is going to be to block American progress, to destroy American efficiency, and to reduce American wages. From whatever point of view you consider it this is an un-American proposition, and I predict that the Democratic Party will live to rue the day when they foisted this monstrosity upon the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, I guess so. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. GORDON. Do you think this is as great a blow to American industry as it would be to put a tariff tax on raw

Mr. LONGWORTH I have not advocated a tariff on raw material.

Mr. GORDON. Then where would you raise this money you talk about? How would you raise it without taxing raw mate-

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know that the gentleman is probably the most advanced free trader in this House, and it would be rather bootless for me to suggest to him how a tariff can be for revenue and protection at the same time.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

TOWNER. The gentleman knows, I think, quite well that all over the agricultural portions of the United States there are farmers' associations, dairy associations, and grange associations in which the farmers invest small capital for the purpose of building a warehouse or creamery, or something of that kind, and cooperate in the manufacture, marketing, and sale of their products. They would all come under the provisions of this bill, would they not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I suppose not. Partnerships are specifically exempted in this case.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; but not the joint-stock companies. They are included with corporations.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I think that probably the gentleman is right.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ALLEN. Did the gentleman ever hear of one of these corporations or partnerships making over 8 per cent?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that, as he well knows, there is no dividend declared in most of these associations, and the great difficulty in those cases is going to be that whatever is received from the sales of the creamery, we will say, is returned to the contributors and joint-stock owners of the association and constitutes really the price of their products. Now, it would be practically impossible, except by some arbitrary determination, to decide what is the amount of profit in a case of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. The reason I make the inquiry is that I have belonged to three of these associations for 20 years.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the statistics of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney] and to the good-natured criticism and the invective, not so goodnatured, of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth]. of these addresses attempt to convey the impression that we are imposing a tax upon successful business; that we are imposing a burdensome tax upon small aggregations of capital; that in this measure and in the other measures which we have adopted during the present administration we have expressed our contempt for the policy that American interests are paramount wherever Americans can be found. These gentlemen insist with more vigor than logic that this is "only another attempt on the part of the Democracy to shackle business in this country."

I get the impression also from these two addresses that both these gentlemen believe that if the Republicans had been permitted to remain in power, if the rates of the Republican tariff bills had prevailed to this date, this situation could not exist and we would not now be called upon to meet these tremendous expenditures by this sort of a bill-expenditures made necessary by the fact that all the rest of the world is engaged in the most horrible war of all history, and that in this age of force in the world we must be prepared to maintain our neutrality and to protect and maintain the peace, prosperity, and happiness which prevails now in this favored land.

REPUBLICAN TARIFF THEORIES AND THE PRESENT EMERGENCY.

Now, suppose we had retained until this day the rates of Republican tariff laws. Could we meet now with that sort of a revenue these tremendous preparedness expenditures? preparedness program for 1917 and for 1918 require $873,000,000 above the normal expenditures—$436,000,000 per year above the usual expenditures of the War and Navy Departments. This program was considered necessary by the military experts up here in the War Department, and by the people generally throughout the country

If we had extended the rates of the McKinley bill to the present time, and if we were this year and every year collecting the highest amount of money we ever collected under the McKin-ley bill, we would be collecting only $219,000,000 per year—program of ours. In the Taft campaign you promised to lower the tariff rates if you succeeded in getting into power again in this country. You promised in your platform to revise the tariff in a special session of Congress if you elected your candidate. The country was not satisfied with that promise and said it must be a revision downward. You sent Mr. Taft in a swing around the circle, speaking in the important cities of this land, declaring that if he was reelected his reelection meant the reduction even of the rates which at no time under either the McKinley or the Dingley laws had yielded over $330,000,000. But you did not keep your promise; you enacted the Payne-Aldrich bill and increased the tariff burdens upon the people of the land. Your Payne-Aldrich law yielded $333,000,000 during the fiscal year of 1910, and that was the year in which it yielded the largest revenue; the next year was 1911, and it yielded $318,-000,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course the gentleman should take into consideration the largely increased importations. Does not the gentleman know that there is no encyclopedia or annual yearbook in the world that does not give 3 or 4 per cent difference between the Payne-Aldrich bill and the Dingley law?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know what the large library of books the gentleman is quoting will show, but I know the statements that I am making are true.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman can not point to any authority that coincides with his statement.

Mr. RAINEY. I call the gentleman's attention to the Treasury reports, and they will show that what I have said is true. We collected $333,000,000 in 1910 under the Payne-Adrich bill, and $318,000,000 in 1913. The increased collection under the Payne-Aldrich bill over the McKinley bill was over $100,-000,000—of course more money was collected under the Dingley law than under the McKinley law, but not more than I have indicated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the ad valorem rates under the Payne law were less than under the McKinley law?

Mr. RAINEY. No; the ad valorem rates were higher under the Payne-Aldrich bill than under the McKinley bill, and reports of your own exports show it. It may be possible that as a mathematical proposition the rates under the McKinley law indicated a higher percentage, perhaps due to an enlargement of the free list under the Payne-Aldrich law. But the Treasury records will show that under the McKinley law you collected an average duty per capita of $2.25 and under the Payne-Aldrich law you collected an average duty per capita of $3.40, which does not indicate a substantial decrease in tariff burdens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of the Dingley hill.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not care to continue discussing ancient

Mr. FESS. Does not the gentleman mean the Dingley bill instead of the McKinley bill?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I want to call attention now to the Payne-Aldrich bill. Now, the point I want to make is this: These gentlemen insist that they could pay for the extra preparedness program, amounting to over $436,000,000 a year, by levying tariff taxes. The most they ever succeeded in getting out of any Republican tariff law they got in 1910 out of the Payne-Aldrich law, and that amount was $333,000,000, which entire amount is over $100,000,000 less than the additions alone in the Army and the Navy and the fortifications supply bills, made necessary by these preparedness measures. You never got any more money than that out of the tariff in any one year during the life of the Republican Party, and that amount would not even pay this increase.

OUR PRESENT PROSPERITY AND DEMOCRATIC TARIFF POLICIES.

Now, I have always understood from my knowledge of economics that that nation in the world was the most prosperous which imported the most, which exported the most, which had in its favor the largest balance of trade, if any such combination as this could ever exist among the civilized nations of the modern world. At the present time we are exporting more from this country than any nation ever exported since the morning stars sang together. At the present time we are importing, month by month and year by year, more than any other nation ever imported. At the present time we have in our favor, month by month and year by year, the largest balance of trade any nation almost $220,000,000 too small to even pay for this additional ever enjoyed-larger than we have ever enjoyed during all the period of our history as a Nation; and yet these gentlemen say we are shackling business under this financial policy of ours.

The first thing we did in the Underwood tariff act was to establish what we said was a competitive tariff-was to take off $80,000,000 of tax burdens from the people of this country and put those tax burdens where they ought to be, upon the large incomes of the country, upon the men who profited most under this Government, upon the men who were best able to If our manufacturing establishments are closed throughpay. If our manufacturing establishments are closed through-out the land, that might be evidence to which these gentlemen could point, but if they are working day and night and some of them even violating the Sunday laws, if they are doing all of that, they are not injured. Out in my State from the tall chimneys of 20,000 factories smoke rises all day long and from hundreds of them all night long, producing there in the third manufacturing State of the Union manufactured goods for all the world, and among those 20,000 factories less than half a dozen are engaged in the manufacture of war material. We are obtaining the highest prices ever obtained for American manufactured products in the history of the world. We are obtaining the highest prices ever obtained for farm produce. ing machinery throughout the States of the Union 7,000,000 skilled laborers work producing more manufactured goods in 12 months of time than any nation in the world ever produced in a like period of time. Is that an evidence of any shackling of the business of the country? Who ought to pay the burdens of Government? Ought the poor to pay these expenses? Ought we to saddle these preparedness expenses upon unsuccessful business, if you can find any unsuccessful business in this land at the present time? Is it not right that those men who have combined and who are enjoying their full measure of the prosperity which has come to the Nation should pay their full share of its burdens, especially the burdens imposed by a bill which proposes to raise money to place out in the oceans which surround their factories an iron wall of floating steel forts to protect them and to insure through the coming years the profits they now enjoy? The money we are collecting goes also to pay for land defenses and for the great armies provided in these preparedness measures for all of which Republicans in this House voted. Talk about a tax on small Is an aggregation of $100,000 of capital a small business? Let us assume that it is. We exempt first in the profits of a company on an invested capital of $100,000, or of any amount, $5,000, and then we exempt from the operation of this tax 8 per cent of their profits. In other words, in order to subject that small business with an invested capital of $100,000 to the provisions of this bill they must first make upon the capital they have invested 13 per cent, and if they make more than that we take not what they make more than that, but we take one-twelfth of what they make more than that. That is not a burden upon successful business. That is not a burden upon small business.

AN ANALYSIS OF OUR IMPORTATIONS IN 1916 IN CONNECTION WITH OUR INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT.

For the 12 months ending with December last our imports amounted to $2,391,716,000. For the 12 months ending December, 1911, when the Payne-Aldrich Act was in operation, our imports amouted to $1,532,359,000. In other words, our imports under the present tariff law are nearly one billion more per year than they were under the Payne-Aldrich law. If we are bringing in manufactured goods in this enormous quantity, then we may be displacing the goods produced by our own factories throughout the land; but if we are not bringing in manufactured goods in quantities tremendously large, then we can not be hurting anyone. Therefore it is important, in order to meet the statistics advanced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordner], simply to call attention to the facts. In 1916 we brought in $21,500,000 more foodstuffs than we did under the Payne law in a crude condition, including food ani-We brought in during the calendar year 1916 nearly $114,000,000 worth of foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured more than we brought in in 1912. In other words, under our law which made it possible to bring in foodstuffs in larger quantities than it was possible to bring them in under the Payne law we brought in foodstuffs in larger quantities-$134,000,000 more in 1916 than in 1911. Would you have kept them out by imposing a tariff? Prices of foodstuffs, you complain, are going up all the time. Where would they have been were it not for these wise provisions of the competitive Underwood tariff law? We brought in in 1916 nearly $390,000,000 more of crude materials for use in manufacturing than we did in 1912, In other words, under this tariff law of ours we were compelled to bring in nearly $389,000,000 more of crude materials with which to feed these great factories of ours, prospering, as they were, under the Underwood law, than we brought in in 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, during the year 1916 we brought in materials for further use in manufacturing to the amount of $65,000,000 more than were brought in under the Payne-Aldrich law in 1912. In other words, in order to keep these factories going in 1916 we not only used all of the crude materials and the materials ready for further use in manufacturing that could possibly be obtained in this country, but we brought in $455,-000,000 more of the kind of raw material which keeps 170,000 factories running throughout this land of ours than we brought in in 1912 under the Payne law. Did that hurt any industry in this country? I am comparing the calendar year 1916 with the calendar year 1912 for the reason that 1912 was a typical year under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Now, we come, in analyzing this import business, to which attention has been called, to the question of manufactured goods ready for consumption. Now, if under our bill we have brought in more manufactured goods ready for consumption than were brought in under Republican bills, then these manufacturers may have something of which to complain. During the 12 months ending with the month of December, 1916, we brought in of manufactured goods ready for consumption, ready for the consumer, $45,000,000 worth less than we brought in in 1912 under the Payne-Aldrich bill. I know of no Member of this House who can use figures so effectively as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney], but he uses always the statistics that represent his side of the question; but when you analyze, as I have here, the importations for 1916, to which he called attention, and compare them with the importations under the years of the Payne-Aldrich bill, it proves absolutely and conclusively that the Underwood tariff bill-competitive tariff bill, as we claim it to be-has done more to build up the industries of this country since it has been in force than all the Republican tariff bills that have ever passed through this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAINEY. For a question only; not for a statement or a speech.

Mr. PLATT. If that be so, the Underwood bill must be the cause of the high cost of living also.

HIGH COST OF LIVING EXPLAINED BY REPUBLICAN LEADERS.

Mr. RAINEY. Now, in that connection I want to read from a speech delivered by one of the Republican leaders in this House in reply to the gentleman who has just interrupted me. want to read from the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], an able speech, made upon this floor during the first few days of his membership in this body, which was tremendously applauded on that side of the House; and if the gentleman was here at that time, he joined in the applause. gentleman from Ohio always makes a good speech on economic subjects, but he never made a better one than this. At that time prices were high and the charge was being made that prices were higher under the Payne-Aldrich bill than they had ever been before. The upward movement of prices commenced at that time. Now, I want to read from the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], made on the 25th day of April, 1913:

High prices should be interpreted the "cost of high living" rather than the "high cost of living." It is due to many causes. First, the well-to-do situation of the average man has placed him in a position to gratify increased demands. He is becoming more extravagant. He wants more, and his standards of living are gradually increasing. Secondly, the drift of population from country to city disturbs the balance between production and consumption. It increases the demand for consumption more rapidly than the supply of production. This also causes prices of products to go up. Thirdly, the multiplication and improvement of facilities for communication, making the world but one neighborhood, has a like tendency upward in prices. Fourthly, the increase in the number of the middlemen between the original producers and the ultimate consumer compels an upward trend of price to the consumer, though it might not change for the producer. The farmer who sells his fat cattle at a price that steak could sell at 15 cents will see the steer go through a half dozen different hands, each of which must have a margin, so that when it reaches the hotel table it will command more than three times the original price. Fifthly, another cause of high price is the great bulk of money in circulation in our country. These causes are conditions of industry and not results of tariff duties.

The gentleman discussed the matter along that line, defending the high prices under the Taft administration. I remember that prior to that time, on the 19th day of August, 1912, another leader on the Republican side, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey], discussed also the high cost of living under the Taft administration. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] thought so much of this speech that he printed it in pamphlet form and sent each Member of Congress a copy of it.

In defense of the high cost of living under the Taft administration, among other things, the gentleman from Washington said:

From the carliest history of the race high prices have marked the growth of civilization. * * * So the history of high prices is to-day, as it has always been, the history of progress; the one invariably measures the other. To-day from every nation of the world our consular agents report this complaint about the high cost of living.

Speaking of the Payne-Aldrich bill, the gentleman from Washington in his speech said:

Ington in his speech said:

The tariff was reduced 25 per cent on dressed meats, and the price of dressed meats immediately went up.

The tariff was reduced on ham 20 per cent, and the price of ham immediately went up.

The man who claims that a reduction of the tariff means a reduction of the prices is at war with the facts, and is contradicting the entire history of the tariff legislation of this country.

* * It is true that it costs more to live to-day than ever before, but we are living better to-day than ever before. We live in better houses than ever before.

* * The luxury of to-day will be the necessity of to-morrow.

The luxury of to-day will be the necessity of to-morrow.

* * To-day we produce three times as much gold as we did 20 years ago. Perhaps this may have something to do with the increased cost of living.

* * As private expenses have increased, so have the expenses of Government.

* * Where do we have the most progress and prosperity and happiness? Where prices are high.

* * Where do we have low prices? In India, in China, and other Asiatic countries.

* * *

The gentleman from Washington proceeds to the conclusion of his speech with the following statement:

If cheap prices are wanted, then free trade is the remedy. Another Wilson bill will bring the result desired. There can be no doubt of that. Again we will have cheap meat and cheap clothing and cheap labor and still cheaper men.

The Republican speeches to which we have just listened indicate that this prophecy of the gentleman from Washington has not been realized. If we are to believe the addresses just delivered, prices are certainly not any lower than they were during the period of the Taft administration.

In commenting upon the approaching Democratic tariff billthe Underwood tariff bill-the gentleman from Washington concluded his speech as follows:

No one need fear that if a Democratic tariff law is placed upon our statute books that the high cost of living will not disappear and that high living will also disappear; free trade, free soup houses, and cheapness, and poverty, and want, and hunger, and famine, and Democracy will again bless this country of ours.

In the face of the prosperity which prevails in this country today and the high wages, the highest ever paid in the history of the Nation; in view of the fact that no man is without employment who is able to work and who wants to work, these prophecies seem at the present time particularly ridiculous. These speeches were in defense of the high prices, the high cost of living which prevailed during the Taft administration, and which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] claim have not yet disappeared from the land.

Both of those gentlemen have correctly interpreted the reasons for high prices, and if the reason for high prices which prevailed in 1913 and immediately prior thereto is due to such causes as the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Washington say in these speeches, then the increase in prices at this time is due in a still larger degree to the greater prosperity which prevails now throughout the land. We have poured month by month into our Treasury vaults here in this country a stream of the yellow gold, more than ever came to the vaults of any treasury of any country in the civilized world in a similar length of time. The importation of gold, while it brings in its train prosperity, brings also high prices, as the gentleman from Ohio knows.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. FESS. That speech was made when we were discussing the Underwood tariff bill, and was in reply to the charge of the gentlemen who had charge of the bill and others that the high cost of living was due to a protective tariff.

Mr. RAINEY. No matter what the occasion was for the gentleman's speech, his argument applies with greater force now than it did then. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I will.
Mr. BROWNING. Was it not the intention of the Democratic Party to cure all those evils when they came into power?

Mr. RAINEY. The Republican Party had been in power for 50 years of time, and I would like to see any party that could cure all the economic evils in less than 4 years of time that grew up under 50 years of Republican rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.

Mr. BROWNING. They can if they want to.

OUR ENORMOUS EXPORT BUSINESS UNDER DEMOCRATIC POLICIES.

Mr. RAINEY. Under this Democratic administration we are exporting goods. We are exporting at the rate of $5,500,-000,000 worth of goods every year. For the 12 months ending last December we exported $5,480,000,000 worth of goods, and we did this in spite of the fact that the great central nations of Europe, always among our best customers, were closed to us by the English blockade.

We did this in spite of the fact that almost half the civilized world was closed to our markets. We sent more manufactured goods in 1916 to Sweden and to Norway and to Denmark, countries at peace, than we ever sent before in the same period of time in our history as a nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. KITCHIN. Would the gentleman like more time?
Mr. RAINEY. I would like five minutes more.
Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.
Mr. RAINEY. We exported more manufactured goods to Brazil, and to the Argentine Republic, and to Spain, and to the far-off countries of the Orient than we ever did before under Republican rule. These countries are not at war. Countries that were at war, countries that had formerly accepted our goods, that gave us in return their manufactured products, were closed to our markets. And so, under a Demo-cratic administration, with agents of the Department of Commerce at work in all sections of the civilized world finding markets for American goods, we have been able to send them in these increased quantities to all the countries of the world.

INCREASING OUR MERCHANT MARINE.

Ships? Of course, we are arranging to build and to buy ships. In order to carry this immense export commerce of ours we are compelled to acquire ships, and we have arranged for the building of them and for their purchase and for their sailing under the American flag, in a manner absolutely democratic—by methods which the people of this country approve.
The method you always stood for was to pour gold from the Treasury into the sea in enormous subsidies—to pay money out of the Treasury to companies in order to induce them to operate ships. We have adopted a different plan than this.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS VOTED FOR PROPOSITIONS THEY NOW CONDEMN.

Here in this minority report you criticize the Democratic Party for "a series of doubtful Government enterprises, such as railroads in the frozen north," and so forth. This report challenging the Democratic Party for the Alaskan Railroad policy is signed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], and that gentleman who now criticizes this method of developing Alaska voted for the Alaskan Railroad bill. This complaint as to this Democratic method for developing Alaska is signed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Sloan], and yet the gentleman from Nebraska voted for the Alaskan Railroad. This minority report criticizing these things is signed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth]. He was not a Member of Congress at that time. If he had been, probably he would also have voted for the development of the resources of Alaska.

GUNS AND AMMUNITION ONLY SMALL PART OF OUR EXPORTATIONS.

I want to conclude with the statement that we exported more goods in 1916 under these Democratic tariff measures and under this fiscal policy of ours which you condemn-we exported twice as much goods as you ever exported in any one year during any Republican administration.

Mr. FORDNEY. There was not any war in Europe during the Republican administration, was there? And is not that the cause of your increased exports now?

Mr. RAINEY. The war in Europe accounts for some of these exports, but it does not account for the fact that in my State 19,995 factories are manufacturing goods day and night, many of them for export, and less than half a dozen factories are manufacturing war material. Less than 14 per cent of these exports consisted of ammunition and firearms. Take that out and you have remaining in the calendar year of 1916 an exportation as large as the combined exports of any two years under any Republican administration. [Applause.]

ERRONEOUS IMPRESSIONS AS TO EFFECT OF THIS BILL.

I have received a number of letters and telegrams from Illinois and from other States protesting against the proposed tax on excess profits. I am not in receipt of a single letter or telegram which conveys to me the impression that the person communicating with me understood what this bill is. A number of them think we are taxing profits 8 per cent. A number of them seem to think there is no exemption of $5,000. Others think we are imposing an 8 per cent tax on all corporations and partnerships in the country computed on their capital invested.

Others seem to think that the proposition is to take all the profits of corporations and partnerships in excess of 8 per cent.

All records for misinformation on public questions appear to have been broken. Manufacturing associations throughout the country have advised their members to protest against this bill, incorrectly describing the terms of the bill in their communications to their members. I have before me the circular letter sent out by the Illinois Bankers' Association from its office in Chicago on the 24th day of January, 1917, to all members of the association. This letter was sent to me by a small banker, who would not be taxed a cent under the present bill, asking me to oppose the bill and to assist him in any possible way. This letter, sent out by the Illinois Bankers' Association, an exceedingly important organization, contains more than the usual amount of misinformation, due, I presume, to the fact stated in the last paragraph of the letter-that this communication was "the longest letter ever sent the membership."

Among other glaring inaccuracies the letter contains this statement:

As an illustration of how the proposed tax will work, a bank or other business with a capital of $50,000, surplus and undivided profits of $10,000, which earns 20 per cent net on its capital, or $10,000 a year, would be entitled to a deduction of 8 per cent on the capital and surplus amounting to $60,000, or $4,800, leaving the difference between this amount and $10,000, or $5,200, upon which a tax of 8 per cent, amounting in this case to $416, would have to be paid.

Under this bill such a bank as this would pay no tax at all. The $5,000 exemption will leave only $200 to which the tax of 8 per cent would apply. However, this bank would take out all of its taxes, including local taxes, before the 8 per cent tax would apply, and in all probability these taxes, which it would be permitted to deduct, would amount to more than $200. Therefore, instead of paying $416 per year this bank would pay no taxes whatever under this bill.

The statement of this letter as to the taxes larger banks would pay is just as erroneous. The letter entirely ignores the fact that before computing this tax the banks are permitted to take out their capital-stock tax and all other taxes.

Based upon these glaringly inaccurate statements, the secretary of the Illinois Bankers' Association, who sends out this communication, proceeds to argue for a protective tariff to prevent idle mills, and insists that with the existing direct taxation a protective tariff would produce adequate revenues, and so forth. No statement could be more inaccurate. No protective tariff ever devised by the Republican Party yielded more than $333,000,000 per year. Our preparedness program alone amounts to over $436,000,000 per year. The expenses of maintaining our Army and Navy before entering upon the present expensive program of preparedness generally demanded by the bankers throughout the country cost us over $250,000,000 per In other words, the demands of our Army and Navy alone at the present time on the Treasury of the United States amount to over $680,000,000 each year, and yet the secretary of the Illinois Bankers' Association presumes to suggest to all of the bankers that belong to this organization that a return to the Republican method of levying tariffs will meet not only the present expenses of maintaining our Army and Navy but a considerable part of the other expenses of conducting this great Government of ours. All the ingenuity of high-tariff Republican leaders was never able to obtain out of the tariff half enough money to pay the present expenses of maintaining our Army and Navy alone.

I know many Illinois bankers who are Democrats and who believe in honest methods of presenting economic questions and I know many Republican bankers who favor the same method of presenting an important matter like this through the influenmembership of the Illinois Bankers' Association. I am wondering if they approve such a letter as this.

THESE TAXES GO INTO SPECIAL PREPAREDNESS FUND.

Every dollar derived from this bill will go toward paying for our preparedness program, and goes into a special fund for that purpose. Every dollar derived from the last emergency bill, which is intended for the support of our preparedness program, is by this bill placed in the same fund. Whenever, as the result of the world peace negotiations which may follow the recent letter of President Wilson, it is possible to abandon our preparedness program this tax may cease. 'We exempt agriculture for the reason, among other reasons, that agriculture is exempted by all the nations which impose excess-profits tax. We exempt incomes-all professional incomes. Even the warring nations of Europe in a large measure exempt these incomes. We place this burden upon those who are prospering, upon those who are making money on account of the fact that the wise administration of affairs by this administration has made it possible for them to make money. We place this tax upon those citizens of the country who are making the largest profits, not those who are making the smallest profits. Eight per cent profits, which we exempt, is to-day an exceedingly satisfactory profit on invested capital, and in this bill we take only one-twelfth of the profits above 8 per cent, plus the exemption of $5,000, and all taxes, local. State, and Federal, come out also before this tax attaches.

No matter what we may think about the preparedness program now in progress, it has been adopted. Republican Members voted for it almost unanimously. This obligation has been incurred and it must be met. We have provided a way in which it can be met. I have heard from the other side no suggestions as to how these preparedness demands ought to be met, except that we ought to meet them by increasing the tax upon imports. The slightest examination of the subject demonstrates the absurdity of such a proposition as this.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.1

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Sloan]. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, looking over a newspaper bearing date of March 19, 1913, I was struck with the following bold headlines: "Fight for economy-Wilson to wage a warfare on heavy expenditures."

With multiplied recommendations for novel expenditures and the veto of not a single appropriation, we are confronted with this bill. It is conclusive evidence of one war that was ended without victory.

I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] who impoverished the English language in his glowing descriptions of the prosperity of the private establishments throughout the United States. So prosperous were they that they seemed to have excited the cupidity of the party in power. I marveled if his statement was correct and if every business concern in the United States had such prosperity. I wondered why. I thought it must have been, perhaps, largely on account of good management; and, if that is true, what can you say of the greatest business establishment in the United States—the Government itself—that finds itself to-day with $30,000,000 less than no money at all.

It seems that the Government of the United States and the inefficients who are conducting it now are jealous of that socalled prosperity of individual affairs, and they want to lay the strong taxing hand upon them to even up affairs, because it is a crime under this administration to be solvent; it is a misdemeanor to be thrifty.

Four years from the 4th of next March the present administration took charge of the National Treasury. Making proper deduction for current items, so far as they can be definitely ascertained, we had a balance in the United States Treasury on March 3, 1913, of $126,664,083.28. On January 26, 1917, observing the same rules of bookkeeping and classification of items, we have $30,745,773.46, less than no money at all. We are in the position of the staggering insolvent who seeks to put off the evil day by "kiting checks." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The character of the times may well be suggested by the statement of the issues upon which the American electorate granted an extension to the administration. The first was that the President had "kept the country out of war"; the second, that the President favored protection to American industries, as was indicated in his Tariff Commission, which he forced down the throats of a reluctant majority. That the second shared with the first responsibility for the result is shown in that while the President was reelected by a plurality vote of all States, if all States are considered, and by a minority vote in all States, collectively speaking, where real elections were held, a House known to be protective was elected. A large majority of the collective votes for Congressmen was cast for Republican candi-

That both of these issues are now repudiated, the bill now being considered is evidence. First, this measure is urged on the ground of "war expenditures incurred." In other words. we are to raise this enormous sum of money to pay for the expenses of a war out of which the American people were told we had been kept. Second, the protection feature is repudiated by its omission from this bill and the further facts that nearly five months have elapsed since the tariff-commission law was enacted, and its membership is not even nominated, while those suggested by the press as having been selected are most radical free traders. So we have now had nearly four years of relative free trade, with a prospect of four years more. There is one advantage, dear a lesson as it is and dearer as it probably will be-there will be demonstrated to the people the difference between a sound business and political policy and the fatuous following of a time-worn and oft-discredited theory.

Right here let me say that there is not a protective feature in this bill. In the revenue measure of September 8, 1916, there were three protective features-dyestuffs, tariff commission, and dumping clause. Moreover our troops were invading Mexico and the promptings of patriotism suggested voting for more revenue. But now the troops are recalled and another war without a victory has found an end. It has been said that the defense of the Mexican campaign was the inspiration of the world-peace speech before the Senate.

Moreover, there seems to be no end to this administration's demand for money, persisting like the daughters of the horse-leech: "Give, give, give."

The Treasury is now $157,409,856.74 worse off than it was four years ago. Assuming that the "hand-to-mouth" system is to be followed until July 1, 1918, the provisions here imposed are to raise funds to keep the country going up to that time. To accomplish that it is here proposed to issue bonds in the sum of $100,000,000 and use in addition $222,000,000 heretofore authorized but unissued Panama Canal bonds; to authorize issuance of short-time loans to the extent of $300,000,000; raise on inheritance tax $32,000,000; raise on business $320,000,000; a total of $974,000,000.

Then, if we would ascertain how much it would cost to place the Treasury on July 1, 1918, in the condition it was four years ago, add to the last sum $157,409,000, making a grand total cost to the Treasury of the United States of five years and four months of Democracy of $1,131,409,000. It demonstrates the high cost of misgovernment—an expensive luxury—the most expensive since Imperial Rome went up in flames to amuse the music-mad emperor. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?
Mr. SLOAN. Yes.
Mr. FARR. Was that amount just mentioned the amount

Mr. FARR. Was that amount just mentioned the amount that this new bill will carry?

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, no. That is simply what it will take to put the Government financially in the same condition that it was in on March 4, 1913, indicating, as I said before, the high price of misgovernment.

Mr. FARR. Does the gentleman include there the revenue bills passed during the last two sessions?

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, no. Those were small luxuries as compared with this.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SLOAN. Yes; I will yield to my colleague.

Does the gentleman think we have gotten our Mr. REAVIS.

money's worth?

Mr. SLOAN. No; I do not think we have gotten our money's worth. The only way we possibly could get our money's worth would be for those who have so ill conducted this Government to resign and give somebody else a chance to give us good government, and not misgovernment. [Applause on the Republican side.

The primary cause of our Treasury's downfall was when the Underwood law, the last word in tariff perfldy, was passed. It was passed by a majority segregating itself from a minority prepared and qualified to admonish and advise; by disregarding their few sound Members' advice; and, lastly, by surrendering their prerogative in duty fixing to the executive branch of the Government, where supreme confidence coupled with kindergarten capacity touched, seized, and bungled.

Of course, the Underwood tariff law, like the bill that is being considered now, should not be charged to that side of the House. The executive department of this Government took charge of that, and forced it down the throat of that Congress just as it is forcing down the throat of this Congress the infamous measure before us.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SLOAN. For a question.

Mr. RAINEY. I feel that I can not sit here and permit that statement to go unchallenged.

Mr. SLOAN. Well, whether the gentleman is sitting comfortably or uncomfortably, I make that statement.

Mr. RAINEY. What the gentleman says is not true. Mr. SLOAN. It is true. You know it is true. It is true here and elsewhere.

Mr. RAINEY. I was on the committee, and the gentleman was not, and I know more about it than the gentleman does: and I was one of the conferees, and the gentleman was not. am willing that my statement shall go against his wherever I am known.

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, you say you are willing that your word shall go against mine wherever you are known. Why do you not make it stronger and put it, "Wherever you are not known"? Give us a stronger statement. [Laughter,]

Mr. RAINEY. I am willing that my statement shall go against the gentleman's statement wherever the gentleman is known. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. As a measure professing to raise revenue, it reduced it. It did raise something-a disturbance in busines circles, which, had it not been for a great European war, would have left our industries generally where our Treasury is now

To brace our failing Treasury after the Underwood law, five applications of the tax pulmotor have been made. [Laughter on the Republican side.] First, the war-revenue law of October 22, 1914, with its obnoxious stamp tax and special tax on banks and other lines of business. Second, the extension of the fore-going act, dated December 17, 1915. Third, the reimposition of a considerable duty on sugar. Fourth, the war-revenue act of September 8, 1916, in which income taxes were doubled and inheritance taxes, peculiarly the province of the States, were taken over by the Government for revenue purposes. Fifth, the present bill.

Grover Cleveland once said that it was "a condition, not a theory, which confronts us." It is worse than that. Here we have an appalling "condition" caused by a bad "theory," and both confronting us. A boy lost his knife. His father advised him to seek for it where he lost it. We should seek to recoup our loss largely at the customhouse. But this the misguided, purblind, bigoted, reactionary majority refuse to do. Political consumptives, they rather keep on taking patent medicine and quack nostrums than to resort to bright sunshine and pure air.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SLOAN. Just for a question, if it is relevant.

Mr. GORDON. Is it true or is it not that the Underwood law has produced more revenue in the same length of time since it was enacted than the Payne-Aldrich law did while it was in force?

Mr. SLOAN. It is not true that the Underwood law produced more import duties that the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. GORDON. Can you give us the figures?
Mr. SLOAN, I will put them in.
Mr. GORDON. I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Kitchin made that statement on the floor of the House and I have never heard it denied before.

Mr. SLOAN. Taking the average of the last two full fiscal years under the Payne law, which was $308,704,656, and the only two full fiscal years we have had under the Underwood law, which was $207,836,321, leaves the average Payne law duty income $100,868,335 more than under the Underwood law.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?
Mr. SLOAN. I will.
Mr. TILSON. If I remember correctly, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], in a very learned speech here, made it as one of his principal points that we collected $100,000,000 less under the Underwood law than under the Payne law, and therefore removed $100,000,000 from the shoulders of the people.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; and if Mr. RAINEY were asked, he would say that statement of his very materially strengthened it. He will admit it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Kitchin just stated to me that the Underwood law had produced $17,000,000 more revenue than the Payne-Aldrich law did in the same length of time.

Mr. SLOAN. I think you have another guess coming.
Mr. GORDON. Will you put the figures in the Record?
Mr. SLOAN. Yes; as I have said, I will print the figures for this purpose, because I know you are a seeker after truth, and I would like to satisfy you. Whether it is your desire or not, I know it is your need.

To replenish the Treasury they would rather invade the tomb of the dead American than to exact justice from the greedy foreigner. They prefer to penalize home thrift to taking tribute from the alien whom our complacency made rich. They elect to bond our children and theirs for generations rather than hamper the stranger at our gates, who brings us little, pays no tax, and takes away much that we need.

Many of us prefer Americans, native or naturalized, to any-We would rather dominate the Western body else on earth. passage to our shores of foreign goods. They like the foreign We favor American men and American merchandise. Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SLOAN. For one question; yes.
Mr. GORDON. Do you still think that the foreigner pays the tariff?

Mr. SLOAN. Why, we know it; and if you had taken an advanced course, or even a kindergarten course, in political economy you would know that in the end, by and large, the foreigners pay it, because if you had traveled abroad and heard their wails when the McKinley bill was passed you would understand that. And if you did not know it, the foreigner knew it, and knew it was to his disadvantage.

Mr. GORDON. There was some complaint against that bill in this country, too.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHERLEY). The rule provides that gentlemen must not interrupt without addressing the Chair.

Mr. SLOAN. I like to have the gentleman indulged, because, like that animal described by Artemus Ward, he is a very amoosin' cuss." [Laughter.]

With their code of economic ethics the majority brings in this bill, this new evidence of their own folly and a new confession of failure of the Underwood law.

THE INHERITANCE TAX.

An inheritance tax under our system of government, while it may be defended as constitutional, was not intended to be resorted to by the United States except in extremity. It was expected to be left to the States, whose duties, among others, are to care for the unfortunate living and may properly, for that purpose, draw on the estate of the more affluent dead.

Life insurance companies are taxed. That, of course, in the final analysis comes out of the policyholder or his beneficiary another way of meeting the victim at the grave. There is to be extracted from the amount his loved ones are to receive a tribute such as Cæsar never demanded. [Laughter and applause.]

This is the second assault upon the dead by this Congress. You are placing the second toll taker at the gate of death to penalize the departure of the industrious. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The first was last September.

To the majority nothing appears to aid the gasping breath of approaching dissolution like the fan of the consciencless taxgatherer. Bring the Government's collector that he may draw the death damp from the chilling brow with a tax warrant. Courageous 14-members of the Ways and Means Committee. With right of choice you become vultures instead of eagles. Deal harshly with the dying; they are helpless. Wrest from the orphans their birthright; they are defenseless. Extort from the widows; they are companionless. Shrouds, coffins, tombs, and taxes-cold comforters to mortal entering the valley of shadow. Verily the wages of free trade are grievous taxes and the end of Democracy is debt.

The sublime and beautiful Westminster funeral service has for decades been delivered over the remains of millions. To the triumphant challenge of "Grave where is thy victory?" there has been no defiant reply until the introduction of this bill, which answers the solemn inquiry by saying, "Down at the corner of Fifteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue, in the Treasury Building." [Laughter.]

The story comes from the majority caucus in the form of a "leak": A Member whose partisanship did not blind him to the enormity of this measure proposed to thrust aside that old party emblem, the donkey, and substitute the hyena, the robber

In the olden time Zacchæus was a great gatherer of taxes and become noted as an eminent tree climber. Now our Zacchæus, far famed not only as a taxgatherer but also a revenue dissi-pator, becomes a revenue porch climber.

BONDS.

The National Treasury during four years of this administration passed from repletion to emptiness, from abundance to

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SLOAN. Yes; I will again indulge.
Mr. GORDON. How much of the revenue, after Mr. Wilson was inaugurated, has been devoted to the construction of the Panama Canal?

Mr. SLOAN. That is a very intelligent question.
Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman does not know, I will tell him. It was $81,000,000.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, I want to assure the Republicans, because I want to be square with them, I did not make an arrangement with the gentleman from Ohio to interrogate me as he has done.

[Laughter.]
Mr. MADDEN. I will tell the gentleman the amount—$106,000,000 out of $130,000,000 left in the Treasury by the Republicans.

Mr. SLOAN. This measure calls for the sale of $322,000,000 bonds and $300,000,000 of short-time notes, or a total authorized increase of national indebtedness amounting to $622,000,000. as evidenced by a slight decrease in the number of failures, why

This is an unwarranted assault upon the children living and those yet unborn.

During the late campaign we heard much about a beneficent child-labor law which many voted for because they believed in it, while others supported it because political exigencles dictated. The law was to prevent their little feet from running errands and their hands from arduous toll. We heard nothing about a contemplated interest-bearing indebtedness of $622,000,000 to be laid upon their little backs to bear, together with grievous interest, on through life and down to the tomb; for if the ordinary running expenses of the Government can not be paid during profound peace at home, and in a period of foreign-war-stimulated prosperity, when can we hope for the payment of the principal debt?

Of course, the way for this enormous indebtedness was prepared by two smaller issues—first, $20,000,000 for a nitrate plant; next, an issue of $50,000,000 for a shipping bill; next note the increase by more than geometrical progression-$622,-000,000. Bonds are common in this administration-bonds for breakfast; bonds for dinner; bonds for supper. Bonds! Bonds!

The boast of a cloakroom jester that a Democratic Congress can issue more bonds in 4 years than a Republican Congress can pay in the next 25 years looks like it might come true. When you first came into power your appropriations were somewhat limited by the surplus, but now that your appropriations are from a deficit your appropriations are as unhampered as a deficit is limitless. The battle cries of this majority promises in its dying days to be made good.

A bas la surplus! Viva la debt! Hoch der deficit! Long live the bond!

PROFITS.

The other provision of the measure is an 8 per cent tax on profits above 8 per cent realized on capital of corporations and partnerships, with a basic $5,000 exemption. The rule adopted partnerships, with a basic $5,000 exemption. The rule adopted seems to be that of "Donnybrook Fair"—if you see a head, hit it. [Laughter.] Smite success! Slug excellence! "Seest thou a man diligent in his business," lay for him, swat him, teach him to fail successfully. Show him the meteoric course of our Treasury for four years. It flashed, flamed, and fell

This administration came into power declaring its favor to the consumer, its enmity to the producer, and it is living up in part to its pledge. It has favored the indulger of his appetite; it has discriminated against the user of his hands. It is here penalizing the thrifty and protecting the spendthrift. It punishes solvency and rewards bankruptcy. [Laughter.]

This and the preceding Congress placed a tax on corporations; placed an income tax on men composing corporations; placed a stamp tax to hamper business procedure; now will inflict a special penalty upon profits.

Moreover, all or nearly all protection against unfair foreign competition was removed.

The diplomatic genius of foreign Governments, the strategy of their commerce, unhampered, at our ports are delivering frontal attacks, while our Government, frenzied by its own Treasury's insolvency and seemingly jealous of the solvency of many business concerns, would tax them to their injury, instead of investing them with a shield for their proper defense.

There is a White House legend that the President upon signing that great "bill of business wrongs" known as the Underwood law, rapturously exclaimed, "By this act do we make business free." Referring recently to this incident a business man said, "If this is business freedom, how we would enjoy the chains of tyranny.'

Early in this administration business men were told if they failed or their business course made any trouble they would be "hung as high as Haman." Now they are told that if they succeed they will be hamstrung by taxation. [Laughter.] I have heard of a man being between the devil and the deep sea. But that position was not a circumstance compared to the business man's position between Wilson and Kitchin. [Laughter.]

A burden upon business now is unwise because in the last four years business has suffered much. The total number of failures in 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 was 54,269, with liabilities of $745,976,776, or an average per year of 13,567, with liabilities of $186,494,194. The total number of failures in 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916 was 73,061, with liabilities of $1,107,309,799. or an average per year of 18,265, with liabilities of $274,827,449.

With this large increase in the number of failures it is but fair to believe that many have been upon the verge of failure. If business has generally improved during the last 12 months, should they not be given a fair opportunity to strengthen themselves for the inevitable shock which must come when the war stimulus has been withdrawn?

The following table shows the number of failures and liabilities for the last eight years, involving the two four-year periods discussed:

But there is an exception of agricultural partnerships. For " much thanks." It serves but one purpose to show the low estimate the majority of the Ways and Means Committee have for the farmers. Both the committee and the farmers know that farm partnerships are negligible in this country. The exception relates largely to farm profits going into a partnership concern in nearly every case engaged in some other general line of business. The exception would not be of any value to the farmer at all, who in nearly every case conducts his farming operations as an individual.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.
Mr. RAINEY. Permit me to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in his own State every arrangement between the owner of a farm and his tenant by which they divide crops is a partnership.

Mr. SLOAN. That is not a partnership. It is the relation of lessor to lessee.

A mighty insignificant exception, after having by the Underwood law placed practically all northwestern farm products on the free list or radically reduced the duties, by which the Treasury has lost an average of $60,000,000 per year; and this

And, further, bonds have been authorized at a time when they are not selling as well as formerly to buy ships at the highest price water craft ever commanded, one large purpose of which buying is to carry competing farm products from Argentina to enter our ports free. This exception may be a qualm of a cocained conscience on the part of the Ways and Means majority or its directing force; but if it is, we will wait till they have a real qualm.

This bill should be defeated. It is presented on account of the inexcusable extravagances of the last four years by the Congress and administration, surpassing the reckless abandon of the inebriated mariner. All of this was in violation of the 1912 Baltimore platform pledge of economy. That pledge was:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of the recent Republican Congress which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of uscless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

It should be defeated, because the opportunity is here and now to collect a large amount of needed revenue by returning to the sound tariff basis abandoned when the Underwood law was passed. There is nothing in this measure to obtain an additional dollar from the foreigner or protect an American

Before the war the best thought and policy of the leading nations of the earth was in the continuance or adoption of a nations of the earth was in the continuance or adoption of a protective policy, save Britain alone. Now, with the stern test of war, all the world sees the wisdom of a protective policy. All admit it, Britain included, except the fatuous, purblind party in power in this country.

The best demonstration of the wisdom of protection coming out of the fiery ordeal of war is Germany. She had spent enormous course in the development of protections and spent enormous course in the development of protections.

mous sums in the development of a navy, but she could not meet on even terms the "mistress of the seas." Her army was two and a half years ago, and is probably to-day, the most the products of the mine, forest, factory, and farm a large numerificative land fighting machine ever organized on earth. But no well-informed man will place Germany's army at the head of German achievement. Though the German Army is now smaller in numbers than are its opposing forces, the disparity is not so remarkable. The large outstanding fact is her inclustrial organization. With territory less in area than the State of Texas, and that duplicated by her ally, she is matched against the grainfields of the world, the herds of the plain, and the fishes of the seven seas. Moreover, her forests 50 years ago largely denuded, now reclothed, and her mines a half century ago undiscovered and undeveloped, all under the genius and industry of that marvelous people for two and a half years have fed, clothed, armed, and munitioned her own and allied armies, sustained the civilians at home, and (deprecating any thought of forecasting results) stands with no enemy foot upon her soil.

How was this brought about? At the close of the Franco-Prussian War the two most commanding statesmen of the world were Bismarck and Gladstone. Both were free traders, and both so directed their nation's policies. Their stand before the world made during that decade free trade respectable, Gladstone persisted in his free-trade policy, and so did his successors until the present period. The two nations are now at war. England neglected producing those things at home which she needed in time of peace and time of war, and depended on her overmastering fleet to bring from the four corners of the earth the products of forest, farm, factory, and mine for use of her citizens and Government. It is well known to all that in this conflict were it not for her overmastering fleet Great Britain would have been starved within 90 days after the beginning of the war, and her munitions, for lack of home supplies, would have been exhausted. But Bismarck, looking down the decades along the line of the Empire's forecasted destiny, saw that it was necessary to reverse the policy of Germany. He examined the protective policy of America, and proceeded to perfect it under the theory of protecting the products of the forest, farm, factory, and mine, so that in the prosecution of the arts and the industries of peace, as well as in the stress of war, Germany could depend upon that which was produced at home to fill her every want.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman will be brief. Mr. FESS. There is another thing. At the time Bismarck put the German Empire under the protective tariff they had 36,000,000 people and did not produce sufficient to feed themselves. To-day she has 68,000,000 people, and when the war broke out she was a large exporting nation of foodstuffs. I do not know anything that is stronger than that.

Mr. SLOAN. That is well said. This should be the policy of America, throughout whose broad dominions there may be produced food for our hundred millions, whose products of our mines, forests, farms, and factories would be sufficient to meet the demands of peace and the necessities of war.

This bill at this time should adopt that theory and, in plain terms, put it through the process of legislation to meet the condition which will confront us when this war has closed.

Taking the ad valorem rate of duty on all products imported in the four years of 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913 and applying it to the imports of 1916, the amount of revenue would have exceeded that actually collected under the Underwood law by $213,224,815.

Of course, the lower rates and the extended free list would modify that to some extent. But as rates should be fixed with reference to the closing of the war at or before the reconvening of Congress next December we should take into account the fact that the war has been exercising a restraint upon imports. This is shown by the fact that during the last year before the war we received imports from Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, and Turkey to the value of $259,362,027, while last year they only amounted to $17,007,498. So I submit another basis of the probable normal increase of import business from 1913 to 1916. From 1910 to 1913 imports increased 14 per cent, or $219,580,276. Using this 14 per cent as a basis of increase, the imports for 1916 would have been $1,914,025,929 and the increased revenue would have been $158,686.631. It will be seen that working from these two bases the results are not so widely different. Accepting their average as approximately correct we have the probable annual increase of revenue under the rate of the 1909 act of $185,955,723. This, extended over a period of 17 months, up to July 1, 1918, sought to be provided for in this bill, would give an increased revenue of $263,451,431.

Further, by following the Republican platform in protecting and which compete with our own products would be placed on the protected list and from which $50,000,000 per year could be raised. Among these might be suggested asbestos, coal, copper, cotton, hair of cattle and horses, hides except kangaroo, mineral oils, and sulphate of ammonia.

This rule would leave on the free list all noncompetitive necessities, such as tea, coffee, rubber, and many drugs.

Do this and you will not have to use a bond, or you can cut out short-time notes, or you can leave further inheritance taxes to the States and cut down one-half the burden upon business

Reduced revenues at the ports can no longer be excused by the existence of war. The imports for the fiscal year of 1916 enormously exceeded those of any year in our history, and the prospect for 1917 indicates an increase over 1916 of nearly

Then, with the coming of peace, as come it must, with the public debts of the battling nations amounting to over $100,000, 000,000, with an annual interest charge of over $5,000,000,000, with the United States in possession of nearly one-half of the gold of the world and one-third of its wealth, industrial forces now at work, reinforced by 20,000,000 men from the disbanding ranks, will be hurling their products of farm, mine, forest, and factory upon our markets, which, even with a reasonable tariff at our ports, the flood will be enormously increased. I have little doubt that our imports will be, during the first two years after the close of the war, twice as great as they are now during the war. So, should the war close by October 1, 1917, a large increase of imports will be made long before the following July and the large part of our deficit met by collections from the foreigner of nearly $400,000,000, American industries will have been protected, and the United States, taught by lessons of the great struggle, would be well on her way toward developing from her own resources all that this country might need under the blessings of peace or the stress of war.

But no; we have a debauched and depleted Treasury, assailed and defenseless industries. You are content with "taking no thought of the morrow."

It was during the reign of Louis XV of France. Unsuccessful foreign wars, like our own of the last two years, and un-bridled extravagances had emptied the national treasury. The advice of constitutional advisers was ignored for the more welcome soft-spoken suggestions of Mme. Pompadour. She was like some modern people who, accepting public position with a special jurisdiction, construe it to mean appointment as general manager. As troubles thickened about the aged monarch, he had a vision of what was to happen under his successor, including glimpses of the revolution and mutterings of the reign of terror. One day he asked Mme. Pompadour, "What of France after we are gone?" She answered with all her wisdom and wickedness, concentrating into the measure of a single phrase what this bill, with all its provisions, conditions, legal verbiage, and legislative rhetoric, conveys to an inquiring and despairing public, reckless, taunting, hopeless, "After us, the

Let the country understand that no Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee is in anywise responsible for one syllable of this legislative enormity. The eight minority mem-bers, representing, first, a majority of the votes cast in the election of 1914 and 1916, and, secondly, representing an overwhelming majority of those who are to materially contribute to the payment of the taxes to be levied and the debt created by this bill, were never admitted to their own committee room during the deliberations upon this bill until it was presented in its final form. And during that session reading of the bill was refused, as was also any time for consideration or deliberation.

That the first intimation of the substantial terms of the bill came when the Washington papers announced that President Wilson, Secretary McAdoo, and Chairman Kitchin had agreed on bonds and inheritance and profit taxes. What they agreed upon has not been changed, nor will any substantial change take place. To what a low estate has our House of Representatives fallen! The constitutional taxing body surrendering to the Executive and the Secretary of the Treasury!

Just at this time we are tempted to make some obvious comparisons between our first President and his Secretary of the Treasury and our last-Washington and Hamilton, Wilson and McAdoo-Washington delivering his Farewell Address to the country, Wilson his salutatory to the Senate; one admonishing the people, when the price of liberty and independence was yet fresh in their memories, to make no doubtful experiments, to retain a splendid isolation, and make no entangling alliances; the other, from our position of power, advised to take a doubtful position in a world league for enforced peace, the possi-bilities causing us to stand aghast; one, the argument of expe-rience had in battle, convention, and Cabinet; the other, the plea of a theory, risking the progress and development of more than a century upon the doubtful issue of the greatest experiment ever proposed in history. It is a far cry from 1796 to 1917, but a mighty contrast between the strength and stability of Washington and the felicity and flexibility of Wilson.

Of the Secretaries, Hamilton started with an empty Treasury; he filled it. McAdoo started with a full Treasury; he emptied it. [Applause.]

Said Daniel Webster, speaking of the first Secretary:

He smote the rock of our national resources and an abundant stream of revenue burst forth. He touched the dead corpse of public credit and it sprang upon its feet.

Of McAdoo it might be said, "He smote the generous stream of our national revenues and the barren wall of deficit confronted him. He touched the living form of our national finances and it sank, a shriveled corpse."

This bill seeks to galvanize the corpse. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Olney].
Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I was one of the 13 men in the Democratic caucus who reserved the right to dissent from the majority report of the Ways and Means Committee. Perhaps it is just as well to have doubting Thomases once in a while, because they become more enthusiastic Matthews, Marks, Lukes, and Johns in the end.

I am supporting this bill this evening, gentlemen, as a good, sound business proposition. [Applause.] I have examined it from every standpoint, and I ask you on that side of the House why can not some of you at least, anyway, come over on this side of the House as liberal-minded, good business men and support this proposition? We can not raise the revenue consistently under a high protective tariff system.

I have listened with interest to the remarks of my good friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and I believe he was right in opposing the Government shipping bill, as I opposed it, with one other Democrat, a year ago in this House as not being a good business proposition. This Government will go out into the market and purchase ships at four times their normal value under the shipping bill. But why can not you gentlemen also realize that this is a good business proposition? There are now 12 men left who are probably dissentient, but you remember the little piece of poetry that runs as follows:

Twelve little negroes looking up to heaven, One saw the light, and then there were eleven.

I trust we may go down the line until there will be left but seven, and then I believe that this bill will pass.

You claim, my friends on this side of the House, that under a protective tariff bill America can raise an enormous revenue from wool. Anticipating such a course as this, and being in the wool business in Boston, at 233 Sumner Street, which business I conduct through a partner, I asked that partner through a telegram if an embargo on wool still existed on the part of England toward the United States, and he telegraphs me as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., January 30, 1917.

Hon. RICHARD OLNEY, 2D. 489 House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Embargo tightly enforced; some indefinite talk of future release of small quantity wool under control of British Government. If released, quality of wool presumed will be burry and faulty, which can not be used by English manufacturers.

GORDON F. L. ROGERS.

It is well known to those on the other side of the House who are familiar with the wool situation that the only country in the world to-day which has increased its wool supply under war conditions is Australasia, and Australasia produces to-day a yearly crop of about 1,000,000,000 pounds, and under normal conditions in many years often half of that crop is shipped to this country.

And we, too, use a large supply of the New Zealand crop, the English wool, the Irish wool, the Scotch wool, and the Canadian wool, and if an embargo is placed upon these wools, where are we going to get the revenue by placing a tariff on wool?

Now, perhaps we could raise revenue from other commodities, but they would affect the wage earner to a greater or less extent to-day. What pleases me about this bill is that it affects me, and if I make an exorbitant profit on my wool business to-day I want to pay it to the Government.

The other night I exemplified before the caucus of this House my own case in confidence, and I took the caucus into my confidence when I said I presumably had a capital stock of about $20,000, representing capital and undivided profits, and it figured out that my firm on the basis of $8,000 profits in a normal year paid only $112 tax, and my share of the tax was only

I know of a concern 40 miles from my house as the crow flies which is making a profit of $15,000 a week upon war munitions. I have often wondered how we could really get at those concerns which were making exorbitant profits upon war munitions, and this seems to me to be the best, the wisest, and the most feasible way. Figuring out that this concern makes in a year upon war munitions $800,000 war profits, or $15,000 a week, after 8 per cent on its capitalization is deducted-after a deduction of $5,000, it would leave $771,000-and 8 per cent of that, or $61,680, is but a fair tax upon the enormous profit of $800,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The ammunition profits are not likely to continue after the war, are they?

Mr. OLNEY. That is all right, I will say to my good friend from Ohio; but this is an emergency measure that might be repealed after the war is over, and you or I do not know whether this war will continue a year, or two years, or six

Mr. FESS. Is it not the plan that this tax shall be permanent?

Mr. OLNEY. I do not so figure it out. Mr. FESS. May I ask the gentleman another question? Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does not the gentleman think this is going to be disappointing in the amount of revenue it will produce?

Mr. OLNEY. No; I do not really think so. I think lots of property will be uncovered and lots of profits uncovered which the Committee on Ways and Means can not estimate the existence of.

Perhaps there is one section of the bill which I would take exception to, and that is the section concerning the exemption of agricultural proceeds. I do not mean the exemption of intensive farming, where a man gets out with his overalls on and earns his living in that way; but I know of a concern in Massachusetts which purchases hogs and manufactures sausage and purchases and sells milk and cheese; to my knowledge its gross receipts in the last fiscal year were $970,000. Now, it seems to me that that is a real business corporation, not a farm, and it should be taxed upon its profits.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OLNEY. Yes.
Mr. KELLEY. Would the gentleman think that such a corporation as he speaks of ought to be classed as an agricultural corporation?

Mr. OLNEY. I think so, under that section of the bill, and that is the reason why I would either like to see that section stricken out or have it changed so as to mean only intensive

Mr. KELLEY. Would it not exempt the Chicago packers?
Mr. OLNEY. It would not, according to my construction of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. Would it exempt sugar packers? Mr. OLNEY. I do not think so.

Mr. KITCHIN. This bill does not exempt packers at all.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the gentleman's view on the same question that I asked of the chairman of the committee. Does not the gentleman think it is a wrong method of legislation to discriminate in favor of one as against another citizen?

Mr. OLNEY. No, sir; I do not; because I have always believed that brains, intelligence, and industry should be taxed as against those of our brothers who are perhaps more unfortunate. If I have a little more capacity than my brother, I am willing to pay the difference in a tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, it has always appeared to me that a willingness to pay a tax to support the Government ought to be regarded as a virtue to be cultivated and the tax as not an evil to be shunned, and therefore it strikes me that we ought to cultivate the idea of supporting the Government by each one of us being willing to pay a tax.

Mr. OLNEY. My friend from Ohio probably believes in indirect taxation?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I do. Mr. OLNEY. Under normal conditions I myself believe probably in a so-called horizontal tax; but in these times, to my mind, there could be no better business proposition presented before the people of this country than to tax those corporations. and firms which are making exorbitant profits on account of the European war. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan if he wishes to yield any of his time now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this bill, not because the revenue sought to be raised by it is not needed, but because I do not believe it is the right and proper way to raise such revenue at this time.

I favor most of the expenditures which are being made by Congress, and which were made at the last session. These include provision for the increase of the Army and the Navy with sufficient equipment, including the Aero Service, which should make us so strong on land and sea and in the air that no nation would dare attempt to invade our shores.

I also voted for and favored the expenditures for public buildings and for rivers and harbors, because I believe in progress. I believe you can not make one part of this great country prosperous without, indirectly at least, benefiting the entire Nation.

What I object to is this method of taxation. Being a protectionist, of course, I believe in raising all revenue possible through the medium of tariff duties. This seems to me to be a much more equable and satisfactory method of raising revenues, especially as in most cases the exporter pays the duties.

If when the Democratic Party came into power it had continued for the last three years the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill exactly as it was, it would have been unnecessary to have increased the corporation or income taxes last year, neither would this excess tax now proposed have been necessary.

This continued yearly burden that you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are putting on industry will in normal times depress and destroy initiative. Manufacturers and business men will not know what to expect; in fact, they do not now know what will next happen.

The viewpoint of the gentlemen who have the making of these tax measures seems to be centered only upon the man who has demonstrated his ability to make a dollar, and when they find him to take that dollar away from him.

It is my belief that the men of this country who demonstrate the ability to create industries to the extent that they are sufficient in magnitude to compete with world conditions and competition will not submit year after year to this sort of legislation, They have reached a point where they do not so much object to taxation, but they do object to the methods used in collecting that tax by the servants of your Government; by men, either competent or incompetent, who come searching into their business affairs; men who appear at any time demanding to see their private ledgers, their profit accounts, or their corporation accounts, refusing sworn statements as to these accounts and these businesses.

The theory of these men and the theory of the party which is back of them seems evidently to be that any man who operates a business and makes money is a crook.

It is my belief that at least 98 per cent of the so-called manufacturers, merchants, and business men of this country are patriotic and willing to pay a fair share of the taxes of the Gov-ernment, but most of them resent this method of being searched every morning to see if they have anything left overnight that the Government can take from them.

It seems singular to me that any man who has sufficient strength in a community to be elected to a body such as this could possess a mind so narrow that he could believe the president and treasurer of a corporation, or two gentlemen who are partners in a business, would go before a notary and make false oath to save a few dollars on a Government tax.

This method of "digging in"—it might be called a "ferret" system-to the affairs of the business men of this country is, in my judgment, bound to kill the goose which lays the golden egg.

I believe the laboring men of this country, the farmers of this country, the ordinary gentleman who has retired from the farm to a home in the village to spend his last days quietly and peacefully, do not object to taxation.

Each of them wishes to pay his fair and proportionate share of the expenses necessary to the operation of this Government and making it the best operated Government in the world.

Each of them want it equipped and maintained on a basis that will permit every man and woman and child in America to go their way through the streets of any city at home or in any other country, peacefully, proudly, with their heads up, knowing that they are protected and guarded, efficiently and willingly, by the flag of this Republic.

They have contributed their tax for that protection freely and cheerfully and insist that it be so expended as to enable us to attain and maintain that position in the galaxy of nations.

[Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER]. [Applause.]

[Mr. TAVENNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if now is the proper time to ask for permission to extend remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman it is customary to ask for that permission in the House, and I will ask that permission of the House this afternoon.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Watson].

Mr. KITCHIN. And, Mr. Chairman, after this gentleman has finished I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as my time is limited, I will not attempt to go into figures. The gentleman from Michigan very clearly made a statement relative to the import and export statistics, and if we followed his philosophy the committee would not have had to bring in this bill, loaded with direct taxes. I will vote against it, because I can not support a bill providing for a system of revenue which, in my opinion, will lower the wages of our workmen, bring adversity to our industries, and burden our people with excessive direct taxation.

One year ago, in my extension of remarks, I said:

The problem of taxation has been always a troublesome question for the Democratic Party to solve.

They did not find the solution in the Underwood Tariff Act, by which they endeavored to meet the expenses of the Government without increasing the taxes.

Inquire of history and you will learn that all free-trade administrations have had the same record—deficit in the Treasury.

My observation has been verified by the statement issued by the United States Treasury, and is evidenced by the national debt.

This bill proposes to devise the means by which the Nation's obligations can be met.

The taxpaying people of our country will acquiesce in the assertion that this is the most unpopular revenue bill that ever has been presented to this House, and that it is in sympathy with the most extravagant administration in the history of American legislation.

The great Democratic Party withdrew from their economical principles when $150,000,000 was deposited to their credit upon their elevation to power, and they have continued in that de-parture until the public debt has assumed the enormous proportions of hundreds of millions of dollars. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentlemen on that side of the aisle can well afford to bring this bill into the House and force its passage, because the people whom they represent will contribute a very small percentage of the taxes if this bill becomes a law.

The corporations and industries will pay a large part of the Federal taxes, and the few Eastern States, where they are mostly located, will enrich the Treasury by many millions, a large part of which, however, will be drawn to build post offices in the small towns and dredge shallow creeks in the privileged sections of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The protective tariff of the Republican Party was the energy which developed our great resources and expanded our industries to that degree which has given us the position of being the richest Nation of the world, and now the Democratic Party depends upon that prosperity from which to collect a revenue to meet the unparalleled and in-temperate Democratic disbursement of the moneys of the public

You, my Democratic friends, refused to protect those industries by tariff legislation; therefore in your course you have been forced to issue bonds in order to raise a revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government in times of peace. Similar proceedings can not be found anywhere in the records of the many Republican administrations.

Mr. Chairman, I fully recognize your right to legislate and your high privileges, but your policies will never maintain prosperity in our Nation. Your proposed plan of taxing the profits of corporate and private concerns is only another way of arriving at the direct taxation on their manufactured products. Thus you hope to raise a revenue to meet the Nation's debts, a scheme which not only fails to protect our industries but will add an additional burden by a direct taxation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

PRINT OF VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 2003).

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent for a print of the veto message on the immigration bill (H. R. 10384), if that can be done without interference with its status on the table, for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the President's veto message on the immigration bill shall be printed for information, it still being on the Speaker's table.

Mr. STAFFORD. To be printed as a House document?
Mr. BURNETT. No; just for information.
Mr. STAFFORD. What for?
Mr. BURNETT. For printing in the RECORD.
Mr. MADDEN. To be distributed to Members of the House?

LEAVE TO PRINT ON REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make another unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken or will speak on the revenue bill be given the right to extend and revise their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why does not the gentleman extend that to all Members whether they speak or not?

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand they will have time to put in the Record anything they want. As to the gentlemen who have not spoken on the revenue bill, I ask unanimous consent that they be given the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five calendar days after the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] makes two requests at once. The first one is that those who have spoken or may speak on this revenue bill have the right to extend and revise their remarks. Is there objection to that? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WORKS. I have here a telegram from George I. Cochran, president of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., relating to some of the provisions in the revenue bill and calling attention to the manner in which we are doubling up taxes in this country. I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Los Angeles, Cal., January 30, 1917.

JOHN D. WORKS, Washington, D. C .:

JOHN D. Works, Washington, D. C.:

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., a California institution and the largest company of its kind west of the Mississippi River, pays a large annual tax to the State of California of 2 per cent on its premiums. In addition to this it pays a similar tax to each State in which it transacts business, besides many other license taxes, etc.; in addition it pays a Federal income tax of over $18,000 a year, and this year an additional excise tax to the Federal Government of about $2,500 on its capital stock. And it is now proposed by the new Federal incometax bill to collect a further tax of 8 per cent on its profits, which would amount probably to about $80,000 a year. In addition, when you remember that the profits of a life insurance company are largely sayings from mortality and earnings on reserves for the benefit of its policyholders, which are returned to them, you will readily see that these so-called profits are not the kind of profits which this emergency tax is intended to reach. We submit that life insurance is already tremendously taxed, and that this additional tax is simply in excess of the limit. We ask you in the name of our policyholders, who are over a hundred thousand in number, to use your influence to exempt life and accident insurance companies from this unjust tax.

George I. Cochran,

President Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co

Mr. JONES. I have three telegrams very similar to the one just read. I will not ask that they be printed in the Record. I will simply state that one is from the Northern Life Insurance Co., of Seattle, another from Thomas A. Garrignes, general agent of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Seattle, and the other from R. L. Rutter, president of the Western Union Life Insurance Co., of Spokane, Wash. I present them and move that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS presented a memorial of the Single Tax Association of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the alleged deportation of Belgians by Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad to retain its Sound steamship lines; also for an increase in the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the Allied Printing Trades Council of San Francisco, Cal., and a memorial of the Labor Council of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against any change in the postal rates on second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask to have read at the desk a telegram I have received from the legislature of my State. I merely want it read into the RECORD so that I may submit some remarks on the subject to-morrow morning, and perhaps I may introduce a resolution with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the telegram as requested.

The telegram was read, as follows: [Telegram.]

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 31, 1917.

Senator E. D. Smith,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The general assembly has adopted a resolution condemning an alleged clique or combination of operators or speculators on the New York Cotton Exchange, charging that there is speculation and short selling without intention of actual delivery, thereby depressing the future market to a point below actual purchase price with the intention of forcing holders of cotton to sell at a sacrifice. You are requested to urge upon the Department of Justice to take necessary steps to stop such acts if they be found to exist and to punish the violators. I am instructed to advise you of this action by wire.

M. M. Mann, Clerk of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 41) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1000) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7767) relating to the temporary filling of vacancies occurring in the offices of register and receiver of district land offices, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1001) thereon.

STATUE OF ADMIRAL DUPONT.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) authorizing the removal of the statue of Admiral Dupont in Dupont Circle, in the city of Washington, D. C., and the erection of a memorial to Admiral Dupont in place thereof. I request the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read. The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission for the removal of the statue and pedestal and foundations of Admiral Dupont in Dupont Circle in the city of Washington, D. C., and the erection in place thereof within the circle of a memorial to said Admiral Dupont: Provided, That the present statue and pedestal may, after the completion of the memorial in place thereof, be turned over to the donors of the memorial for relocation outside the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the site and design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the removal of the statue, pedestal, and foundations and the erection of said memorial, complete: Provided further, That if the erection of this memorial shall not be begun within three years from and after the passage of this resolution the permission granted may, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be revoked at any time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know how well

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know how well acquainted the Senate is with this proposition, but I am free to admit that this is the first that I have heard of it; and so, of course, I have given it no consideration. I doubt if any Senators who are not members of the committee have given the matter any consideration. Therefore it seems to me that the resolution ought to go over until we can look into it. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is a favorable report from the Committee on the Library, to whom the matter was submitted. The members of the committee were polled, and they unanimously voted for the favorable report of the joint resolution. There can be no objection to it.

Some of the friends and the family of Admiral Dupont regard the present statue of him in Dupont Circle as not being a work of art particularly; and it is not, as the Senator from North Dakota himself knows. The family and the friends of Admiral Dupont wish to erect a memorial instead of that statue, something better worthy of the place, and to put it It will cost the Government nothing either for the site or for the pedestal or for anything else in connection with it.

The old statue which is now there will be preserved and will be placed elsewhere by the people who originally contributed the money for its erection. I hope there will be no objection made to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi explain why or how he can assure us that the present statue is not acceptable to the American people and to the Senate and that the new one will be more acceptable? Is that matter to be governed by the desire of relatives or by the desire and wishes of the people as to the character of monument which should be erected?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The new memorial is to be submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts, as I understand. As a matter of fact, I understand that the designs have already been so submitted; but they are to meet with their approval.

Of course, the Senator from North Dakota knows that I have no way of determining what the opinion of the people of the United States would be upon the subject, and that I have no way of getting a plebiscite. I can only tell the Senator that in my own opinion this is one of the numerous statues of men, some of them on horseback and some of them off, that do not ornament the places where they stand; and, judging other people by myself—which is about the only way one can judge other people until he has talked with them or has had a plebiscite-I should say that the people of the United States disapprove of the present statue, whether they will approve of the new one or not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, for information, whether the statue at Sheridan Circle was passed upon by the Commission of Fine Arts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not upon the Library Committee at that time, and I have no personal knowledge in regard to the matter. I do not know whether it was erected before the law creating the Fine Arts Commission was enacted or not; but if it had been passed upon by that commission, I will say the Commission of Fine Arts approved something that I, if I had been one of the commission, would not have approved. That is all I can say about that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am a little inclined to say, if that is the judgment of the Fine Arts Commission, I am not in harmony with their judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That statue represents a wild and riotous horse, and its rider is sitting rather unsafely for a cavalryman.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But he is still sitting.
Mr. GALLINGER. I think I am correct in saying that that statue was erected before authority was given to the Commission of Fine Arts to pass on such matters.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from New Hampshire was on the Library Committee long years before I was, and his information is good.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope there is some excuse for the erection of that statue.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the joint resolution, but merely, as a matter of curiosity, I wish to ask has the Senator any idea what the new memorial is to be?

Mr. WILLIAMS.' I have never seen the design, but I understand that it has been already submitted to the Fine Arts Com-mission. In that, however, I may be mistaken; but it will be so submitted and it must meet with their approval before its acceptance.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the same question of the Senator from Mississippi as that which was put by the Senator from Massachusetts. It seems that the Joint Comthe Senator from Massachusetts. It seems that the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library should have some say with reference to the approval of these designs. I should like to see a provision inserted in the resolution requiring the design, after it had been approved by the Fine Arts Commission, to be submitted to the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will consent that that may be inserted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that, although replying further to what the Senator from Washington Mr. Joyes 1

ing further to what the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] has stated, I will say that I think the Commission of Fine Arts is really a more competent body than is my committee to judge of the artistic merits of such monuments, and that we would think several times before we would disapprove their judgment from an artistic standpoint. We might disapprove of an inscription or something like that, but before we took the place of architects, artists, sculptors, and painters who formulate the opinions of the Fine Arts Commission, I repeat we would think several times. I am perfectly willing, however, that the provision suggested by the Senator from Washington shall be inserted in the resolution; and I ask that it be inserted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am sure the committee would give such a matter very careful consideration before they would reject the judgment of the Fine Arts Commission, but the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Mc-CUMBER] a moment ago that there is a statue here that possibly may have been approved by the Fine Arts Commission that does not meet with the approval of others attracted my attention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand from the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] that that statue was erected before the law requiring plans for monuments to be submitted to the Fine Arts Commission was enacted.

Mr. JONES. I think, Mr. President, there ought to be some organization to pass upon these matters that will not be controlled entirely by artistic sentiments; that there ought to be somebody who will represent to a certain extent the ordinary people of the country. I should, therefore, like to have the amendment which I have suggested inserted in the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A work of art could not be passed upon better by anybody in the world than by a commission of artists, so far as that goes; but, of course, Congress has the say originally as to whether the deed sought to be celebrated by a monument is worth being celebrated; whether any appropriations are to be made or not, and all that; but, as I said, as to what inscription was to be made upon the monument, the committee might pass upon that. It might be possible that an inscription might be proposed that would violate our sense of patriotism or our ideas of propriety, but nothing of that sort is contemplated in this case.

I will accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington, and I ask that it be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] will be stated.

The Secretary. In the second proviso of the joint resolu-tion, after the words "Fine Arts," it is proposed to insert "and by the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library," so that Provided further, That the site and design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts and by the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That amendment is satisfactory to me. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi when was the statue erected?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator refers to the statue now in Dupont Circle?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know; but it was there before I came to Congress, and I came here in 1893.

Mr. NORRIS. What is wrong with the statue as it stands

It is just not pretty; that is about all. Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just bad; that is all. Mr. WILLIAMS. Just bad. That is my judgment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the only statue in the city that is afflicted in that way, is it? Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not; I will say to the Senator there are-I started to say scores of them, but there are not that many. There are, however, several concerning which it may be said that it is a pity that they can not be taken down and something else put in their stead, especially those of the rearinghorse style.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think, Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Nebraska, we might properly say that there is a job lot of statues in the District of Columbia. This is a beginning. We are going to get rid of one of them if this joint resolution passe

Mr. NORRIS. In my judgment that is one thing that we ought to consider. I do not profess to be a judge of such matters, and I do not want to set myself up here as a critic; but, President, if we are going to commence this business, will be endless, and our children who follow us will undo the work we have done when the styles change.

Mr. LODGE. The Government has nothing to do with this, Mr. NORRIS. Then, why are we passing a resolution if the Government has nothing to do with it?

Mr. LODGE. It is a gift to the Government.
Mr. GALLINGER. Those who desire to erect the statue must get permission to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; but are we going to give permission to everybody who can afford to erect statues to use the parking spaces of the District of Columbia as they see fit?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; we are going to give permission to erect one statue.

Mr. NORRIS. The statue of Admiral Dupont has been placed there as a representative of the American people; and, even though his relatives and friends are financially able to change the monument that was erected as a memorial to him, as the styles in monuments change from day to day and from year to year, if they want to do that it ought to be done on ground or in parks not owned by the people of the United States. It may be that a new statue ought to be erected, but it does not seem to me that we ought offhand here, without, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] has said, anybody knowing anything about it except the committee, take up the resolution and pass it by unanimous consent. I do not like to object to a resolution of this kind, and yet it seems to me that when that monument was erected it was undoubtedly considered the finest thing out in monuments, but, it seems, like the clothes of the people, as time goes on and styles change monuments are changed, too.

As the Senator has said, there are other statues here of men on horses and men off horses that those versed in art do not like to look at, as they do not seem beautiful to them. that we ought to hesitate before we start in on these things. At least, we ought to be fully informed. A great many of us have passed that monument from day to day for the last 25 years, going to and coming from the House and from the Senate, and it probably never occurred to a large majority of the Representatives and Senators that there is anything wrong with it. There never was anything wrong with it, a Senator says. If there never was anything wrong with it, and there is not anything wrong with it now, then we ought to permit it to remain.

There is another thing that is in this resolution. It provides that the present statue can be erected elsewhere outside of the District of Columbia. If the friends and relatives of Admiral Dupont desire to construct a memorial to him, it seems to me that it would have been much better for us to designate another square, another circle, or park where that could be done and let the present statue remain where it is. For that reason I feel constrained to object to unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not do that. This is a unanimous report of the committee. considered the matter as carefully as it could be considered, and the Fine Arts Commission have also considered it. There can not be anybody harmed by it. I hope the Senator will not make the objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think, if we passed this joint resolution, we are going to embark upon a program of changing all the statues and monuments in the District from time to time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are embarking upon nothing right now except this resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If any other resolution should come before the Library Committee, the committee will consider it upon its merits and it will certainly not report it favorably to the Senate unless upon its merits it thinks it ought to be reported.

There are some monuments here that I would not have torn down; for instance, that celebrated illustration of mechanical ingenuity, the statue of Andrew Jackson in Lafayette Park.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask the Senator about that That is not up to date, is it? That is out of style.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may not be a work of art, but that monument has become a part of American history in such a way that I would not have it torn down any more than I would have torn down that very ugly monument to Lincoln which stands in front of the courthouse in Judiciary Square. This, however, is not a case of that sort at all, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that this is exactly that kind of a case, as I understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; not at all.
Mr. NORRIS. This is an ugly monument, the Senator says, and he wants to take it down because it is ugly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This joint resolution hands the present

Mr. WILLIAMS. This joint resolution hands the present monument back to its donors, who will do what they please with it on some site outside of the District of Columbia, for, of course, we do not want two Dupont memorials in the District. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. If not, I shall be compelled to move that the joint resolution be taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like an opportunity, at least, to look into it a little more, I will say to the Senator, and I think several other Senators feel the same way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I make the point of order that at this time in the proceedings of the Senate a motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order will have to be sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, just a word. I wish to say before we leave this subject that this joint resolution was not only reported favorably by our committee, but a similar resolution was reported favorably by the House Committee on the Library as well. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me make a request of the Senator. As I said in the beginning, I do not want to make an objection to what would be fair, but there are two or three other Senators, at least, who have spoken to me since this matter came up, who have expressed a wish to examine it. Can not the Senator withdraw his report and present it to-morrow, so that in the mean-time we may have an opportunity to consider it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see that I would accomplish any-thing by that, because I can ask unanimous consent for its consideration to-morrow or move its consideration from the cal-

Mr. NORRIS. I will suggest to the Senator that within a day or two there may be no objection.

THE PEACE PROBLEM (S. DOC. NO. 700).

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 335), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] on January 30, 1917, entitled "The Peace Problem," by John Bassett Moore, be printed as a Senate document.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE (S. DOC. NO. 692).

DECISION ON WEBB-KENYON ACT (S. DOC. NO. 699).

Mr. CHILTON. From the Committee on Printing I report back an original resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The resolution (S. Res. 336) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norkis] on January 18, 1917, entitled "The Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on the Webb-Kenyon Liquor-Shipment Act," be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if it would not be well to have some additional copies printed?

Mr. NORRIS. I think perhaps that is a good suggestion.
Mr. CHILTON. I did not hear the Senator's remark. Mr. CHILTON. I did not hear the Senator's remark.
Mr. GALLINGER. I interrogated the Senator from Nebraska as to whether it would not be well to have printed some additional copies of the decision on the Webb-Kenyon law. There is a great demand for it.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from West Virginia if the committee gave any consideration to that phase of the

Mr. CHILTON. I will say that there was some opposition in the committee to printing the matter at all. We finally thought, however, that it was of such importance that it ought to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator from West Virginia if he will not consent to the printing of, say, 10,000 additional

Mr. CHILTON. So far as I am concerned, I would; but— Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests that 5,000 additional copies would be sufficient.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the Senate document room. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add, at the end of the resolution, the following:

And that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. CHILTON. I will accept that amendment, so far as I am concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 339) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandeger] on January 29, 1917, entitled "Memorandum on the History and Scope of the Laws Prohibiting Correspondence with a Foreign Government, and Acceptance of a Commission to Serve a Foreign State in War," by Charles Warren, Assistant Attorney General, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, how many copies does the resolution provide for? What is the rule in that respect?

Mr. CHILTON. I think it is thirteen hundred and some. Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room,

Mr. CHILTON. I accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add: And that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

SOUTH CAROLINA BOLL WEEVIL COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 701).

Mr. CHILTON. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 312, to print the manuscript entitled "Report of the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission, Bulletin No. 30, Clemson Agricultural College, of South Carolina," as a Senate document, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the committee was, in line 4, after the word "document," to strike out "and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 50,000 for the use of the House document room," and insert a period, so as to make the resolution

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Report of the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission, Bulletin No. 30, of Clemson Agricultural College, of South Carolina," be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in relation to this report I desire to state for the RECORD only that I believe it is an unwise step to take to publish reports from the agricultural department of any particular State. Of course, the committee overruled me, and I shall not ask for a vote upon the matter; but I can not see why this report should be printed by the Government, at the expense of the Government, and enter the mails free, any more than the report of any agricultural college in the United States. I am not going to ask for a vote. The committee overruled me; and I simply desire to make this statement for the RECORD.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will say in defense that the committee took the view that it was not the source of the document but the substance of the matter contained therein that should determine whether or not it should be printed as a public document, and upon that ground it was ordered to be reported

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President; the committee did take that position; but I thought that after we had appropriated $800,000 for the eradication of the boll weevil, and had had the Agricultural Department investigating this matter for a quarter of a century or more, they were better judges as to what is necessary to eliminate the boll weevil than any agricultural college in the United States. As long as we are spending nearly $800,000 a year for this purpose I thought it was very unnecessary; but, as I say, Mr. President, that is for the RECORD only.

Mr. CHILTON. May I add this one remark? We have had a number of reports from the Committee on Printing, embrac-ing a great many documents. I want to say to the Senate that the entire cost of all of these documents will not amount to $750. I think we waste more time talking about it than is the expense of having it printed.

Mr. SMQOT. We do not know how many reprints we may

Mr. CHILTON. That is all we have asked for to-day. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. CHILTON. No. Mr. President.

Barle, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

POTOMAC REVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill

(S. 8090) granting the consent of Congress to Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Virginia, with principal place of business in the city of Newport News, State of Virginia, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Riverside, in the county of Charles, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President I will eak if that hill has born.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will ask if that bill has been submitted to the War Department?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has been submitted to the War Department and approved by the department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that with the indulgence of the Senate I shall address the Senate briefly to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business or at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], on the subject of the President's message and the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] on the subject.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

S. 7359. An act authorizing the Delaware Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Nanticoke

River at Seaford, Sussex County, Del.; and

S. 7748. An act to authorize the United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Co., and such other corporation or individuals as may be associated with it, to construct a bridge across the portion of the Delaware River between the mainland of the county of Camden and State of New Jersey, and Petty Island, in said county and State.

PROHIBITION IN ALASKA.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, under date of April 13, 1915, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska submitted to the people of that Territory a proposition as to whether or not they would have prohibition in the Territory. At the election held in November of last year, in a large vote, the majority in favor of prohibition was 3,527, the vote for prohibition being 7,958 and the vote against prohibition 4,431. There is some doubt as to the power of the Legislature of Alaska to carry out that vote. In the House of Representatives a bill has been prepared by the Delegate, after conferring with the governor and the people of Alaska, and it has been considered by the committee and reported with an amendment. The Committee on Territories of the Senate has taken up that bill, and I have here authority from the committee for a favorable report, signed by all the members of the committee except two, and those two members have assured me that they would not, under the circumstances, object to the passage of the measure.

Under these circumstances, I submit the report of the committee and ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7963) to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purpose

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to hear the bill read before giving consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are certain amendments to

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to hear the bill read in full. The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington why it is necessary for Congress to enact legislation upon this subject. Why is it not left to the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska to deal with it?

Mr. JONES. It is considered very doubtful whether under the act of Congress of August 24, 1912, the Legislative Assembly of Alaska have authority to do it. The House committee in its report says:

The act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," contains specified limitations upon the power of the legislature in respect to the control of the liquor traffic, and makes it doubtful if that body has such powers as are sufficient to enable it to deal fully with that subject.

It is on account of that doubt that this legislation is proposed. Mr. SUTHERLAND. The people of Alaska, I understand, have voted upon this proposition and by a large majority determined in favor of prohibition. Of course, the will of the people ought to be carried out, we all agree to that, and I am in favor of any legislation which may be necessary to carry their will into operation. At the same time this is a very long and a somewhat involved bill. It contains a great number of provisions that I think ought to be carefully scrutinized.

I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, and I am not going to object to it, but I wish to call attention to one or two matters in it and ask for an explanation of the Senator in charge of the bill. For example, I find on page 12 of the bill, in section 18, a provision to the effect that in order to convict any person of a violation— Mr. JONES. What section?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Section 18, unless the sections have been renumbered in the report.

Mr. JONES. They have not been, except toward the last.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. That section provides in substance that in order to convict any person of a violation of the act, among others, for selling alcoholic liquors, it shall not be necessary to prove the manufacture, the importing, the selling, and so on, but the evidence shall be sufficient if it shows that the person has kept on hand, stored, deposited, taken orders for, or has offered to sell or barter or exchange them for goods, and so forth—that that shall be sufficient to convict.

I ask the Senator whether he thinks it ought to be a rule of law that a person shall be convicted of selling liquors when the evidence shows that he has done nothing more than offer to sell them? In other words, his offering to sell and his selling are the same thing.

I do not understand that the law makes it an offense for anybody to offer to sell; it makes it an offense to sell, but the bill undertakes to provide that it shall be sufficient evidence of sale to show that he offers to sell.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me if this law should be passed prohibiting these things and prohibiting persons having in their possession intoxicating liquors, except as provided in this act, that ought to be sufficient, and that we ought to have some rule of that kind, because I can not see any excuse for any person offering to sell under this law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know of any case where the law has ever treated an attempt to commit an offense as a commission of the offense itself.

Mr. JONES. I have not examined it, but my understanding is that this is the language of the Idaho law. I do not know whether it has been so construed or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That may be so or not. I notice another thing in the bill, that all houses, boats, boathouses, buildings, and so on, including drug stores where alcohol is stored, vended, and so on, which shall undertake to dispense alcoholic liquors shall be held, taken, and deemed common and public

And upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 1 of this act, and judgment shall be given that such house, boat, building, or other place, or any room therein, be abated or closed up as a place for the sale or keeping of such liquor contrary to law, as the court may determine.

Then it further provides, in section 20:

SEC. 20. That any United States district attorney for the Territory of Alaska may maintain an action in equity in the name of the United States to abate and perpetually enjoin such a nuisance as defined in the preceding section.

Thus far, of course, it is unobjectionable, but it goes on:

The injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action, and no bond shall be required.

So, as I understand it, the bill recognizes that a drug store may be operated, and that under some circumstances intoxicating liquor may be sold by the drug store. A license, I understand, is to be issued by the district judge to drug stores for that purpose, and yet it declares that the district attorney, when he deems that a proprietor of a drug store has been violating the law, may maintain an action to abate and perpetually enjoin the drug store as a nuisance, to which I would not object, but it provides further that that injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action. In other words, an action is brought in which it is charged that the proprietor of a drug store has been violating the law, and, without hearing him upon the matter at all, the court, upon the action being instituted, ipso facto grants an injunction.

Mr. JONES. I am inclined to think that that provision may be stricken out. I had not noticed it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, an injunction ought not to be granted closing up the place as a public nuisance until it has been determined that it is a public nuisance.

Mr. JONES. I would have no objection myself to striking out those lines

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice another provision in section 21:

That if a tenant of a building or tenement is convicted of using such premises or any part thereof or maintaining a common nuisance, as hereinbefore defined, or of knowingly permitting such use by another, the conviction of such use shall render void the lease under which he holds and shall cause the right of possession to revert to the owner or lease or the state of the state of

That is quite proper thus far. If a man occupying premises has been convicted of using the premises in violation of the law, the lease should become void, and the owner of the property should be permitted to take possession. But this provides further that he "may, without process of law, make immediate entry upon the premises." It seems to me that that is rather an unusual provision. I am afraid a provision of that kind would likely lead to breaches of the peace. It may be a case, for example, where a druggist has been convicted. He has a right of appeal, and in the meantime he is undertaking to retain pos sion of the premises until the matter is finally determined in the highest court, yet under the provisions of this law the proprietor may instantly take possession without process of law.

Mr. JONES. What would the Senator suggest?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not thought just how it might be amended. I have not heretofore read the bill, and I have only been able to follow it as it has been read hastily at the desk with the copy I have before me.

Mr. JONES. Of course, I can see how that might bring about some of the conditions to which the Senator has referred, although we have a provision here that declares the lease void. Then the owner ought to have the right to take immediate possession. I do not think the language here would authorize him to violate the law or to cause a disturbance of the peace or anything of that sort; but I think the intention is that he shall have the right to proceed to take possession without having to

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it may be that that provision is all right, but the matter struck me at first blush as being out of the ordinary, and so I called the Senator's attention to it. Then I call his attention to section 28, which further provides:

Sec. 28. That prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act shall be on information filed by any such officer or any private prosecutor before any justice of the peace or district judge, or upon indictment by any grand jury of the Territory of Alaska—

And so on. That seems to allow a private person to file an information against anyone he may see fit. I think usuallythe Senator may know better about that than I-the power to file an information is confined to an officer, to a prosecuting attorney. It seems to me to be very unusual to allow a private individual to file an information. If he has knowledge or information which induces him to believe that the law is being violated, he should report the matter to some prosecuting officer and that prosecuting officer, after hearing his statement and becoming convinced that there is a prima facie case, should file the information.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Utah is correct about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I doubt the wisdom of allowing such a power as that to be vested in the hands of every private individual who may use it for improper purposes

Mr. JONES. I think that is right; and if the bill is considered I would consent to strike out the words "or any private prosecutor."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Merely strike out the words "any private prosecutor.'

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those are the only things I noticed in the hasty reading of the bill which should be amended, except I want to ask the Senator this question: I find that the first section on page 2, the penal clause of the section, provides that upon conviction the person convicted-shall be fined not more than $1,000, or shall be imprisoned in the Federal jail for a period of not more than one year-

And so on. As I understand, the statutes of the United States permit the incarceration of persons convicted of crime in other jails than those maintained under Federal authority. Does the Senator mean to limit the imprisonment to a Federal jail? I do not know what the situation may be in Alaska; but such a provision as this may result in some embarrassment if jails are maintained by the Territory separate and apart from Federal authority. I suggest to the Senator that it would be better to strike out the words "in the Federal jail," because they add nothing to the bill.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If we say a convicted person shall be imprisoned for a period of not more than one year, he may be imprisoned wherever the law allows him to be imprisoned.

I also suggest that the phrase "in the discretion of the court" be stricken out, because the words are meaningless. Those words are found on page 2, at the end of the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, for a short time I desire to reserve the right to object. I do not, however, care to interrupt the present discussion.

Mr. JONES. I did not understand the last suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have merely made this suggestion to the Senator from Washington. It is a matter of no particular consequence, except that it is an unnecessary provision to insert in the discretion of the court." Of course, where a judge is empowered to impose a penalty, within limits his discretion must be exercised.

Mr. JONES. Yes. I do not think those words make any difference.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a matter of taste more than anything else.

I notice that in another provision this bill seems to make it an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment for any person to have possession of any intoxicating liquor. Am I correct about

Mr. JONES. Yes. After a certain date and contrary to the terms of the permit.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. I understand that if the law goes into effect, it will be an offense for any person to have possession of intoxicating liquor; so that if any person going into Alaska for any reason whatever should carry a small quantity of whisky or brandy, he immediately would become subject to the penalties of the law and subject to imprisonment. I want to understand whether I am correct about that.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is correct; that is what the law is called—"a bone-dry law." It is the law which was passed in Oregon and in Idaho, and which very likely will pass in the State of Washington before long.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I confess that I do not like that sort of interference with the liberty of the citizen. I think it is going altogether too far, and I think it is likely, ultimately, to bring these prohibition laws into disrepute. However, that was not what I had in mind in calling the Senator's attention to the matter and ascertaining what the bill provided; but I notice the bill also provides that it shall be an offense for any person to deal any intoxicating lignor in any public place. If it is to drink any intoxicating liquor in any public place. an offense to have in one's possession any quantity of intoxicating liquor, why is it necessary to limit the penal quality of his consuming it to public places?

Mr. JONES. I think the suggestion of the Senator would be good, unless it might be possible for someone to have liquor in his possession under a permit granted pursuant to the terms of this act, and be in a place where he might drink it. Outside of that there would not be any use for that provision. Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator can enlighten me about that, may I ask is there any way by which a person could have in his possession in Alaska, after this law goes into effect, any quantity of intoxicating liquor?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; permits may be granted. Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a provision for pure alcohol to be used for mechanical purposes, and so on; but, as I understand, a person there can not under any circumstances have the slightest quantity of brandy, for example, in his posses-

Mr. JONES. Section 15 goes so far as to cover any intoxicating liquor of any kind. Of course, it does not specify the particular kind that a person might drink in a public place.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is there anything in the action taken by the people of Alaska to indicate that they desire a law so drastic as this?

drastic as this?

Mr. JONES. Well, here is the bill submitted by the Legislature of Alaska to the people of the Territory. It is found in the House report on the subject. As I stated a while ago, the House Committee on Territories took this matter up very carefully and had hearings on it, and our committee has reported the bill just as the House reported it. In that report submitted by the House committee are given the terms of the act passed by the Territorial legislature:

Section 1. That there shall be submitted to the electors of the Territory of Alaska at the next general election held for the purpose of electing members of the legislature of said Territory the question of whether they are or are not in favor of the sale, manufacture, barter, or exchange of intoxicating liquors within said Territory after the 1st day of January, 1918.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was there nothing in the act about the use or possession?

Mr. JONES. No. The language is "sale, manufacture, barter, or exchange."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This proposed law, then, does go beyoud the provisions of the referendum?

Mr. JONES. It may go a little bit further as to terms.

SEC. 2. There shall be printed in large type upon every ticket or ballot prepared for said general election in each division of said Territory the words: "Vote for one"; and the following explanatory note shall be printed on every ballot setting forth the manner of marking the ballot.

Here is the notice to the voters:

Note.—Against the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in Alaska after January 1, 1918, place cross (X) opposite "Dry"—

The word "Dry" is in quotation marks-

In favor of the same, place cross (X) opposite "Wet."

That is the notice that was given to the voters. Of course, the terms of the act of the legislature are not quite so broad as those of this bill

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, the words "Wet" and "Dry" were simply intended to be a shorthand expression of the things that are particularized in the document the Senator has already read.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and yet I do not believe that we could very confidently assume that all the voters had read the terms of the act itself, but they voted according to what they understood the terms "Dry" and "Wet" to signify.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I asked that question, because, as the Senator knows

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—
Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me to finish my statement, I asked that question because the Senator from Washington very well knows there are a variety of prohibition laws in the United States passed under the authority of referendums. In Idaho, for example, the law is exceedingly drastic. It prevents the possession of intoxicating liquors. The people of Idaho evidently want that kind of a law; and, if they want it, they ought to have it. The people of my own State want that kind of a law, and they are going to get it, and they ought to have it if they want it; but there are other States where the people do not desire to go that far, and where it is perfectly people do not desire to go that far, and where it is perfectly manifest that the majority sentiment of the State would not tolerate a law that goes that far. If we are to pass a law to carry out the will of the people of Alaska, we ought to carry out their will, if it can be ascertained; but, so far as that will has been exhibited by the terms of the referendum which the Senator has read, it is that they desire to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and barter of intoxicating liquors—

Mr. JONES. And also the exchange.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But that they do not intend to prohibit the use and possession of intoxicating liquor within the Territorial and the control of the control of the tse and possession of the restaurant of the tory. The whole question is whether we desire to go beyond the expressed desires of the people of Alaska in this legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I can see that this bill goes further than the technical terms of the act submitted to the people of Alaska, but the bill has been prepared after very careful consideration with the Delegate from Alaska, with Gov. Strong, of Alaska, and with members of the Alaskan Legislature. It meets with their approval; and, so far as I know, there have come no pro-tests from anybody in Alaska against the terms of this proposed law. I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have been trying for some time to inquire of the Senator whether or not the Legislature of Alaska has passed a prohibition bill pursuant to the referendum to which he has referred?

Mr. JONES. No; the Legislature of Alaska that was elected last fall, I think, has not yet met. I do not know whether or not the Senator was in the Chamber when the matter was dis-cussed, but there is very grave doubt as to whether the Legis-lature of Alaska has authority to deal with this matter under the act of Congress providing for the legislative assembly.

Mr. ROBINSON. In any event, the Legislature of Alaska has not passed or attempted to pass a prohibition bill for Alaska?

No; it has not had time to meet.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the general subject has been referred to the people of Alaska and voted upon and approved?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and the vote was nearly two to Mr. JONES. Yes; and the vote was nearly two to one.

Mr. ROBINSON. I heard in part the reading of the notice the Senator says was printed upon the ballot. In a general way that merely submitted the question of prohibition to the people of Alaska and was approved by them. If this measure is passed by Congress, it does not contemplate subsequent action by the Alaskan Legislature?

Mr. JONES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is the most drastic and arbitrary proposition that could be very well conceived, and I can not see in the indorsement that the Senator reads from Alaska any authority to pass a bill of this character. The notice that the people of Alaska voted on did not contemplate that a man should not give or should not have in his possession alcohol for his own purposes. if he chose to have it.

Mr. JONES. It contemplates that he should not give. I think that is certain.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It does not say so. Mr. JONES. It says "exchange." The Territorial act says:

The question of whether they are or are not in favor of the sale, manufacture, barter, or exchange of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, a man might exchange liquor without selling it; but I think this a most arbitrary measure. I am opposed to the principle of prohibition wherever it may be invoked. I insist that it has accomplished no good, and I believe it will accomplish no good in Alaska. I think the committee have gone far beyond their authority in indorsing this wholesale proposition.

Before this bill shall become a law for Alaska, it seems to me that there should be a provision for a referendum of the people there. I insist that the vote that was cast in Alaska was in nowise a referendum on the subject of "bone-dry" prohibition. If the people of Alaska want it, let them have it; but I shall insist that there shall be a proviso in these words:

Provided, That this act shall become operative only when ratified by the legal voters of the Territory of Alaska.

I offer that as an amendment.

It seems to me that interference with the rights of personal liberty is going to a degree beyond reason. I do not believe that the citizens of Alaska contemplated that a man would commit a crime by having in his possession alcohol for his own purposes or by giving it away if the recipient might want it and he should be willing to hand it to him. It is a step too drastic and too un-American for me to stomach under any consideration.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course, I knew the attitude of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I appreciate it, and I know that he is sincere and earnest in it-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am earnest in it.

Mr. JONES. Just as much so as I am in my attitude. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I told the Senator yesterday that I would not object to the consideration of the bill. The bill is here for consideration, I believe legitimately and properly, but I trust the Senate will not give its sanction or indorsement to such an un-American, unreasonable, unfair, and unjust proposition as is contained in this bill. If this principle is correct, then carry it to every other Territory; carry it to the islands of Hawali and elsewhere; but I believe that it would be a misfortune for the people thereof and a step backward for the United States The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in favor of this question being settled by the people of each State and District. If the people of Alaska want to make it a crime for a citizen of that Territory to have in his possession or to drink alcoholic liquors, I think that is a question for the people there to determine; but, as I understand, that question has not been determined by the people of Alaska. Now, I should like to know whether the Senator from Washington is willing to make this bill conform to what the people of Alaska actually voted on?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say that it is not entirely clear even to my mind that the people did not vote upon the proposition contained in this bill. Of course, I concede that the bill in its first section goes a little further than the terms of the act of the legislature, and yet when the legislature provided that on the ballot there should simply be printed the words "wet" and "dry," there might be a broader significance placed upon those words than upon the first section of the bill.

I wish to repeat what I said a moment ago, that the Delegate from Alaska, who represents those people so far as they have representation in Congress, as a matter of fact prepared this bill in conjunction with the governor and members of the Alaska Legislature, and they are satisfied with it; in fact, they want it; and I take it that that, together with the expression of the people, ought to be sufficient warrant for us to go even so far as this bill does. Of course, rather than have no legislation at all, I would be willing to have the bill amended in a reasonable way, if the Senator thinks it is absolutely necessary to amend it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that my objection to the bill is not captious. I have very confirmed views of my own on these questions, and I think those views are right. They may be wrong, but I think they are right. My own view is that these problems must be worked out by the people to accomplish any result; and I am perfectly willing to submit to that gauge.

If the people of Alaska have asked for legislation of this kind, I am willing to go so far as having the Congress of the United States confirm their wish, although I recognize that that is not exactly in conformity with my view. Of course, an objection will kill the bill at this stage of the proceedings. If, by an objection, this bill is killed, the Legislature of Alaska will enact a law; and then if that law is not satisfactory to the people of Alaska they can repeal it.

Now, I have no doubt that the Legislature of Alaska can enact part of this law. They can prohibit the sale of liquor in Alaska. It may be doubtful as to whether they could enact the commerce features of the bill. I realize that, and perhaps only the Congress of the United States could do that; but the commerce features of the bill help to enforce the law, and I am not going to object for that reason. The Senator realizes, however, that if this matter is sent to the Legislature of Alaska, and the people of Alaska change their minds, it will not be so difficult for them to repeal the law. If we pass it in the Congress of the United States, it will be there forever, practically, because they can not come down here and get it repealed, and because then it will stand for repeal as it stands to-day for its enactment; it will practically take unanimous consent to get it through.

I merely want to voice the wishes of these people. I think the law is more drastic than the Legislature of Alaska could pass for them, but I have not any objection to the law being drastic if that is the will of those people. As I understand, this is a "bone-dry" bill. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you are going to have prohibition, I think that is the way you should prohibit. I believe you should either have prohibition or you should not. I do not believe in "blind tigers" and subterfuges.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest to the Senator that I think a great many of the people who actually voted with the words "wet" and "dry" had that in mind, too.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I realize that; but now let me submit this to the Senator's view: There are serious penalties in this law. I do not know where we have ever gone in the history of lawmaking of the world toward controlling men's personal appetites by law where it did not interfere with some one else. The law is going a long way when you step in and say what a man shall drink and what he shall eat and say that it shall be a crime if he does not conform to the law.

The extent to which legislation has gone heretofore, as I understand it, has been that when the abuse of a man's personal appetites involved the peace and dignity of the neighborhood and the rights of his fellow citizens, then the law checked it. For instance, if a man got drunk they sent him to jail. Now, it is not against my view at all to make this bill effective. If you are going to have a prohibition bill, make it as drastic as you wish, because I do not believe in having a subterfuge. If you are going to let men drink liquor, regulate it, and regulate it properly. If you are going to have prohibition, stop it entirely. But I do think that you are going a long way, and a dangerous way, when you prescribe that the man who takes a drink of liquor shall be guilty of a crime subject to heavy fine and long imprisonment. It may be a reflection on his character for years to come.

Maybe the Delegate has agreed to it; maybe the governor has agreed to it; but do the people of that district realize that a boy f good character who may be in Alaska may be guilty of violating this law, and he will have to carry with him for the balance of his life the brand of having gone to prison for one small

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator does not overlook the fact that the penalty is not more than $1,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that, and I think the Senator is to be congratulated on that, because that is a better provision in this bill than in many of the bills I have seen, because you leave it discretionary with the judge.

Mr. JONES. And the imprisonment is not more than a year. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand.

Mr. JONES. It may be one or the other, and the judge may only fine him $1, and no doubt he will take into account all of these things that the Senator suggests.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But you may have a judge who will look upon these questions without leniency, and I think the Senator is going a long way when he seeks to make a personal habit a crime. So far as I am concerned, I will say this: I do not know whether anybody else desires to object or not. I have not heard of any Senator who does. If the Senator will have not heard of any Senator who does. strike out that provision in his bill, so far as I am concerned, he can pass it before 1 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. Which provision is that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The one that makes it a crime for a man to take a drink himself and applies it to the person. I do not remember exactly where it is in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Of course the general framework of the bill is on the drastic lines that have been referred to, and I do not know where we could put on an amendment that would meet just what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not recall the place.

Mr. JONES. The bill is framed upon those drastic lines. The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 17.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the drastic lines, so far as the barter and sale is concerned, or the shipment of the liquor. If we are going to have it, have it drastic; but I do think you are going too far. I agree to this because the people of Alaska have agreed to it. I would not have agreed to it without their having had a chance to pass on it themselves, but they have passed on it. They have agreed to it, and their will should be carried out, but I do not think we should carry out anything more than their will in this matter.

Mr. JONES. Would this meet the idea of the Senator? On the first page of the bill it provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, company, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, to manufacture, sell, give, or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor or alcohol of any kind in the Territory of Alaska, or to have in his or its possession.

Would it meet the views of the Senator to strike out the words "or to have in his or its possession"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to his prohibiting people from having liquor in their possession; but, as I understand this bill, you prohibit them from drinking.

Mr. ROBINSON. In a public place.

Mr. JONES. In a public place. Mr. ROBINSON. That is section 15.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is, in a public place.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, any place may be a public place.

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A room in a hotel has been held to be public place under the gambling statutes.

Mr. JONES. The bill prescribes what a public place is, Mr. ROBINSON. And it also includes some specifications, as

Or in or upon any passenger coach, street car, boat, or in or upon any other vehicle commonly used for the transportation of passengers, or in or about any depot, platform, or waiting room—

And so forth.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Suppose it were his own vehicle. Suppose it were his own private conveyance. He would have no right-

Mr. ROBINSON. It would not apply unless it were used for the transportation of passengers.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, it might have been used for the transportation of passengers and yet be his own private vehicle. Mr. ROBINSON. Then he would be prohibited from taking a drink in it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That would be a most arbitrary and drastic and un-American proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would not have to be in a public place. The Senator from New Jersey is right, I think, in his construction of it. The provisions are in the alternative. The first provision is-

That any person who shall in any public place . . drink-

Shall be subject to the penalty.

Then the next provision is in the alternative:

Or in or about any depot, platform-

And so forth.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but that is "upon any passenger coach, street car," and so forth.

Mr. ROBINSON. "Or upon any other vehicle commonly used for the transportation of passengers "-a carriage, a taxicab, or anything of that kind.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It would apply to a man's own phaeton.

Mr. ROBINSON. A taxicab, carriage, or anything else used for the transportation of passengers, would come within the prohibition.

Mr. JONES. The use by a man of his own carriage, however, for his own family purposes would not come within the prohibition.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; but if he used a taxicab for the transportation of passengers he could not drink in the taxicab, even if there were no passengers there.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course not, under this w. I can not believe it possible that that could pass the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to that feature of the bill which prohibits people from drinking in a public conveyance; but, as I say, a hotel has been construed in this country—I do not know how it would be in Alaska—to be a public place. Your private room in a hotel is construed to be a public place and has been held so under the gambling law. A man might take a drink of liquor in his own private room in a hotel and be guilty of an offense m his own private room in a note; and be guilty of an offense which would send him to jail.

Now, I think that is further than these people want to go. I do not want to interfere with the bill. I see that it is approaching the hour of 1 o'clock. The people of Alaska have voted for it. I am willing to take the Senator's word, if he will agree with me that that part of the bill will be modified so that the personal use will not be made a crime. In other words, if you will make your bill live up to what the people have declared for I will not make any objection. have declared for, I will not make any objection.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But, Mr. President, they did not vote for this bill. Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Well, I know.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They voted for certain features, but not for this drastic bill. There would be quite a different result, I apprehend, if this bill were submitted to the people of Alaska.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the people of Alaska have voted.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Not on this bill.
Mr. JONES. Not upon the particular terms of this bill; of course not. You never would submit this bill in its terms to the people of Alaska, and if you had a ballot you would not have the property of the property of the people. it printed; you would simply have certain questions. They have voted on the questions of "wet" and "dry." They have voted, 2 to 1, "dry." This bill has been prepared by the Delegate from Alaska, who represents those people and is responsible to them; and it is approved by the governor and by members of the legislature. It does seem to me that we are going a long way in finding means by which we can justify an objection, or a vote against it, on the ground that the people of Alaska are not for it. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the Legislature of Alaska, elected by the people of Alaska, who passed upon this referendum, could interpret the will of the people of that Territory better than Congress, sitting here in Washington?

Mr. JONES. Of course, the individual members there would no doubt know better the sentiments around generally among the people than we do. I think that is true. But I do think also that they probably would not know it any better than the Delegate from Alaska, who has just been through the campaign Delegate from Alaska, who has just been through the campaign and throughout the Territory, and who knows the sentiments of the people pretty well, and who has been representing them for a great many years. Of course, that is the opinion of one man, and it may not be as good, of course, as the opinion of different members of the legislature. I admit that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. President, has unanimous consent heavy detailed for the consideration of the hills.

been obtained for the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. Mr. LIPPITT, Mr. President, do I understand that this bill has been approved by the Legislature of Alaska?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Rhode Island was not in the Chamber when I made my statement on that point. I have here a copy of the legislative act submitting the question of prohibition to the people of Alaska, and they voted upon the proposition, there being the words "wet" and "dry" on the ballot, and they voted "dry." Of course, that act has not been submitted to the Legislature of Alaska. The Legislature of Alaska has not

Mr. LIPPITT. Did I not understand the Senator to say that it had been approved by the governor of Alaska and the Delegate from Alaska?

Mr. JONES. Yes. Mr. LIPPITT. And individual members of the legislature? Mr. JONES. And individual members of the legislature.

Mr. LIPPITT. That is, it is a bill that has had the general approval of the authorities in and around Alaska?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I think the Senator is laboring under a mistake. This bill did not have the approval of the governor of Alaska.

Mr. JONES. This bill has been framed in conjunction or consultation with the governor of Alaska.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Have the governor of Alaska and these various commissioners indorsed it?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that he has seen the actual written bill; but he knows the terms of the bill. He knows that it prohibits personal use and all that sort of thing, and he ap-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. How do these men know that the people of Alaska approve this bill?

Mr. JONES. Well, they know it in the same way that the Senator knows the sentiments of the people of his State.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I only know that by the result of their vote on the referendum. They only know that the people of Alaska indorsed that proposition, which is widely different from this. The Senator himself admits that this is infinitely more drastic.

Mr. JONES. No; I do not admit that. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, the Senator said so. Mr. JONES. Not infinitely more drastic; not very widely. It is a little more drastic; yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to put any words in the Senator's mouth. He has troubles enough to answer for.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he will agree to amend his bill by striking out, on page 9, in lines 17 and 18, the words "who shall in any public place or," and let it read:

That any person in or upon any passenger coach, street car "-

And so forth. If he will strike those words out of the bill, and agree that they shall stay out in conference—

Mr. JONES. "That any person who shall"—then strike out in any public place"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. JONES. So that it will read:

That any person who shall, in or upon any passenger coach?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not "in or upon any passenger coach." I am not objecting to the use of those words.
Mr. JONES. What are the words? Oh, the words "in any oach. I all lot objecting to a constant of the words?

Mr. JONES. What are the words?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. JONES. So that it will read:

That any person who shall, in or upon any passenger coach?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. As I understand, that is the only place where it refers to personal use, is it not? Is there any other provision in the bill as to personal use?

Mr. JONES. In the first section it prohibits any person from having liquor in his possession unless he has a permit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to that.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I will agree to strike out those words. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator agree to strike them out and stand with it in conference?

Mr. JONES. I will stand with it as far as I can, Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I have no objection to make, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator accept my amendment or proviso— Mr. JONES. No; I can not accept it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (reading)-

Provided, however, That this bill shall become operative only when ratified by the legal voters of the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. JONES. No; I can not accept that. If the Senate should vote it on, of course, it would be a part of the bill, but I can not accept it myself.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then the Senator refuses to give the people of Alaska the opportunity to vote on this proposition?

Mr. JONES. I am trying to carry out the vote of the people of Alaska

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not think the Senator is.

I think he is trying to negative it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Territories with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 5, after the word "alcohol," to insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 5, after the word "liquors," to strike out all down to and including the word "beverages," on line 8, and to insert "including all alcoholic compounds classed by the United States Internal-Revenue Bureau as compound liquors."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all of section 30, as follows:

SEC. 30. That for the purposes of supplying any deficiency in the revenues of the Territory of Alaska by reason of the loss of moneys from licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be expended solely for the establishment and maintenance of public schools in Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the authority now having the disposition of the "Alaska fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 9, in lines 17 and 18, the words "in any public place or," so as to read: Sec. 15. That any person who shall, in or upon any passenger coach, street car, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. JONES. On page 2, line 6, before the words "per cent,"
I move to insert the word "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes

Mr. JONES. I think we can finish this bill in three or four minutes. I ask the Senator from Montana if he will consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business for that purpose? Mr. MYERS. If it will take only 3 or 4 minutes, or even if it will take 15 or 20 minutes, I would not object.

Mr. JONES. The Senator can call up the unfinished business at any time, if it takes longer than we expect. I think it will not, however.

Mr. MYERS. I want some limit of time. Would the Senator be willing to ask unanimous consent to proceed with the bill for not exceeding 30 minutes?

Mr. JONES. Of course, I realize that the Senator can take my bill off the floor at any time he sees fit.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator makes the request that the Senate shall consider the bill not exceeding 30 minutes, or so much thereof as may be necessary, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES. I will make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside for not exceeding 30 minutes. The next amendment, suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "in the Federal jail."

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Secretary. On page 2, lines 18 and 19, after the word "imprisonment," strike out the words "in the discretion of the court."

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. There is another amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 14 the words "the injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action" be stricken out.

Mr. JONES. Yes; in lines 1, 2, and 3:

The injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action, and no bond shall be required.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to the provision for a hond

The Secretary. Page 14, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words: The injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action, and no bond shall be required.

Mr. JONES. The words "no bond shall be required" are to be left in, beginning the word "no" with a capital letter.

The Secretary. Strike out the words "The injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action and," and begin the word "no" with a capital.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I think in line 15 the Senator suggested an amendment. Would the Senator insist on that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not insist upon it. I called the Senator's attention to the words "without process of law" in line 15. It strikes me as being an unusual position.

Mr. JONES. I do not believe it will bring the difficulty the Senator suggested. I prefer to leave it in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 16, line 16, I move to strike out the words "or any private prosecutor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Mar-TINE] wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I offer a proviso to come in at the end of line 4, on page 18.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proviso will be read.

The Secretary. At the end of line 4, page 18, insert:

Provided, however, That this act shall become operative only when ratified by the legal voters of the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senate will not add that proviso to the bill. The bill is intended, I take it, to carry out the vote already had in the Territory. I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust, in contradiction with the Senator's statement, that the act may be ratified by a vote of the people. I think it would be a very serious reflection upon the intelligence and integrity of this great body to refuse the people of Alaska an opportunity to vote on a question that affects them so directly in their personal liberty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to strike out section 34 of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof the proviso I send to the desk. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out the last section of the bill and to insert:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect until approved by the Legislature of Alaska.

Mr. JONES. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business

The Senate, as in Committe of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the unfinished business for 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make a point of order that the motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled some seven times in two days that a bill can not be made the unfinished business by a motion.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in relation to this motion-The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no motion.

Mr. LANE. This request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order that you can not make a bill the unfinished business except by the state of business

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then I desire to move that House bill 9533, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," be made a special order for to-night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that that would do no good whatever, because if the motion carries, to-night when the unfinished business is laid before the Senate I shall object to laying it aside.

I wish to state to the Senator why I take that position. To-day there is no appropriation bill to be placed before the Senate, and yet some Senators are advocating night sessions in order to complete certain legislation before adjournment. doubt but that we can pass all necessary legislation during this session if the appropriation bills will be kept before the Senate for consideration and not force consideration of bills that we know will not become law. There is no necessity to hold night sessions at this time for the consideration of the Porto Rican bill, and I do not know how long it will take to pass the waterpower bill, but even if the water-power bill passes, I do not believe it will become a law at this session.

I have no doubt that the Senator from Colorado can get a vote during a day session to take up the Porto Rican bill, because I believe a majority of the Senate want to have it passed, and I think if he would make the motion now it would carry. But be that as it may, I want to say to the Senator that when the unfinished business is laid before the Senate to-night, if we hold a night session, I shall object to

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to proceed with the Porto Rican bill now, and I would prefer to do it; but I have gotten the consent of the Senator from Montana several times and I do not feel like interfering with the unfinished business. If the Senator from Montana, with his consent, would let me proceed to-night,

I would be very glad to proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. I say to the Senator from Montana I have no doubt but that we could pass the Porto Rican bill before the close of the session to-day and get it out of the way. I shall not make the motion, but in order to hasten the legislation that will pass this body, I think the proper course would be to lay the water-power bill aside and take up the Porto Rican bill at this time.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to oblige the Senator from Colorado, but the fact is we had a session here last night on the Porto Rican bill at which there were about six present; and the bill was a jumble, apparently, of contradictions which had to be corrected, and we practically wasted our time. If we are going to hold a night session of the Senate I am willing to stay here, if other Senators will come and stay; but if they do not I am not going to come to listen to a lot of explanations which do not explain. Last night nearly everyone went away, "Some to the rising sun, and some to the setting moon," it may be; but at any rate they did not stay here. I think the Senator had better perfect his bill and let us work at it in the daytime. I do not propose to stay here at night when there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to proceed with the bill, and if the Senator from Montana will give me leave, I would be glad to move that it be taken up for consideration now.

Mr. MYERS. I would not want to displace the unfinished business by a motion to take it up.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can we not temporarily lay aside the unfinished business?

Mr. MYERS. I would like to accommodate the Senator, but the water-power bill has been the unfinished business now for about three weeks, and in that length of time it has not been debated more than one day. It has had to give way to appropriation bills for the last three weeks and is liable to give way at any time to other appropriation bills, and unless we dispose of it sooner or later the Senate will get tired of drifting the bill along in this way and displace it with some other bill. I should like to have it debated a day or two, or two or three days, and try to bring it to a vote and get it out of the way, and then take up other measures seriatum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, if I have the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted to express my solicitude in reference to the legislative program that is before us, and especially about the legislative program that we read about in the newspapers. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if there has been a failure to agree upon a program of legislation both in the Democratic caucus and on the part of the steering committee of the Democratic Party?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] can tell you. I am not a member of the steering committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is a member of the caucus, I suppose. As the newspapers relate it, I have no other information, not having been admitted to that inner circle, the Democratic caucus has taken up this question of a legislative program, and I should like to know if there is a failure both on the part of the caucus and the steering committee to give us information as to what we may expect to have for consideration during the remaining few weeks of the session.

Mr. KERN. I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from New Hampshire will not catechize us on every newspaper rumor that is printed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We want something authoritative.

Mr. KERN. I violate no confidence, however, when I say that the steering committee agreed on a program which was submitted to the conference; the conference referred it back to the steering committee; and there it rests.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very lucid explanation. I now know where the legislative program is, which I did not know before. I thank the Senator for giving me that information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to know if the steering committee is now at the helm. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the anxiety of the Senator from Mr. ROBINSON. I nope the anxiety of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Connecticut may be speedily relieved, Mr. President. Mr. GALLINGER. Thank you. Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator from Montana to say that he is willing to lay the unfinished business aside for the consideration of the Porto Rican bill.

Mr. MYERS. No; I am not. I was explaining why I am not willing. I prefer to have the bill kept before the Senate for the next two or three days, if it is necessary to consider it so long and an appropriation bill does not interfere, and let us see if we can not get a vote on it and get it out of the way.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Montana insists upon considering the bill now?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I am insisting upon it, Mr. President. Mr. VARDAMAN. I submit, Mr. President, that this bill ought to be disposed of. It has been before the Senate a long The debate has been exhaustive-really, I do not see how anything new can be said on either side of the question. It strikes me that the last word has been spoken. Now, if the Senate is going to consider it with a view of passing it at this session, let us proceed with it at once. If that can not be done, in order to use the few precious moments left before the final adjournment in March, I would suggest that we take up the Porto Rican bill and get that out of the way. I hardly think there will be much opposition to the Porto Rican bill. It does seem to me very imprudent and unwise for the Senate to be hesitating, dillydallying, over a matter when there are so many bills of vital importance to the American people that should be considered. Let us do something, and do it now, that

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me, that is just the reason why I want to have the bill considered now. Some day, before very long, some Senator may move to take up some other bill, and the motion may prevail and displace this bill as the unfinished business

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is the unfinished business now and is before the Senate. It does not require a vote to take it up. I hope the Senate will pardon me for any manifestation of impatience, but I am so much interested in the flood-control bill, which must be passed at this session or the interests of my people will sadly suffer, that any unnecessary delay fills me with alarm.

It is before the Senate. Mr. MYERS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he thinks it possible to secure a unanimous-consent agreement to have a vote on the water-power bill some day in the future?

Mr. MYERS. I would be glad to have that done. I do not know whether it is possible or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I can settle that very quickly. It will not be

Mr. ROBINSON. I am very much surprised at the statement of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I see from the smile upon the Senator's face that he is surprised.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Utah expressed a few moments ago great solicitude that the water-power bill should be disposed of, or at least that it should be kept before the Senate, and in view of that fact I thought he would consent to an agreement about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator misunderstood me.
Mr. VARDAMAN. I call for the regular order.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Works in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to make the Porto Rican bill the special order for 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. GALLINGER, Is that a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I make that motion. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. So that there may be no misunderstanding about it, the Senator from Utah is going to object. Not only that, the Senator from Utah will insist that the unfinished business be kept before the Senate to-night if the Senate holds a There is no necessity at present for holding a night I want it understood that no matter what bill is before the Senate, if a night session is forced at this time I shall insist that there shall be a quorum present, and not like last evening when there were about seven or eight Senators present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he will agree to let me change the motion so as to have a session to-morrow night?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I would not agree to that. If it was necessary to hold night sessions to get through with a legislative program I would not object, but up to the present time it is unnecessary to hold night sessions, as we are unable to report the appropriation bills to the Senate for consideration. I do not propose to have night sessions if I can prevent them until they become necessary to pass bills that have a chance of becoming law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why can not we take up the water-power bill and vote upon it this morning?

Mr. SMOOT. We can not vote upon it because a good many Senators want to speak upon it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the Senators who want to speak be heard, and let us proceed with it. Let us do something, and not consume the whole morning in discussing a question of order. The time is limited, and much remains to be done. Profitless and impertinent discussion is almost a criminal prodigality of precious time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to make the Porto Rican bill a special order for this evening at 8 o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the

Mr. OVERMAN. My colleague [Mr. Simmons] is detained at home on account of illness. I will let this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHAFROTH obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to say to the Senator having charge of the bill that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. Smith] has offered a substitute for this measure, which I have promised to move at the appropriate time, and when the Senate is ready to vote I assume the Senator is familiar with the nature of the substitute of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MYERS. No; I am not.

Mr. THOMAS. It provides for a transfer of the power sites to the State. I thought it was right that I should give notice to the Senator of my purpose in regard to that subject.

Mr. MYERS. I am very glad the Senator did. I thank him.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, as I believe it will be agreeable to the Senator from Colorado, and I am sure it will commend itself to the good sense of the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive busi-

I now move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Wednesday, January 31, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in Heaven, Creator, Upholder, and Sustainer of all, create within us clean hearts and renew a right spirit within us; that we may pass through the ordeals of this day untouched by the blighting influences of sin, that our work may be acceptable unto Thee. In the name and spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Following is the statement referred to:

LEADS WORLD IN TRADE—UNITED STATES NOW FIRST, BOTH AS BUYER AND SELLER—NEARLY $8,000,000,000 THE TOTAL FOR 1916, OR ABOUT $2,000,000,000 AHEAD OF 1915.

$2,000,000,000 AHEAD OF 1915.

The United States has taken the lead as the world's greatest buyer and seller, final statistics of last year's foreign commerce announced yesterday by the Department of Commerce showing the new world trade record as $7,873,000,000. December's exports amounted to $521,-000,000, the largest month on record. Indications are that 1917 might even surpass the enormous foreign business of last year.

Exports amounted to $5,481,000,000 and imports aggregated $2,392,-000,000. Exports showed a gain of $1,926,000,000 over 1915 and imports increased $613,000,000.

The balance of trade was $3,089,000,000 in favor of the United States, compared with $1,776,000,000 in 1915.

The net inward gold movement was $530,000,000, another record, comparing with $421,000,000 in 1915. The gold imports amounted to $686,000,000, compared with $415,000,000 in 1915. The gold exports were $156,000,000, compared with $31,000,000 in 1915 and $223,000,000 in 1914.

The December gold exports were $158,000,000, a very high new record, the exports being $28,000,000.

REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 20573, Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20573, the revenue bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20573. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement this morning to correct a statement that I made yesterday. When questioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wm. Elza Williams], I stated that the amount of revenue that would have been collected under the Payne rate, if we had had the same amount of imports during the life of the Underwood tariff law thus far, would be about $600,000,000. It would not be that amount. I have the exact figures. It would be $506,000,000. But it must be remembered that under the Underwood law the Payne rates of duty were collected on wool for two months, on woolen goods for three months, and on sugar for five months. Taking those items from the amount collected under the Underwood tariff law, it would make in round numbers $520,000,000 more than has been collected.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I suffer a

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I suffer a great embarrassment this morning in undertaking to address the House upon this very important and extraordinary revenue measure. I came into the House yesterday morning to learn what it was all about, having, as a member of the minority of the committee, not much opportunity to ascertain the views of the majority with respect to the real purposes of the bill. In common with my fellow members of the minority I relied upon the chairman of the committee to explain fully what the bill meant and the necessity for it. The chairman of the committee made a remarkable speech. It was the finest piece of oral pirouetting we have seen on the floor of this House for at least a decade, and it was attuned to a situation that was mournful enough, in view of the fact that the gentle man from North Carolina admitted in the course of his remarks that in all things he was not in harmony with the great leader of his party. It seemed to me that if, as a member of the minority, I could gather information from that speech, it would be valuable in any attempt this morning to answer; but I have looked in the Congressional Record for that speech in vain. The only reference to it is a two-line notice which says:

Mr. KITCHIN addressed the committee. His remarks will appear hereafter.

I fell back upon my other distinguished fellow member of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], hoping to obtain some inspiration or some material from him that might qualify me, as a member of the minority, properly to size up this situation and vote for the bill if he could convince me that the bill was right. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] was very deliberate in presenting his array of facts and figures, but they were so numerous that, failing to take notes of them, I fell back again upon the custom of some of us in this House, of looking up the speech in the RECORD this morning in order that I might investigate the facts, and if I found them accurate, vote intelligently for or against this measure. But, lo and behold, on examining the Record this morning I find the situation as to Mr. RAINEY very much as it is with respect to the leader of the majority, the gentleman from North Carolina. The RECORD simply indicates that-

Mr. Rainey addressed the committee. His remarks will appear here after.

Now, having no real information as to the necessity for the introduction of a bill that proposes to levy more than $400,000,000 additional taxes upon the people of the United States, just $4 a head for every man, woman, and child in the land, I had hoped we might have these explanations and speeches in the Record this morning, but they are not there.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does not the Record also show that the speeches of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Sloan], both members of the Ways and Means Committee, are withheld?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true, but I was familiar with those speeches. [Laughter.] I understand the policy of this side of the House, but I could not understand the gyrations and variations of belief as they were put to us yesterday by the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentieman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. May we not be excused for following the fashion so well set by the two leaders on the Democratic side?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes, surely; but I think it would be very difficult to follow them when their speeches were mostly motion, and when the motion does not appear in the Record. I think we can safely say to our distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] that his speech does not appear because he had no particular desire to have it appear just now. We did not get his bill in time to go over it very carefully, and his speech was our sole reliance before we vote this afternoon. Hence it would be highly inexpedient, from the viewpoint of the majority, to have their views thoroughly understood by the minority before the time for voting comes.

We will have no chance to-day, my brethren, to go over the facts, figures, and arguments as they were presented by the distinguished gentlemen who were the heavy spokesmen for this revenue legislation.

Perhaps my friend from North Carolina has no particular heart in this business. Perhaps he has no desire to tax the people of this land. In his brilliant word picture of yesterday the gentleman referred to the "avarice of a few," to grinding corporations, and so forth; not forgetting "the poor working girls" for whom he pleaded, but I question whether he was altogether in earnest about it. He was following the beaten Democratic path and doing the best he could to support a President and a policy with which he does not at heart agree. In this he is like many other of our Democratic friends.

When they were berating the industries of this country in 1911, they had no notion that they would ever be up against a situation such as this. They believed, because they had been convincing themselves for 16 years, that if they could over-throw the Republican protective tariff system and get the offices, they would be able to take care of the exchequer of the Nation. They had no thought that their losses would ever exceed the $100,000,000 that they conceded would be lost on the tariff. They believed they could make that up by an income tax. In all this they find they have failed. They found that the income tax which was to make good the $100,000,000 loss of customs revenue was utterly inadequate, and so they had to increase it.

But my sympathy goes out to the gentleman from North Carolina, whose speech we heard yesterday but which we do not find in the Record this morning. He has been the most un-fortunate of all the floor leaders of this House within the knowledge of any sitting Member. He has occupied a position more trying than that of any one of his Democratic predecessors, from Champ Clark down. He has become what he least expected he would become—the great deficiency leader of the Congress of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] He has brought in no bill here of consequence that has not had linked with it the question, "Where shall we find the money? His whole position, unhappy in the extreme, has been like unto that of the general who never won a victory, whose report to the commander in chief constantly read, "I regret to say." There has been no hope for the gentleman from North Carolina. He has differed with his President. He has differed with his party policy, but still he has been obliged, in order that the wild horses upon the other side might be held together, to come in and say, "You, the people of the United States, trusted us, but I regret to say we have got to tax you just a little more." First, it was the $100,000,000 that were taken away from the customs and put directly upon the backs of the people. Then it was another $100,000,000, because the first $100,000,000 was not sufficient, and that second $100,000,000 involved the imposition not only of an income tax upon a few of the people but it involved a direct tax upon all the people in the form of stamp duties levied upon the consumers of the land. Then came a complete reversal of policy, in which the gentleman from North Carolina had no heart; he had to go back on the Democratic attitude upon the sugar tariff. It was a complete reversal of front, and at the instance of the President of the United States. The gentleman was obliged to bring in a sugar-tariff law, and he did it in the old familiar way: "I regret to say it, but we have not enough money under an income tax twice imposed, with a stamp tax included. I regret to say that we still have not the money to make good our promises, and we will have to revoke, repeal, and go back upon our time-honored policy. do not believe in a tariff on sugar, but, dear people, we are obliged to tax it to avoid a deficiency."

Oh, the gentleman from North Carolina yesterday spoke of the "avarice" of the men of industry, the men who toil, the men who have produced something in this land. It sounded like the old times prior to 1912. In his final appeal to the cohorts on the other side, he begged them to stand together as a man, lest the Republican avalanche, favoring a protective-tariff system, should sweep over this body once again. I want you to remember his peroration, for with fervid eloquence, almost breathless, appealing to his side, he said in substance: "Be on your guard, Democrats, lest these Republicans again come into power and adopt a protective-tariff system." The gentleman remembers the Democratic platform at St. Louis last year, and, believing in a freetrade policy, is on his guard against the tariff-commission wedge now incorporated in the platform along with the Underwood tariff law.

He complained also of "compensatory duties," which he held to be anothema, and yet the gentleman from North Carolina, when it came to the Virginia peanut in the Underwood tariff law, stood by the peanut. I commend him for it. He was in favor of the peanut grown in Virginia and North Carolina because the Japanese peanut, coming thousands of miles over the sea and 2,000 miles over land, could be sold in Chicago cheaper than the Virginia peanut could be sold there. The gentleman stood for a tariff on citrus fruits. That was all right, because citrus fruits grow down in Florida, and they want them protected against foreign competition.

When it came to the Angora goat of Texas, oh, how the gentleman stood for compensatory duties! I have the Underwood tariff law in my hand, and I read from page 34, section 305. Listen, all ye free-trade Democrats, who do not believe in compensatory duties, listen and see whether or not when the Angora goat is gored you stand up to your party principles for one single minute:

Hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all hair on the skin of such animals, 15 per cent ad valorem.

They raise Angora goats in Texas. Do you get onto that, my sheep-growing friends in the cooler climate? But listen when you complain of compensatory duties:

Tops, made from the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 20 per cent ad valorem.

That is compensatory-

Yarn, made of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Cloth and all manufactures of every description made by any process, wholly or in chief value of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Observe how they piled it up. There must be labor to be protected down in Texas when it comes to the hair of the Angora goat. But we do not stop there:

Plushes, velvets, and all other pile fabrics, cut or uncut, woven or knit, whether or not the pile covers the entire surface, made wholly or partly of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, or other animal, and articles made wholly or in chief value of such plushes, velvets, or pile fabrics, 45 per cent ad valorem.

A total of 145 per cent on the dear little Angora goat of Texas! But the gentleman complains about "compensatory duties" when we try to protect the sheep of the United States and the industries engaged in fabricating the wool.

My friend speaks of the Underwood tariff law as a beneficent law. We will not go into lengthy details, for I have not the time, but take the single item of condensed milk, which Europe is crying for now-condensed milk for women and babies and of war-stricken Europe-and let us see how they treat condensed milk. We make a great deal of that in the Northern States. It is on the Underwood free list; manufactured abroad, it is brought into the United States free. How does the American manufacturer and producer of condensed milk stand in competition with that freely admitted condensed milk from foreign countries? He must pay a duty on the sugar that goes into the condensed milk. That is a Democratic sugar duty? He must pay a duty on the tin that goes into the cans that contain the condensed milk, and he must pay a duty on the label that is wrapped around the condensed milk. And yet Democrats like the gentleman from North Carolina contend that we can manufacture condensed milk, pay the duties on the raw material, and compete with the article that comes in free.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I can not yield, for I have not the time.

Now, take the article of haircloth. We have a duty in the Underwood bill on haircloth of 15 per cent on the finished cloth. The American manufacturer, who buys the raw material, must pay 25 per cent on the yarn that he brings here to manufacture into haircloth; 25 per cent against the raw material and 15 per cent against the finished product. Think of it.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] who would not stand for an interruption as to his tariff data, and we can not contradict him now because his speech does not appear in the legond this morning, stated that the Payne law contained duties higher on the average than the Dingley law; at least I so understood him. We tried to circumvent that statement yesterday; we tried to get it into his remarks that he was wrong; but the gentleman would not yield. I want to say now that the commercial statistics issued by the Democratic Secretary of Commerce will give the gentleman from Illinois the correct information, which is that the average ad valorem duties paid under the Dingley law were 23.88 per cent and under the Payne law the average ad valorem duties were 18.54 per cent. So the Payne law duties were much lower-were 5 per cent ad valorem lower, in fact—than the duties in the Dingley law.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman proposes to tax people 8 per cent on all profits above 8 per cent and a net profit of $5,000 a year, and he states frankly to the House that this is to be borne by a certain class of people. In a colloquy on the day before his speech of yesterday the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin]—and I give him credit for his statement—denied that he had said, as was published, that nearly all of this burden was to be levied upon the people who lived north of Mason and Dixon's line. I say the gentleman denied he made that statement, and yet in the RECORD it appears that he admitted that these taxes were to be levied almost entirely upon the people in the North. I am not trying to raise any sectional question, but go to your records-I have not the time now—and make a comparison of the taxes paid by four great Northern States—New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Illinois-and compare them with the entire taxes, and you will observe that four States in this Union pay the bulk of all of the income and special corporation taxes that this body has levied upon them.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Some one has informed me-I had my attention distracted for the moment-that the gentleman has just made the statement that I said that these taxes would be paid north of Mason and Dixon line.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said that the gentleman de-nied that he used the words "Mason and Dixon line," but admitted in the RECORD that most of these taxes were to go upon northern industries.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not say that. I said most of the taxes would be collected probably in the Northern States, and ninetenths of the appropriations for which these taxes are levied would go to the Northern States, States like the gentleman's-Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New York. I said I made no complaint about that, because it was natural; they had the better facilities for building ships and making munitions. I would like to have that explanation go into the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman made substantially that statement about the shipbuilding in Pennsylvania on Monday, but on Saturday the gentleman did say that most of these taxes were to be imposed upon the North. think the gentleman said, but it appears in the RECORD of Saturday, I think, in a controversy with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Norton], that most of these taxes—90 per cent of them-were to be levied upon the North.

Mr. KITCHIN. I never said anything of the kind. Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. It is true, whether he said it or not, is it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is true. Mr. GARDNER. Then what is the use of arguing about it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only point is, that the gentleman from North Carolina avoids the use of the words "Mason and Dixon line."

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I never said the taxes would come from the North; I said the appropriations would go there, and I say it now, and they should go there-you have the facilities for building ships and manufacturing munitions. I said, for instance, take the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., in the city of Boston. That will get more of these appropriations for which this tax is levied than the entire South and 15 Western States. I am not complaining about it,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say to the gentleman now, quoting from the speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] at the last session of Congress, speaking of the former year, that last year Illinois paid of the corporation tax $5,579,551; New York, $14,941,893; Pennsylvania, $6,792,030. The three States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois paid $27,313,474, while the 48 States and Territories of the United States paid $56,000,000. Of the income tax Illinois paid in that year, in round figures, $5,000,000; New York, $30,000,000; Pennsylvania, $6,000,000. These three States paid $41,000,000 of the individual income tax of $67,000,000. So the statement is true that these Northern States will pay the bulk of this tax. As to the income tax, only 330,000 people pay directly. That is about one-third of 1 per cent of our population.

Now, I wish to clear up this matter for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], because I would do him no injustice and have no thought of raising a sectional question; but in the debate on Saturday, January 27, 1917, as will be found on page 2130 of the Recorp, I find the following colloquy:

Mr. Norton. Will the gentleman yield? Where does the gentleman think the tax will fall—south of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. Kitchin. I think most, or the greater part, will be levied north of Mason and Dixon's line. All these fellows who live in States that will pay a large part of this tax can get rid of the location argument by removing down to my town of Scotland Neck and pay the tax from there.

Mr. KITCHIN. They can.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman did say what I said he said, that this tax would be levied upon the Northern States; and the only alternative the gentleman has is that we shall raze our industries, that we shall stop the wheels of progress, that we shall say to the men of capital, "Cut down your enterprises"; that we shall say to the man who wants to double his plant, "Do not do it, but move to Scotland Neck; there you can live in comfort and peace." But, Mr. Chairman, I feel there is a spirit of progress in this country that will not consent to forever bask in the sunshine of the beautiful, the sylvan environment of Scotland Neck.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to think he is imposing this tax upon the rich. That statement has been made time and again; it is the argument of the proletariat—"levy these deficiency taxes against the rich; do not let the rich escape." I am going to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, and I wish I had three or four minutes more in which to do it, whether he thinks the poor will not participate in this 8 per cent tax? I ask him whether the poor did not participate in the payment of the income tax, whether the widow who had been left a little estate by her husband and who had given some of it to charity was not obliged to withdraw her charitable contributions because of the payment of this income tax? I want to ask whether there is a single Member upon the Democratic side of the House who has not silently and involuntarily protested against the deduction from his salary of the 1 per cent, followed by the 2 per cent tax imposed upon him by this kind of revenue legislation? I want to know if they have not inwardly protested against the payment of this tax?

But that is a small matter. I have here before me a statement regarding certain investments made in various parts of the United States—savings funds, the savings of men, women, and children who deposit $300 a year and not more. They are the domestics, they are the workmen, they are the people in the mills, they are the thrifty women who are laying by the cigar money of their husbands. One of these savings institutions has $150,000,000 on deposit.

I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether he knows that this $150,000,000 of poor men's savings is invested in railroad enterprises, in municipal improvements, in every State of this Union where loans and mortgages are supposed to be safe? The gentleman should be informed that his 8 per cent tax will not be levied on the railroads, corporations, partnerships, and otherwise, so much as it will be upon the savings invested in them. The poor as well as the rich will have to pay in order to meet the deficiency which has been brought about by this Democratic administration. Ask where the money of these poor people has gone? To the Beech Creek Extension Co., to the Chicago & Erie Railroad Co., to the Winston-Salem Southbound Railroad, to the Pennsylvania Steel Co., to a thousand and one others; and that brings me to another point. Do you really think you are confining your 8 per cent tax to the rich? Do you consider that you are taking it from the poor men who share in the profits of their employers? From the United States Steel Corporation down, many workmen are now owners of the stocks and bonds of the companies by which they are employed. These are the men who are going to pay your tax. I have not the time to deal further with the speech of the gentleman from North Carolina; I can only regret it has not been published. The people should have a chance to read that speech. Had they done so they would probably have said something that Congress would have listened to.

Even with such meager newspaper reports as have gone out about this new and unfair tax there has been a rising protest. The mail this morning and the telegraph wires are bearing the information from home, from the men who are to be affected, from the business men who are beginning to understand what this tax means. They want to be heard—— The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. this tax means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that speech had been duly acclaimed even Scotland Neck would know what this revenue bill means; that it bears upon the poor as well as the rich. Oh, if the great business world had been informed before this vote there would have been such an avalanche of protests to this House that even the Democratic Party could not resist them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire recognition?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] to make a state-

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to print under the rule an argument by the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Springfield, Mass., protesting against this bill as applying to mutual life insurance companies.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dickinson]. [Applause.]
Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am a member, has presented to the House the pending revenue bill. This revenue legislation is deemed neces-sary because of the need of funds to help meet the extraordinary large appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments and fortifications.

I have received numerous telegrams and letters from various sections of the country, none so far from the district which I have the honor to represent, protesting against this proposed revenue measure, levying taxes upon excess profits, on the ground that it is confiscatory and unjust to certain business interests that will be subject to the payment of these taxes.

Under "Title II, excess-profits tax" there is placed a tax of 8 per cent on the net profits of corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, insurance companies, and partnerships, which are in excess of $5,000 and in excess of an amount equivalent to 8 per cent of the actual capital investment. before the tax attaches there is a flat deduction of $5,000 from the total net profits and a further deduction of 8 per cent on the actual capital investment. I am satisfied that upon a fair and full investigation of the provisions of the bill it will not appear as harsh as on first impression to those who fear that they will be unduly burdened by the provisions thereof.

The same kind of arguments and objections were made against the enactment of the income tax. The people of the United States favored the income tax, and they amended the Constitution of the United States and compelled action by Congress to the end that those having large incomes should bear a fair share of the burdens of Government.

All taxes are confiscatory. It is an appropriation by the Federal Government, State, county, and other municipal governments, of sufficient taxes from the earnings of individuals, corporations, and associations to bear the expenses of government, which is necessary and exists wherever there is civilization and government, and no good citizen should object to contributing his fair share as a contribution exacted for the purposes needed to keep up the many affairs of government, which throws its protecting arm around the life and property of every citizen and business in the country. Nobody wants to pay taxes, and everybody wants to shift the burden onto others.

In these abnormal times, resulting from war conditions that affect the entire business world and which has put in fear the civilization of every country, enormous war profits are being made principally by large concerns doing enormous business. These concerns should pay a large share of these excess profit When these war conditions shall pass away and war profits shall cease and profits generally become more normal, then the amounts to be paid by many business concerns will lessen and in some instances disappear, and possibly the necessity for the levy and collection of such taxes upon excess profits may no longer exist. In any event, when such excess profits disappear the taxes will not be collected.

I know that the business world was more or less startled by the first impression of this proposed measure as given out by the press, and surface impressions were had regarding its effect and burden which ought to disappear upon a fair study and consideration of this revenue measure.

Let us illustrate the application of this measure as applied, say, to a corporation of $100,000 capital which yields an annual net profit of $20,000, after deducting all expenses of every character, payments for material and labor, rents, salaries, taxes, and so forth. Fortunate, indeed, is the concern of that amount of capital that earns $20,000 net profits after deducting all these expenses that come out before you have a net profit. Prices are too large, the exactions for the price of their productions are too great, that enable a concern to obtain so large net profits, But let us see how much that corporation would have to pay under this measure.

After deducting expenses of every kind and character, then deduct a flat exemption of $5,000, which leaves $15,000; then deduct 8 per cent of the $100,000, actual capital invested, and it leaves $7,000 upon which to levy the 8 per cent tax proposed in this revenue bill—8 per cent of the remaining $7,000 would be $560, or 8 per cent of the excess profits after all deductions, the tax to be paid under this measure, leaving 92 per cent of excess profits, to be added to the other deductions as exemptions, to be retained by the corporations or partnership.

Suppose that the net profits were $15,000. Make the first deduction of $5,000 and then 8 per cent of the $100,000, being $8,000, and it would leave just $2,000 upon which to levy the 8 per cent tax, or just $160 to be paid.

Suppose that the $100,000 capital stock, capital actually invested, earns only $10,000 net profits, and that is a magnificent return, after paying all expenses of every kind and character. Deduct now the $5,000 from the $10,000 profits, and then deduct the 8 per cent of the $100,000 capital stock, which would in this case mean a deduction of $13,000, as in the other illustrations, and there would be nothing left upon which to levy this 8 per cent tax

Would not this concern, which gets only $10,000 net profits and pays no tax, be glad to have $15,000 instead of $10,000 annual net profits, out of which to pay $160 tax? Would it not be more than glad to have $20,000 annual profits out of which to pay $560 tax?

Greedy and avaricious, indeed, is the concern exacting such enormous contributions from the general public by the sale of its high-priced productions and which then cries aloud against the confiscation of a reasonable amount to pay the enormous burdens of government; that seeks under extraordinary conditions to make preparations for the protection of those who get by reason of these conditions enormous profits.

I am satisfied that the people of this country will approve this just measure, which takes a reasonable contribution from the enormous profits to meet the expenses of extraordinary condi-When these war clouds shall pass and peace shall come to all the world and normal conditions shall result, as hoped for by the masses in every country, then the necessity for this legislation with changed conditions may no longer exist.

Here in these abnormal times, with conditions causing enormous appropriations, voted for by the Republican minority with singular unanimity whenever an appropriation bill is presented for the purpose of meeting preparedness and for amendments seeking to further enlarge the appropriations when revenue measures are proposed by the Democratic majority to raise the moneys to meet these increased appropriations, made possible by their votes, they cry out against the reasonable methods proposed to meet these expenditures, and they hark back to the high-protective tariff system that would shift the burden upon the consuming public and proclaim to Congress and to the country that the Payne-Aldrich tariff law would meet the situation and should be reenacted to meet these conditions, when they know that it is impossible for a period of four years at least to reenact the Payne-Aldrich tariff law or any similar measure. In what an anomalous position are they before the country when they vote for large appropriations. Day before yesterday, when the fortifications appropriation bill was up for passage, with increases far above former fortifications bills by many millions, there were 64 votes cast against the bill, of whom there were only half a dozen Republicans. Would it not be far more consistent if, by their opposition they are enabled to defeat revenue measures necessary to supply the money to meet the increased appropriations, they would vote against those increased appropriations and then avoid the necessity for new revenue measures and cease crying out against the extravagance of the Democratic Party when the increases are caused by their

They continuously vote for more battleships, more fortifications, larger armies, and larger navies, and then proclaim to the world that those who reap the benefits shall be relieved of taxation; that those who get the greatest benefits from the Govern-ment, which throws its protecting arm about them and their property, shall pay nothing.

Why do you cry out against Democratic extravagance when you seek to make the appropriations larger than the Democratic majority is willing to go? Why do you urge increases upon every appropriation bill against the opposition of the Democratic Why do you hark back to the Payne-Aldrich tariff measure when you know that the highest amount paid by it was $333,000,000? How far would that go in payment of annual appropriations of one and a half billion dollars, or nearly five times as much as the revenue obtainable under such measure? Would you reject this revenue bill and then levy a tax upon coffee and tea and wool and an increased amount upon sugarthese things which go into the daily life of the consuming public? Would you make the burdens of living harder still under abnormal conditions in order to save a reasonable tax being levied upon enormous profits?
